The Government has done a good thing by prohibiting all liquor being brought to Alaska; or if it is brought for medicinal purposes, it is only by especial permit. If I am correctly informed, the regulations in this respect are more strict in regard to Alaska than any other part of the United States. You scarcely ever hear of any crime or disturbance among the Indians of this Territory. —Christian Worker.

COST OF WAR AND DRINK.

From an essay furnished by David A. Wells to the Cobden Club, England, upon the expenses, income and taxes of the United States, we learn that the whole cost of the war of the rebellion, North and South, from 1861 to 1866, is estimated as follows: Lives, 1,000,000; property destroyed, waste, etc., $9,000,000,000. The expenditures of the United States from June, 1861, to July, 1866, $5,792,257,000. Of this the actual war expenses were about $5,342,237,000. The expenses of States, counties, cities and towns in the Northern States, not represented by funded debt, have been estimated at $500,000,000. The increase of State debts on the war account was $123,000,000. The increase of city, town, and county debt is estimated at $200,000,000; the total war expenses of the loyal States and National Government, $6,165,537,000. The estimated direct expenses of the Confederate States on account of the war were $2,000,000,000. Aggregated expenses of the war North and South, $8,195,237,000. The total receipts from all sources during the second year of the war were less than $42,000,000. The expenditures were $60,000,000 per month, at the rate of $700,000,000 per annum. * * The annual cost of intoxicating drink in the United States, at Dr. Young's estimate of $600,000,000 a year, in ten years would amount to the total war expenses of the loyal States and the National Government. Our drink bill in thirteen years would amount to more than the aggregate war expenses of both the North and the South. Every fifteen years we expend more for strong drinks than the value of all the property wasted and destroyed during the five years of the war. And every year it costs our people over one million of dollars more for strong drinks than the expenses during the war, of all the States, counties, cities and towns in the Northern States not represented by funded debt.

Children's Corner

Mother's Kiss.

A kiss when I wake in the morning,
A kiss when I go to bed,
A kiss when I burn my fingers,
A kiss when I bump my head

A kiss when my bath is quite over,
A kiss when my bath begins;
My mother is full of kisses—
As full as a cushion of pins.

A kiss when I play with my rattle,
A kiss when I pull her hair;
She covered me over with kisses
The day I fell down the stair.

Children's Centennial Letter.

"Wake up, boys, wake up! Here we are in Washington. Get ready and we shall have time to see the Capitol. Girls too." At that summons you would not lose any time. So here we go up from the depot, up a gentle rise of ground toward its summit, where the renowned Capitol stands. An end of one wing shows fifty-one windows across it and three in height. It seemed too low. We go in front. The first step was in length forty-two of my common walking-paces, and there were forty-six steps, the top one being 22 paces long. Then a double row of pillars, twenty in all. The same style at the other wing, and in the center is the main building with its steps and pillars and sculptured figures, and on its top the splendid cupola.

But as we can't get in yet, we walk in front and find it 320 common walking paces. In front and around the lawn, trees and walks give an aspect of pleasing repose as Old Sol rises and smiles upon us. A cannon is fired to tell the hour and the Capitol is now opened for visitors. We mount the stairs. The figures on our right represent Columbus and an Indian girl, and on our left civilized man and an Indian woman and child. We enter the rotunda and look up 184 feet, where fine paintings meet our eyes, but we look first at those eight around us, representing historical events. We go into the old House of Representatives and see statuary of Ethan Allen, Kosciusko, at whose fall "Freedom shrieked" for the loss of Polish freedom; the statue, also, of Lincoln, at whose murder civilized man stood aghast and freedom swooned, but recovering, lifted high her hand and struck the murderers to the earth. Henceforth the song of liberty in our land has its mournful cadences for her martyr, but it is the song in which every man may now rejoice with gratitude to the Supreme Ruler of human affairs, that Americans can no longer be reproached with holding as property men born on the same soil and breathing the same air.

But here is a clock 105 years old, which struck the hour of our country's independence in the ears of the heroic signers. "Aye," says our guide, "and it keeps good time yet." Well, we must get along a little faster. Paintings, and sculpture, and castings are all interesting, but we must see the Senate Chamber with its gallery and seats. But it has no side windows and is lighted only from above. Oh, if that were a correct emblem of the wisdom of its members, how happy would our country be! But I was rather disappointed in its appearance and before you have become gray, I guess there will be a more airy and cheerful looking apartment in which the laws of our country shall receive their finishing touches. The British House of Lords beats it completely. And why should it? Are not our Senators as good as their Lords?

We were fortunate in getting into the old Senate chamber, now used by the Supreme Court, which has become already a shrine for the lovers of freedom. It seemed small and not airy enough. Fancy it like a quarter of an orange, one cut for the floor and the other for the chair and gallery, and the ceiling rounded downwards. But "here," says our guide, "is where Sumner's chair was." Solemnly we stood and then sat down in one on the spot. And, "yonder is where [Bully] Brooks sat," as he pointed over and in rear. Alas, that the page of history must record such an atrocity as this, having occurred in our country. Dare we hope that no more such acts shall happen? But, my boys, who of you would not prefer to be a Sumner or a Lincoln, to the misguided criminals who assailed them? Whatever may be your future station in life, never forget that your first duty is to obtain and retain self-control. Without this, in which the remembrance of our responsibility for all the deeds done in the body, whether good or bad, aids us, zeal, even in a good cause, loses half its value, or in many cases, becomes a positive injury.

Let us look at this picture, "Penn and the Indians." What an example of self-control he was, and how much he accomplished. Far better are the victories of peace than of war. The time will come when the song shall be realized, "Neither shall they learn war any more."

What a long hall! 742 feet—Yes. Now we go into the judge's robing room, and see some of the identical old furniture saved from destruction in 1812, when the Britishers became incendiaries. But Johnny Bull has been a pretty good fellow lately, and has made up friends with us, so we shall not say much about these old stories, only that this painting of Perry's Victory on Lake Erie reminds us that we gave him a whipping there. But let us hereafter settle questions by arbitration. A good example to the world has been set by the United States and Great Britain in that respect.

Now let us go right up to the top. We wind round and round. Tired? Rather; but didn't our fourscore and four friend go up there and write a love letter to his wife? Oh, yes. Let us get to the very top. Oh what a splendid view. The streets centering upon the Capitol. Yonder is the Monument and the Smithsonian Institute and the Potomac river; and, oh! all around, how beautiful it is, so calm and hazey! Perhaps it might be more charming if it were bright and clear, but we are very well satisfied, and as we can breakfast before the train starts, let us go for it.

Meantime we may try to remember that we have paintings representing these great events:

Columbus landed in 1492.

De Soto discovered the Mississippi river in 1541.

The Pilgrims embarked on the 21st of July, 1620.

Cornwallis surrendered, October, 1781.

Washington resigned his commission to Congress on the 23d of Dec., 1783.

Of course everybody knows what these men in this picture did in Philadelphia, July 4th, 1776.

Here we are down again in the rotunda. Stop right in the center. Stamp with your foot on that spot. What a sound! but how different if we stamp a foot or two from it. And so let us always be careful to do precisely what is required to produce the right effect. We must strike a nail on the head when we want to drive it straight. So with all duty. Drive right at it, and do not bend it so as to make it useless.

But time is up and again we spin along the rail, "homeward bound."

T. H.

Little Kindnesses.

Brothers, sisters, do you ever try the effect which little acts of kindness produce upon that charmed circle which we call home? We love to receive little favors ourselves, and how pleasant the reception of them makes the circle. To draw up the arm chair and get the slippers for father; to watch if any little service can be rendered to mother; to help brother; even to leave an exciting game of ball, to show your sister how to get over a hard place in her lessons—how pleasant it makes home!

A little boy has a hard task given him at school, and his teacher asks him if he thinks he can get it; for a moment the little fellow hangs down his head, but the next he looks brightly up.

"I can get my sister to help me," he says. That is right, sister; help your brother, and you are binding a tie around his heart that may save him in many an hour of dark temptation.

"I don't know how to do this sum; but brother will show me," says another one.

"Sister, I've dropped a stitch in my knitting; I tried to pick it up, but it has run down, and I can't fix it."

The little girl's face is flushed, and she watches her sister with a nervous anxiety, while she replaces the naughty stitch.

"O, I am so glad!" she says as she receives it again from the hands of her sister, all nicely arranged. "You are a good girl, Mary."

"Bring it to me sooner next time, and then it won't be so bad," said the gentle voice of Mary. The little one bounds away with a light heart to finish her task.

If Mary had not helped her she would have lost her walk in the garden. Surely it is better to do as Mary did, than to say, "O, go away, and don't trouble me;" or to scold the little ones all the time you are performing the little favor.

Brothers, sisters, love one another,—bear with one another. If one offend, forgive and love him still; and whatsoever may be the fault of others, we must remember that in the sight of God, we have others as great, and perhaps greater than theirs.—Ex.

How Many Apples did Adam and Eve Eat?

Some say Eve 8 and Adam 2, a total of 10 only. Now we figure the thing out far differently. Eve 8 and Adam 8 also. Total 16.—Boston Journal. We think the above figures are entirely wrong. If Eve 8 and Adam 82, certainly the total will be 90. Scientific men, however, on the strength of the theory that the antediluvians were a race of giants, and consequently great eaters, reason something like this: Eve 81st, and Adam 82. Total 163.—Gloucester Advertiser. Wrong again; what could be clearer than if Eve 8 1, and Adam 8-1-2, the total was 893?—Boston Journal. I believe the following to be the true solution: Eve 8-1-4 Adam, Adam 8-1-2-4 Eve. Total 8938.—Veritas.

Still another calculation is as follows: If Eve 8-1-4 Adam; Adam 8-1-2-4-2 oblige Eve, total 82,056. We think, however, this not to be a sufficient quantity, for though we admit that Eve 8-1-4 Adam; Adam if he 8-0-8-1-2 4-2 keep Eve company, total 8,082,056.—New York Mail.

Answer to Enigma.

Belpre, O., Dec. 4, 1876.

Editor Cynosure:—Here is the answer to enigma in Cynosure of Nov. 30, 1876.

My 1, 6 and 5 is cat, a domestic animal.

My 13, 2, 6 and 7 is loan, means to lend.

My 10, 6, 12, 13, 14 and 4 is Naples, a city in Italy.

My 9 and 3 is in, a preposition.

My 1, 11, 5, 8, 2 and 7 is cotton, a kind of goods.

My whole is Constantinople, a city in Europe.

I believe my father has taken the Cynosure for seven or eight years

W. T. S. Smith.

Our young friend E. S. Caylor, of West Elkton, O., also sends the correct answer, with the following, which is good for our little reformers:

I am composed of eleven letters:

My 11, 6 and 3 is a domestic animal.

My 5, 6, 7, 8, 7, 10 and 11 is a name of a society.

My 1, 2, and 3 is the name of an insect.

My 11, 8, 3, 3, 8 and 2 is a name of a plant.

My 4 and 9 is a preposition.

My 11, 8, 1 and 3 is some thing to wear.

My 5, 6 and 3 is something that lies before the door.

My whole is a compound word Masons dislike.

If you wish for success in life, make perseverance your bosom friend, experience your wise counselor, caution your elder brother, and hope your guardian genius. With these you can hardly fail.

—See Publisher's Department, 16th page.

—The American vote in Pennsylvania is thus reported by counties:

Allegheny, 8; Armstrong, 1; Bradford, 22; Butler, 2; Cambria, 1; Crawford, 7; Franklin, 5; Indiana, 1; Jefferson, 2; Lehigh, 2; Mc Kean, 1; Mercer, 15; Susquehanna, 6; Venango, 7; Wyoming, 1; York, 1.

—Tilden's vote came from States and localities having 2,325,273 white male adult population, of which number 319,313, or 16.6 per cent. were unable to read or write. Hayes drew his vote from a population of which 6.6 per cent. only labored under this difficulty. This is a difference worth marking down.

—The report of the popular vote of 27 States is thus reported, the American vote being Masonically complimented as "scattering:" In the 27 States from which official returns have been received Tilden received 3,644,502 votes; Hayes, 3,633, 404; Cooper, 67,197; Smith, 6,679; Scattering, 3,197.

From all Along the Line.

The Massachusetts Woman Suffrage State Committee unanimously adopted the following:

The Woman Suffrage State Committee congratulates the suffragists of Massachusetts upon more than twelve thousand votes cast for the Woman Suffrage candidates for State officers. This number of votes, in any ordinary year, would decide the result of the State election. They were given in spite of the overwhelming gravitation of the Presidential election. Next year we shall hold the balance of power in Massachusetts. Let us go on to complete our organization and keep up our woman suffrage political movement. Our object is the formation of a reform party of men and women, with woman suffrage in caucus and town meeting.

Lucy Stone,
Chairman Woman Suffrage State Committee.
Thomas J. Lothorp, Secretary.

W. Hamlyn, West Bend, Wis., writes:

"The number of tickets voted in the town of Trenton is very small. There are only four. It is hard work to roll a stone up-hill, but by the grace of God I hope we shall get at the top by and by."

A. C. Pratt, Winfield, Iowa, writes:

"If the matter had been properly brought before the people there might have been fifteen or twenty votes polled for Walker and Kirkpatrick in Winfield, Ia., instead of four."

Stephen Wright, Glens Falls, N. Y., writes:

"Are either Tilden or Hendricks a Mason or Odd-fellow?"

J. D. Gallup, Genoa, Ottawa Co., O. writes:

"There were but two votes polled in Ottawa county for the American party ticket. There are only two of us in this township, and I guess in the county, who dare to speak out and work in the good cause. We do that boldly and without fear. We treat all alike both Jew and Gentile, bond and free."

Theo. Osgood, Bedford, Calhoun county, Michigan, writes:

"There were two votes cast for Walker and Kirkpatrick in this township, the only ones in the county. It is a rabid Democratic county controlled by secrecy from the grange down to Masonry."

P. Hurless, Polo, Ogle county, Ill., writes:

"Our cause still has hosts of friends in this county, and we must have our strength better economized."

N. Ames, Rushford, N. Y., writes:

"Two votes were cast for the American party in our town, although the great majority of the voters say they are Anti-masons. The trouble is our young men and middle-aged men are not informed on this subject."

A. Shambaugh, Bear, Wis., writes:

"The political excitement ran so high in this town that none of the Democrats would pair off with the Republicans, and the Republicans would not risk their votes, in consequence of which the American ticket got but one (my) vote."

J. D. Allen, Allentown, Ohio, writes:

"I proposed to an anti-secret Democrat to pair off with him and vote the American ticket. He freely accepted my proposal. So the American candidates got two votes in German township of Allen county. I am of the opinion those two seeds cast into the soil will influence others in the next spring elections to do the same. Grangers are playing out in this section."

E. S. Chalfant, York, Pa., writes:

"I see by the official returns of Pennsylvania that our ticket got eighty-three votes in the State."

A. J. Sheridan, Grant City, Worth county, Mo., writes:

"One of our county papers in giving the returns of the election said that there were no American votes by stating for Walker and Kirkpatrick 00 when there were twenty-three. Nearly all the Anti-masons are going to withdraw their support from it."

E. G. Paine, Wasioja, Dodge Co., Minn., writes:

"We are going to call a convention at holiday time to organize a county Christian Association."

C. W. Kohr, Winfield, O., writes:

"At the late election there were three votes cast for Walker and Kirkpatrick in this (Dover) township, Tuscarawas county, Ohio. We were ridiculed for voting this ticket but it is a pleasure to bear ridicule for the cause of right. We are censured more for voting against secret societies than any other evils embodied in the platform."

A. O. Howell, Champaign City, Ill., writes:

"I had hoped to report twenty-five or fifty votes but the policy (?) of the New York Witness, and father Preston and others, prevailed. Nearly every one of our friends said to me that they 'admired our principles', and 'the only party that dared to avow their principles,' etc., etc. But when it came to election day the contest was so close that they feared Tilden would be elected and all but myself and one other voted for Hayes, assuring me that four years hence, they would all vote with us. Election judges too, that are Masons have a very natural way of calling our votes illegal, and throwing them out. Louisiana and the South generally are not the only places where the sacred ballot box is tampered with."

Henry Amadon, Waupun, Wis., reports eight votes for Walker and Kirkpatrick and writes:

"So we have sowed a little good seed in good ground and have become a 'respectable laughing-stock,' and I enjoy the shame very much."

Luther Wood, Newark, Mich., sends us the following extract from the Lansing Republican:

"THE AMERICAN PARTY.

This noble name was tarnished by the Know-nothings, and has never been used as a party designation since 1860, until the present year. In the township of Locke our correspondent informs us that an American party ticket was cast, bearing the name of James B. Walker, of Illidois, for President and Donald Kirkpatrick, of New York, for Vice-president, with eleven electors, not one of whom is generally known; and eight of them are designated by initials, so that the vote would count for nothing anyway. The Adrian Times says that in Lenawee county six of these ballots were cast. The returns thus far received by the Secretary of State show that the aggregate vote of this American party in sixty-eight counties amounted to seventy-two. The aim of this organization is to put down all secret societies, but it was never heard of in Lansing, where, (if anywhere) the evil of secret societies ought to be felt, as they are quite strong."

Mr. Wood says he did not receive the American party tickets until November 19th. All tickets for Michigan, except special orders, were sent from this office three weeks before election, and the special orders in ample time for use. Benj. Ulsh received a large package of tickets just four weeks from the time we sent them. We would like to have the post-masters through whose hands they passed explain why they were delayed.

Isaac Crane, Peru, Miami Co. Ind., writes:

"The vote of this county for Walker was two. One of them was the vote of your humble servant, making the second time that I have voted all alone in Washington township. First to free the slave, and now for freedom of speech and press, to keep away owls and bats."

Benj. Ulsh, Silver Lake, Ind., writes:

"There were seven Walker and Kirkpatrick tickets voted in this place. Our Sunday-school superintendent and one other good brother said Benj. Ulsh committed a sin in voting that ticket which can never be forgiven him. In the afternoon a doctor from Silver Lake came to the place of voting and one of our neighbors said: 'Doctor, if Benj. Ulsh gets sick and you doctor him, I want you to give him medicine to kill him.' It seems everywhere where men exercised the right of free American citizens they met with opposition. But Paul says, 'I have fought a good fight,' etc. Thank the Lord, our Captain has never lost a battle; neither will he till the 'kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ.' Rev. xi. 15."

John Bell, Warsaw, Pa., writes:

"A good many were opposed to secret societies, but the Republicans were afraid if they voted with me the Democrats would get into power, and the Democrats were afraid their party would get behind. What a pity that men vote so much for party and so little for principle."

Rev. Alfred Osgood, Lostant, Ill., writes:

"We polled eight votes for Walker and Kirkpatrick. Many approved of our platform and would have voted our ticket but for fear of Tilden. I tell them to fear God and do right; the Lord will take care of the rest."

Freemasonry Weighed in the Balance AND Found Wanting.

In the course of my Public expositions of the Masonic degrees the question is frequently asked WHY, WHEN, AND HOW, I renounced Freemasonry, and although, the answer is partly given in the Preface to this book, yet, I consider it important for various reasons that a brief statement of all the circumstances should be given here, and hence I invite the readers attention to the following DECLARATION.

I renounced Freemasonry first of all because, as a religious system, it entirely ignores and rejects Jesus Christ.

In all the rituals of Ancient Craft Masonry, in its prescribed forms of prayer, whether at opening or closing the Lodge or working the Degrees the name of Jesus Christ is not once mentioned. Masonry rejects him as the son of God, rejects him as the only Saviour, as the only mediator between God and Man and hence it is absolutely unmasonic for any candidate at initiation to profess faith in Jesus Christ, or even for a minister in the Lodge room to offer prayer in his name. Compare Webb's Monitor, pages 73, 120, Mackey's Ritualist, pages 271, 348, 349, and Sickel's Monitior, Part II, pages 5, 50 with John 14, 1, I Tim 2, 5. Heb. 8, 6. John 10. 1-7. 1 Cor. 3. 11. John 14. 6-14.

2nd. I renounced Freemasonry because, to support its anti-christian delusion and vain pretensions, it garbles and misquotes the word of God; it falsifies the sacred record; expunging the name of Christ from all its Scripture quotations; it reduces the Holy Bible below the level of the Square and Compass and it places its "Ancient Charges," the edicts of its Grand Lodges, and its traditionary "landmarks" higher, above and beyond, all the laws of heaven and all the enactments of civil goverment.

See pages, 15, 19, also Mackey's Ritualist, pages, 271, 348-9 Webb's Monitor pages 73 and 120.

3d. I renounced Freemasonry because, its oaths and obligations are illegal and barbarous and because a strict adherence to their requirements would necessarily lead to crimes of the most revolting and abominable nature.

The Candidate in each degree swears away his own life, binding himself to suffer death in a most inhuman manner.

The father may be called upon to slay his son or the son his father, for every Master Mason is sworn to conform to and abide by as well as maintain and support the laws of his lodge, and the constitution, laws and edicts of his Grand Lodge, whether right or wrong.

See page, 99, also Webb's Monitor pages 196, 240, with P. G. M. Morris notes &c.

4th. I renounced Freemasonry because I found that by a strict adherence to the requirements of even the First or Entered Apprentice, Obligation it became absolutely necessary for me to practise falsehood and deceit towards even the members of my own family, my wife included, whenever the subject of Freemasonry was discussed, or when questioned as to its so called secrets, i e. its preparation, mode of initiation or other secret workings. See page 35.

5th. I renounced Freemasonry because it is one of the most gigantic swindles that the world ever saw. To support this formidable system of deceit, falsehood and fraud, it has established a regular chain of oaths, obligations and death penalties the like of which, for barbarity and sin, has never been surpassed in any age or nation.

6th. I renounced Freemasonry because of its peculiar similarity to Romanism.

Romanism is an absolute despotism controlled and governed by the Pope, a foreign ex-King. Freemasonry is also an absolute despotism imported from a London grog shop during British rule in this Country.

Romanism boasts of and claims great antiquity. Freemasonry also claims a vast antiquity as the necessary foundation of its universality and unchangeability.

Romanism is partly based on tradition. Freemasonry is entirely so

Romanism does not fully recognize Jesus Christ as the only mediator between God and man. Freemasonry rejects Christ alltogether.

Romanism teaches and practises prayers for the dead. Freemasonry prays for the dead.

Romanism denies the right of private judgment. Freemasonry teaches that every mason must yield private judgment.

Romanism cannot engage in any religious act or ceremony without an Altar, and lighted Candles Neither can Freemasonry.

Romanism teaches the use of images. So does Freemasonry.

Romanism teaches the infalibility of it's head; Freemasonry ditto.

Romanism is a real secret organization in its priesthood and Jesuitical order.

Freemasonry is but a pretended Secret Institution, though it boasts of profound Secrecy.

Romanism claims divine origin; Freemasonry claims the same.

Romanism inculcates salvation by works; Freemasonry teaches that and that only.

Rome's best argument in every age and under every circumstance has been slander, persecution and massacre of all seceders from her communion.

Freemasonry, as everybody knows, is incapable of defense and hence must always resort to calumny, persecution, and even to death itself when considered safe to do so whenever a seceding Mason has courago enough to openly repudiate her boastfull claims or to defy her meaningless and silly anathemas.

Romanism is pretendedly based upon the Apostle Peter.

Freemasonry is pretendedly founded upon the Apostle John.

Romanism is the beast of Revelation.

Freemasonry is the image of the beast.

Romanism is the mystery of iniquity; Freemasonry a work of darkness.

The whole scope, aim, and object of freemasonry is deception.

The Knight Templars deceive the Royal Arch Masons. The Royal Arch Masons deceive the Most Excellent Master's. The Most Excellent Master deceive the Past Master's. The Past Masters deceive the Mark Masters. The Mark Master's deceive the Master Masons. The Master Masons deceive the Fellow Crafts. The Fellow Crafts deceive the Entered Apprentice's. And they al with one accord form Entered Apprentice up to Knight Templar or even higher up still through all the abominations of the Scottish Rite to Most Puissant Sovereign Grand Commander cajole and deceive the outside world.

And now how did I manage to disentangle myself from this ancient (?) and honorable (?) institution? How did I abandon this delectable system of hypocricy wickedness and sin?

I simply went into the lodge room of Keystone Lodge No. 639 meeting at 62 and 64 North Clark Street, Chicago, and, then and there, in the presence of the Worshipful Master, Warden's and brethren I denounced and renounced for ever the institution of Freemasonry, as a humbug and a fraud and openly declared my firm determination to publish its so-called secret workings to the world.

The proof of this is fully established by the following official document, having the seal of the lodge attached and which was served upon me by order of the Worshipful Master J. H. Dixon, on the 23d, of October, 1874, nearly five months after my open renunciation of Masonry as alleged in specification 2d, and after patiently waiting in the vain hope that I would repent of my contumacy and fall back again into the outstretched arms of the Ancient "hand-maid."

Further comment upon this document is unnecessary here. It speaks for itself and very conclusively proves the ludicrous and terrible shifts to which M. Pflaum & Co., were driven in their desperate efforts to swell the number of specifications and so render the "Charges" as Masonically formidable as possible.

CHARGES.

To the Worshipful Master, Wardens and Brethren of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, A. F. and A. Masons:—The undersigned, in the discharge of his official duty as set forth in Sec. 2, Art 1., Part 3d of the by-laws of our Grand Lodge, do hereby charge Bro. Edmond Ronayne, a member of said Keystone Lodge, with gross un-Masonic conduct, in this, to wit:

Specification I. That the said Bro. Edmond Ronayne on or about April 23d, A. D, 1873, in the city of Chicago did persuade and advise Bro. Wm. Aiken, then secretary of said lodge to-keep and withhold certain moneys belonging to said Lodge, with intent to cheat, wrong and defraud said Keystone Lodge.

Witnesses:—Bros. Pflaum Becker Lally and Aiken.

Specification II. That the said Brother Edmond Ronayne did on or about June 10th, A. D, 1874, in the room adjacent to said lodge-room of Keystone Lodge, attempt to discourage certain Fellow Crafts from advancing further in Masonry by denouncing the institution of Freemasonry as a d—d humbug and fraud, and other words of a similar character; also threatening to expose the workings of Masonry to the world.

Witnesses—Bros. Glover, Sittig, Spathold and David.

Specification III. That the said Bro. Edmond Ronayne did on or about August 20th, A. D, 1874, violate Sec. 4, Art. xiv., Part 2nd of the by-laws of our Grand Lodge. 1st, By wilfully exposing the character of his ballot; 2nd, by an attempt to interrupt the legitimate labors of said Keystone Lodge by casting a black ball against the advancement of a Fellow Craft, and afterward communicating the fact to others.

Witnesses—Cunningham and David.

Specification IV. That the said Bro. Edmond Ronayne did on or about Oct. 6th, A. D, 1874, threaten in profane language at said Hall of Keystone Lodge, to do bodily harm to Bro. Morris Pflaum, a Master Mason of said Lodge, also calling said brother a thief and swindler in open ledge.

Witnesses—Bro. Ekvall, Cronin, Pflaum, Prince and others.

All of which acts of the said Bro. Edmond Ronayne were in violation of his duties and obligation as a Master Mason and to the injury of his brethren as well as to the harmony and prosperity of the said Keystone Lodge and to the scandal and disgrace of the Masonic fraternity at large. Wherefore, it is demanded that the said Bro. Edmond Ronayne be put upon trial therefor, and dealt with according to Masonic law and usage.

Signed, OSCAR L. EKVALL, J. W. Keystone Lodge, No. 639, A. F. and A. Masons. Oct. 21*st, A. D.* 1874.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SECULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party.

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH:

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAPBOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the Lodge.

WHEATON COLLEGE.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT FOR THE WINTER TERM, BEGINNING JANUARY 4th, 1877.

Book-Keeping, Free Hand Drawing, Penmanship, Vocal Music and Lectures on Physiology, Hygiene and

ON COMMERCIAL LAW,

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

The Faculty have decided to make instruction, during the Winter Term, in the above named branches FREE to all who pay regular tuition, which is only $11.10 in the College Department and $9.25 in the Preparatory Department.

BOOK-KEEPING

will be taught under the supervision of PROF. H. A. FISCHER, a graduate of Bryant and Stratton's Commercial College, Chicago, and a practical Book-keeper for ten years. He will be assisted by MR. W. W. WARNER, a graduate of a Business College who is also a practical accountant.

BUSINESS PENMANSHIP

will be taught under the supervision of PROF. C. A. BLANCHARD, a graduate of the Department of Business Penmanship in Bryant and Stratton's Chicago Business College. The classes instructed by Prof. Blanchard now number over seven-hundred pupils. He will be assisted by MR. G. R. SIMPSON, a good penman and experienced teacher.

Blackboard or Free Hand Drawing will be taught by MRS. S. H. NUTTING, formerly of the State Normal School Vermont. She is an experienced, able and enthusiastic teacher. One of her pupils is now teaching in Westfield College, Ill., another in Colorado and another took the first premium for Paintings at the Illinois State Fair held at Ottawa. 1876.

COMMERCIAL LAW.

There will be during the term a course of five lectures on Commercial Law, delivered by NOAH E. GARY, Esq. of Chicago. These lectures will be for the especial benefit of the Students in Book-keeping, but will be open to all members of the Institution.

VOCAL MUSIC

will be taught by PROF. F. G. BAKER, an Instructor of much experience and great success. He has been engaged in teaching this branch for many years and always with good result. The class will meet four days per week and as above stated will be free to all Students paying tuition for the winter term, begining January 4th, 1877.

PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE

will be taught by text book and lectures, by PROF. A. H. HIATT, M. D. Parents who know how many thousands of Students die from ignorance of the laws of health will be glad to have their children at an Institution where at no expense except that of a book they may learn them. Dr. Hiatt has been the Instructor in this branch for years and all who have been under his tuition will bear testimony to its worth.

How much will it cost me to attend Wheaton College?

A young lady can board in theCollege Building and have in the College as many studies as she can profitably pursue, including those mentioned above, together with board and room for fifty one dollars. The rooms are large and pleasant, fuel and lights are furnished at cost. Young ladies bring their own bedding, towels, carpets etc. Definite information will befound in the Catalogue which will be sent to any one sending a stamp and address.

Young men can rent rooms outside and get board in the College for $2.50 per week.

Ladies or Gentlemen can reduce their expenses to $30.00 for the term by boarding themselves. By engaging board in private families their expenses will vary from $45.00 to $60.00.

HOW CAN I FIND WHEATON?

It is located twenty-five miles west from Chicago, on the Galena Division of the Chicago and Northwestern R. R. When you get in town ask for the house of PRESIDENT BLANCHARD, leave your trunk at the Depot and hold your checks until you have seen the President and found a boarding place. The term opens January 4th, 1877, and every Student should be on hand promptly on the morning of that day. For further and more definite information write for a Catalogue, enclosing stamp to J. BLANCHARD, President.

TO ALL SECEDING MASONS.

BRETHREN:—I propose that we, who have been members of the Masonic order, meet in general convention in some centrally located city as early as practicable; that we hold our convention six successive days; that we work a degree of Masonry each day or evening, and that we issue from that convention an address to the American people. All I feel will see at once the propriety of this movement and I have no doubt will do everything in their power to make it a glorious success. Think the whole matter over, brethren, and communicate your views through the Cynosure. Now let us all work and work quickly else we may not have time to work at all.

Though not through grips, still fraternally yours. EDMOND RONAYNE.

THE INDIANA STATE CHISTIAN ASSCIATION

Will (D. V.) hold its fourth annual meeting at West Newtown, Marion county, Indiana, on the 27th, 28th and 29th of December A. D, 1876, to commence at 7 o'clock P. M. Arrangements have been made to secure the attendance of competent speakers, and Edmond Ronayne, late Past Master of Keystone Lodge, 639, of Chicago, is expected to publicly work the degrees of Masonry.

The great political contest is now ended; and never within the last forty years has there been so favorable a time for a calm and free discussion of the relation of the secret orders to Christianity and civil equality as now. Let all the anti-secret organizations in the State and all churches in sympathy with this reform send delegates without fail; and let all friends of the reform and all who wish to know the truth consider themselves personally invited.

Delegates will stop off at Valley Mills, eight miles southwest of Indianapolis, on the I. and V. R. R., where they will find conveyances to the place of meeting.

On behalf of Executive Committee.
PETER RICH, Chairman.

TO CONNECTICUT REFORMERS.

A friend of the reform in that State writes:

"I wish to say to the friends of reform in Connecticut that there should be a very earnest effort made this winter to enlighten the people in regard to the great dangers which threaten us. Can we not arrange to have a lecturer spend a month or more in our State this winter? Who has money that they will contribute for this purpose? All such please write at once to the President of our State Association, J. A. Conant, Willimantic; and all who would be glad to have lectures in their town or village, write as above.

THE KANSAS STATE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,

Opposed to Secret Societies, will hold its next semi-annual meeting at North Cedar, Jackson county, Kansas, in the Reformed Presbyterian Church, on Tuesday, Jan. 23, 1877, at two P. M., and will continue in session about two days. Several public addresses will be delivered by popular speakers, and important business is to be attended to. The friends of the cause are urged to be present, and the public generally are invited to attend. Free entertainment will be furnished to all who may attend from a distance.

J. DODDS, Secretary.

TO FRIENDS OF ANTI-SECRECY IN CEDAR CO., IOWA.

Wm. Lee and myself have been talking about the importance of having a convention some time in January in Tipton to choose delegates to the State Association, and transact other business that may seem important. Will Moses Varney, Asa Staples, Lawrie Tatum and other friends west of the river have that territory properly represented? Also that other friends on the east side work in the same direction, each one doing what he can to make the convention a success. When the time is fixed due notice will be given Be ready. Copies of the Time

It was reported the other day that a decayed body had been found in the Michigan woods under such circumstances as led many to believe it was that of the unfortunate balloonist Donaldson, whose ascent from this city with Grimwood, a reporter, a year ago last summer was made notorious from the fatal disaster that overtook them. Grimwood's body was found weeks after the event. The discovery of the remains of a balloon on the coast of Iceland lately adds another testimony to the perils of aerial navigation! In the car was found human bones—an incomplete skeleton—and a leather traveling bag containing papers so mouldy that they could not be deciphered. It is supposed that this is the baloon in which Price ascended during the siege of Paris. Perilous and foolhardy as ballooning now seems it is not impossible that its difficulties will soon disappear before some Icarus whose wings shall not fail in the moment he seizes upon success.

Among the other complications in Congress a remarkable one was developed last week among the Democratic leaders. Those from the North led by Speaker Randall and Fernando Wood are overflowing with wrath that Mr. Tilden is not going into the White House with a universal ovation. They want to impeach Grant for telling them of Southern outrages. They issue proclamations to the country at large announcing the election of Tilden. They exchange congratulations of victory—and yet they are not happy. The Southern members of the party have shown lately a decidedly conservative disposition, and a severe rebuke was administered to their luke-warmness by Fernando Wood. Ben. Hill, of Georgia, ex-rebel general, replied to this incendiary harangue: "Perhaps the gentleman is not aware of the conservative influence of a fifteen-inch shell with the fuse in process of combustion." He went on charging the Northern Democrats with deceiving their Southern brethren. They had enticed them into war fifteen years ago and then sent down regiment after regiment of war Democrats to fight and whip them. Other Southerners followed his lead, and now the party is in confusion at headquarters. If these Northern politicians who are so eager for strife will accept the defeat of their counsel, and like Ahithophel, go and hang themselves, politically, the land will rejoice at the prospect of peace.

There is however danger that they have made the "beginning of strife," have breached the dam, and will soon lose control of the passions of the masses inflamed by their intemperate zeal. Organizations are reported as forming, under the name of Democratic Veteran Legions, with secret meetings and an oath of allegiance binding to stand by the Democratic candidates and the Constitution, and swearing to obey the commands of superior officers with the self-abnegation of a Jesuit or a blindfolded Freemason. This organization with headquarters at New York is spread through the North, and may soon gain such headway as to preclude the idea of a peaceful settlement of our national difficulties.

Last week a select ball at a fashionable Chicago hotel furnished an evening of folly by dancing to "Hold the Fort" and other tunes sung in the great meetings here. The next day Mr. Moody said in the Farwell Hall meeting that he had learned from a reliable source that on the evening of the terrible fire in the Brooklyn Theatre the orchestra had played before the opening of the performance, "What shall the Harvest be. The outcome of that awful evening made the announcement strike like a knell on the ears of the vast audience. "When, oh! when will Christians learn to be separate from the world," was all the comment of the evangelist.

THE COLORED PREACHER OF ELLENTON.

[Revelations 20: 4]

BY ANNA S. FISK.

A Quaker lady, for nine years teacher in Aiken, S. C., wrote lately to the New York Tribune that she had seen the young colored woman whose husband was killed at Ellenton. He was about to be ordained to preach in the Baptist church. He had been threatened because of his adherence to the Republican party. A few days later he said to his wife, "I feel death. I know they will kill me." Then, counting the time, he said: 'Five months since we were married. I must pray God to make me willing to part with you. I am not afraid to die." That same evening—it was Sunday—he started for prayer-meeting. Just before reaching the place he was told there was trouble, and heard firing, so he went into the swamp. The next day the young wife heard that he was killed and was crying when the "young master" said, 'Well, he's killed. I've been and had it done. If you ain't certain, go and look in the cotton patch by an old log and the persimmon tree." The wife of five months went and found the body of her husband riddled with bullets, his neck broken and other bruises given with the butts of rifles after he had been shot. The colored man had no weapons of any kind.

A cabin in the sunny South,
And brows of dusky hue,
Yet Love made bright their lowly home.
And hope and joy they knew.
Their hearts sang blithely at their toil,
And when at eve they rest,
Love lightened all the cares they bore;
Each felt that they were blessed.
Five months of wedded bliss had passed,
Since hand in hand they trod—
O Christ, our Lord, be merciful,
Be pitiful, O God!

They wakened on an Autumn morn,
He had a dream, he said;
A dream of glory, yet his heart
Grew sick and faint with dread.
He said, "I saw the horse of white,
The King with eyes like fire,
Clothed with a vesture dipped in blood,
Who treads the press of ire.
And from His mouth the piercing sword
And in His hand the rod;
O Christ, our Lord, be merciful,
Be pitiful, O God!"

He said, "I saw the judgment throne,
And those who sat thereon,
With robes made white in Jesus' blood,
They fear no scorching sun.
Their lives were yielded for His truth,
And now with Him they reigned;
Nor were their foreheads or their hands
With beastly symbol stained.
For these the Holy Lamb doth feed;
Dark was the path they trod;
O Christ, our Lord, be merciful,
Be pitiful, O God!"

"I heard a voice of waters then,
And one spake thus to me:
'Array thyself in linen pure
The marriage feast to see;
Join then the army which doth wear
The linen white and clean.'
Then I awoke; but ah! I feel,
This surely is no dream.
I love thee, darling, and I know
Thy weary feet will plod.
O Christ, our Lord, be merciful,
Be pitiful, O God!"

She found him in the cotton patch,
Beneath the persimmon tree;
His maugled, bleeding body there
She drew upon her knee.
He thought to tell his Savior's love,
And make his mercy known,
But God the swarthy-skinned hath set
Upon the judgment throne.
Men hunt the grieving widow's life
Through forests dark and broad,
O Christ, our Lord, be merciful,
Be pitiful, O God!

A NOTABLE APOSTACY.

NORWICH, Conn., Dec. 8, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

We are strangers, but I desire to make your acquaintance. Having no one at hand to "vouch" for me, I propose to introduce myself.

Well then, I am a member of the Prov. Annual Conference of the M. E. Church, and have been from the time of its organization, in 1840. Last spring, in consequence of impaired health, I was returned "superannuated," and now have my residence in this city.

I have long wished to communicate to the Cynosure some thoughts upon the subject of Freemasonry. I took the first three degrees, I think in 1861, in Moriah Lodge, No. 15, in the village of Danielsonville, Conn. I was subsequently taken through Montgomery Council No. 2, Warren Chapter No. 12, and Columbian Encampment, No. 4, of this city; making fourteen degrees. I subsequently took an additional degree in the Council, making the number up to fifteen. It was a wonder to many, and was to myself, how I came to take that step. My father was in the great fight of former days, and he was decidedly Anti. Little did he think that he had a son who would ever consent to be cable-towed. I cannot speak at length of the motives that led me to take this step. Prominent among them were these two, viz. 1st, The example set by some of my brethren in the Christian ministry, of whom I had a very high esteem.

2nd. I confess to a lively curiosity, to see and know for myself what was actually behind the curtains. Though only a boy of twelve at the time, I have a clear recollection of the great meeting held at old South Woodstock, when Mr. Dow preached that memorable sermon on "If ye will inquire, inquire ye." I heard that sermon and witnessed the exhibition of the three degrees by Mr. Greene, and others, in the church in the evening.

Well, strange things do transpire. I found myself at length raised to the "Sublime degree of a Master Mason." It was new to me in the main, for though I had read much when a boy, I retained but little; hence the blow that brought me to a "dead level" was quite unlooked for. The man is living, and living in this city who knocked me down. I have not forgotten or lost sight of him. My last visit to the lodge-room was about ten years ago—of course I never expect to be in one again.

"But," I hear some one say, "you have told me how you came to be a Freemason, tell us now how you came to renounce it." I was led to a thorough re-examination of the whole subject, by an observation of one of the official members of my church, with whom I had often been in the lodge. It was, that in his candid opinion, it was no place for a minister of the Gospel. I found that all the declarations made to me touching the antiquity, secrecy, and charity of the institution were utterly false; that I had been deceived, defrauded. For example, what of all this talk about Solomon and Hiram and the Apostles of Christ being Freemasons, or patrons of the order, when every intelligent Mason knows that it is not two hundred years old. I know it claims to be a charitable institution. Well, it may be in a Masonic sense, but it is not the charity of the Bible, which enjoins that we should "do good unto all men." Masonry simply teaches its adherents to do good to all good Masons. Then as regards morality, just cast a glance at this language in the oath of the Master's degree, viz., "I furthermore promise and swear that I will not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, daughter, sister or mother, I knowing them to be such" &c. How does that tally with the doctrine of the Great Teacher?

But it is asked again and again, "How can good men take such awful oaths?" If the surroundings of the candidate are considered, it is not so marvelous after all. I do not think that one in fifty has, at the time of taking the oath, an appreciable sense of its awful import. How could he be expected to have? His mind is made up. He is bound to go through; and so he hobbles on as well as he can repeating, parrot-like, the terrible imprecations. True, I was positively assured before taking the oath, that there was nothing in it that would in the least interfere with the duty I owe to my country or my God. And thus it at once proceeds to set itself above all law human or divine; for I flatly deny the authority of Masons to administer an oath any way, much less an oath with such an inhuman and barbarous penalty.

It is too late in the day to dispute the truth of the old adage that "a bad promise is better broken than kept." And that passage in Lev. v. 4, seems to have been made on purpose to fit in here, "If a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil or to do good, whatsoever it be that man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him, when he knoweth it, then he shall be guilty in one of these."

How dreadfully warped must that man's moral sense be who regards these obligations so much above all others, that he justifies himself in deception and lying for the "good of the order." But it is the writer's happiness to reflect that he never yet lied for Masonry. Following my honest convictions of duty, I do utterly and most unqualifiedly renounce all allegiance to the order. Most gladly would I be the means of leading others to "go and do likewise." Further observations I must reserve till another time.

[No name was signed to the above, but as we are quite sure it is from the Rev. Anthony Palmer it is here printed. May this honest confession lead others who have fallen into the same snare to do likewise.—Ed. Cyn.]

Party.

Some men become as besotted in their devotions to party as the toper does to his bottle. Party is made for man, not man for party.

The Anti-mason ought to make use of the Republican party for effecting a reform, and not let himself, together with that party, be used for the foul purposes of the Masonic lodge. As the liquor-seller makes use of the toper's thirst to make a fortune, so the lodge makes use of the devotion of men to the Republican party for building up the cause of Freemasonry.

At the last Presidential election in Vermont there were thirty-six votes cast which the managers of the lodge called scattering. They were probably Anti-masonic votes.

Now let the following facts be considered:

First, if five thousand Anti-masonic votes had been cast in the State, it would not have endangered Mr. Hayes' chance of election.

Second, the lodge managers of the Republican party did endanger Mr. Hayes' chances by overriding the law as usual and selecting a federal office-holder for one of the electors.

Third, forty years ago the people of the State expelled Freemasonry from their borders.

Fourth, a law of the State prohibits the administration of secret oaths or obligations, which law was designed to prevent the return of Masonry to the State.

Fifth, there are at least two hundred men of the State who had joined an Anti-masonic society; and there are known to be many other Anti-masons in the State.

Yet notwithstanding these facts, there are only thirty-six men in the whole State who assert, by their votes, their own convictions. They voted for electors, one of whom was ineligible by the Constitution, set up for them by the lodge, rather than maintain their own opinions. The lodge has drugged the Republican party with Masonic poison, just as the rum-seller drugs the liquor which he sells to topers, and men marched up to the polls and supported a drugged party, just as topers march up to the bar to take their drugged liquor.

Now if men cannot make party serve the purposes of their own convictions, but blindly turn themselves over to be managed by party, than there must be an end of free government, it seems to me.

What is a vote good for unless it expresses the voter's convictions? The man who abstains from voting rather than allow himself to be managed by a party, is of more value to the country than if he were to stuff the ballot-box with a hundred votes. One single independent man is worth a thousand partisans for the purposes of free government. He who votes against a Mason cannot possibly be wrong.

Anti-mason.

Notes from New England.

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

A Union Holiness Convention (so called) made up of ministers and churches from Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire and Rhode Island, has been lately held in Worcester, at the Grace church (Methodist). The benign result thereof is thought to be a deepening of the work of grace in believers, and an elevating of the standard of Christian attainment. Preaching by Rev. Messrs. Steele, McDonald, and Chadbourne, advocates of the Higher Life Experience, was in the highest degree quickening and instructive. A colored preacher also, last from Philadelphia, of the Methodist connection, Mrs. Amanda Smith, has made a deep impression by her devout singing, prayers, and Bible readings, which bring believing souls very near to God.

The topics presented were Abiding in Christ, John xv. 4: "Abide in me, I in you"; The Use and Power of the Bible promises,—2 Cor. vii. 1: "Having therefore, these promises, let us cleanse ourselves," &c.; Sanctification as taught in Scripture, - 1 Thess. v. 28: The very God of peace sanctify you wholly." &c.; Christian Perfection,—Heb. vi. 1: "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ. let us go on unto perfection," &c.; The Provisions of Redemption Adequate to Salvation from the guilt and power of sin,—1 John, i. 9: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse from all unrighteousness"; The Peace of God Defined and Enforced, Phil, iv. 7: "And the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

These themes were treated with extraordinary clearness, vigor, and Spiritual powers. To abide in Christ, was proven to be the blessed privilege and duty of believers, and how to have this abiding in Christ an enjoyed experience, was clearly shown. The cleansing power of the promises fully believed, was conclusively demonstrated, and the cleansing process in the human soul satisfactorily explained. The Scripture view of entire sanctification was intelligently defined and vindicated, and the possibility of its attainment in this life argued and enforced, by Scripture, reasoning, and examples. The adequacy of the provisions of the Gospel to present and complete salvation from the power, penalty, and pollution of sin, was logically proved and commended with Spiritual power. The peace of God as the Divine Legacy bought and bequeathed by Christ, and to be enjoyed by all his followers as a purchased possession, was attractively exhibited, and the way opened to enter into the purchased possession by simple faith. The theme of Christian perfection as taught by Wesle., Fletcher, Madame Guyon, Professor Upham, Finney, and other Christian writers and expounders of the word of God, was most instructively unfolded, and the aspirations of believing souls were enkindled under it.

A proper distinction was claimed to exist between sin as overt, voluntary transgression, and sin as a sinful state or tendeucy, that is, inbred sin, original depravity. Sin by definition of Scripture, is trangression of law, and all unrighteousness is sin. The one, actual transgression, is the subject of forgiveness. The other, a sinful state, or innate depravity, inward pollution, is the subject of cleansing. The system of redemption by Christ covers both these conditions. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse from all unrighteousness. The forgiveness and the cleansing come in the same way, through faith in Christ and the renewing of the Holy Ghost. The forgiveness is first and is perfect on God's part; and it is realized on man's part through faith, confession, and full surrender to God. But cleansing is next and it is perfect according to the measure of faith on man's part, and of the gift of the Holy Ghost. To experience the one, forgiveness, we are to believe, confess, and unconditionally surrender. To experience the other, cleansing, or sanctification, we are to believe, be consecrated, and be filled with the Spirit.

This is the barest micrometrical outline of the pulpit teachings of the week, saying nothing of the devout prayers, testimonies, and earnest exhortations of brethren and sisters of different denominations, who participated alike in the public exercises. I have not heard of exception taken to any of the positions advanced in public, nor is there good reason for the fear expressed by some, that the persistent inculcation of these views as a specialty will result in schisms. For there to be schism on such a ground in the Methodist church, while Wesley's hymns "For Believers Seeking for full Salvation," are extant, would seem impossible. But certain significant signs show that there may be near an eclectic church of the future, whose rudder will be the doctrine of entire sanctification by faith in Christ.

Even as the sun
Ere it has risen, sometimes paints its image
In the atmosphere; so, often do the spirits
Of great events stride on before the events,
And in to-day already walks to-morrow.

At the very largely attended conference of the Congregationalists of Connecticut last week, it was resolved to invite a conference with other ecclesiastical bodies, "with a view to the settlement and adoption of such principles of comity as are fitted to remove all occasions of annoyance and conflict in their inter-denominational relations, and as tend toward the ultimate and complete union of the people of God of all names in every good work." President Porter of Yale College made the concluding address on The Christian Outlook, and said: "The more we look into the centuries the more we shall find that the living Christ will stand forth as the bright and shining light of the world. If we put Christ in our feelings, and are willing to follow Christ in our living, there will be no difference in our theology. But we are learning more and more that Christianity must and will be applied more closely to all the relations of life. The fame of Christianity will go out from one land to another, until the whole world shall become converted to Christ."

It is significant that on the same week the Episcopal Church Congress was held in Boston at Horticultural Hall, which was crowded with a highly intellectual audience representing all denominations The meetings were opened with short prayers interspersed with the singing of sensible and devout hymns. Two writers and two speakers were heard in order upon every subject, and the range of topics was large. The last was upon the Morals of Politics, opening with an able paper by Dr. Harwood of New York, and continued by addresses from Chancellor Pruyn of the same State and Ex-governor Bullock of this city. The latter powerfully advocated a higher morality in our politics, and urged the conscientious cutting (what politicians call scratching) of tickets, and that the way to secure honest nominations is to foil rascals by non-election. Both in this Congress and in the Connecticut Conference of Congregationalists there was a decisive pronunciation in favor of Temperance and Prohibition. The effect will follow. It has opened a new era in American Episcopalianism.

Christmas.—II.

5. Paganism, there is reason to think, had much influence, directly or indirectly, in the origination and mouldings of the Christmas festival.

One thing is certain, that among the heathen of ancient times, both in the North and South of Europe, that period of the year, known even among us as "The holiday season," was largely devoted to festivals of various kinds. It is, moreover, certain that many of the customs which now distinguish Christmas, are substantially the same which prevailed among our heathen ancestors at the same season of the year.

Among the Romans, the festival of the Saturnalia was observed for a week, beginning on December 27th; that of the Sigillaria was held on the 24th, and that of Brumalia on the 25th of the same month. The first of these feasts was kept in honor of the heathen god, Saturn, and in commemmoration of the golden age of which the poets sung. The second was signalized by the making of presents to children; the presents consisting chiefly of dolls and little images of the gods, made of clay or wax. The third, corresponding to Christmas, was the feast of the winter solstice, and was really in worship of the sun; being designated, "Dies natalis invicti solis," that is, "the birth-day of the unconquered sun." It would seem that the apparent return of the sun upon its course, a symbol of the triumph of light and life over their opposites, operated in the heathen mind to lend interest to the dead of winter, and suggested that series of festivals which marked that dreary season. The coincidence between the Pagan custom of making presents on the 25th of December and that of making Christmas gifts, is striking and suggestive. The practice, now common and growing apace among us, of decorating houses with evergreens, is another link which connects the so-called Christian festival of Christmas with heathen superstitions; for, among the Druids, who once held sway among the Germans, Gauls and Britons, especially among the last, such a custom prevailed at mid winter. Edmund Burke, in his graceful and thoughtful "Abridgment of English history," thus writes of the Druids: "Oaks were regarded by this sect with a particular veneration, as by their greatness, their shade, their stability and duration, not ill representing the perfections of the Deity. From the great reverence in which they held this tree, it is thought their name of 'Druids' is derived; the word 'deru,' in the Celtic language, signifying an oak. But their reverence was not wholly confined to this tree. All forests were held sacred; and many particular plants were respected as endued with a particular holiness. No plant was more revered than the mistletoe, especially if it grew on the oak; not only because it is rarely found upon that tree, but because the oak was among the Druids peculiarly sacred. Towards the end of the year they searched for this plant, and, when it was found, great rejoicing ensued; it was approached with reverence; it was cut with a golden hook; it was not suffered to fall to the ground, but received with great care and solemnity upon a white garment." That the practice of bedecking houses with festoons of branches about the end of the year, prevailed among the Pagans not only of Northern and Western Europe, but also of Eastern Europe and Western Asia, can be satisfactorily proved. Gregory Nazianzen, for instance, a native of Asia Minor, and for some time Bishop of Constantinople, counsels Christans of the his time, the latter part of the fourth century, to avoid, in the observance of Christmas, the practices common at that season among the heathens, and expressly says, "Let us not crown our doors with garlands, nor exercise ourselves in dances."

Mallet, in his "Northern Antiquities," tells us that Yule, which corresponded to Christmas, was a festival observed by the heathen tribes of Northern Europe in honor of their god, Thor, or the sun, and that the customs associated with Yule attached themselves to Christmas, when the Christian religion had been introduced among the Scandinavians and Germans.

The coincidences traceable between the heathen winter festivals and the Christmas festival, can hardly be counted accidental, but point to a coalescence of the two forms of religion represented by those festivals.

There are two ways of accounting for this correspondence; one, by supposing that the Christians of early times consciously sought to accommodate their observances as much as possible to those of the Pagans, so as thereby to make easier the step from Paganism to Christianity, or persuade the heathen that between this religion and the Christian faith there was little difference. This is the course which Roman Catholics in modern times have pursued in their missions among the heathen; as the record of their operations in South America and Mexico, in China, Japan, and India amply attests. This, however is a plan of action which it was reserved for Jesuitism to introduce and pursue; and there is not proper ground for affirming that a similar spirit animated the church in the earlier centuries of our era. There appears, on the contrary, to have been, in the centuries referred to, a decided antagonism to the heathen practices, such as prompted to the observance of a feast when the heathen held a feast, or to the establishment of a Christian festival in coincidence with, and as a counterpoise to, a Pagan festival.

The other way of accounting for the resemblance between Christmas and the heathen feasts at the same season of the year, is, that, while Christmas was originally set up as a rival to the Pagan feasts, and in order to keep professing Christians from joining in the heathenish observances, the spirit of heathenism gradually crept into the church, and gave tone to the very measure which had been adopted or readily accepted as a protection against heathenism. But, however this question may be decided, whether that Christmas originated in a spirit of adaptation or in that of antagonism to heathen festivals, certain it is that it comes down to us in heathen trappings; and it is humiliating to reflect that Christian churches are, at no little cost, elaborately trimmed with evergreens in consequence of an influence proceeding from the ancient Druids, whose gloomy and barbarous rites were viewed with horror by even the heathen Romans; and still more humiliating is it to think that those who withstand and expose such customs are beginning to be regarded as troublers of Zion and sour bigots. A species of Christmas mythology is impressed upon the tender minds of the young, a fact which, on several grounds, is objectionable: for children who need truth rather than lies, become thus bewildered; while to some of them Santa Claus is a much more real personage, and, I may add, a much more important one, than He in whose honor Christmas is professedly observed. But in all this, confirmation is found of our assertion that heathenism has had considerable influence, directly or indirectly, in giving us the Christmas festival over which not only Papists, but Protestants are so enthusiastic in our time; and supposing this position to be correct, it seems to me that professing Christians, "hating the garment spotted by the flesh," should recoil from such an observance, rather than abandon themselves to it.

6. It savors of presumption in man to set apart a day for the annual commemoration of the birth of Christ, when God has made no such appointment, but, as if to preclude it, has prescribed a weekly commemoration of the great facts of redemption. It has already been said that God reserves to himself the prerogative of determining forms of worship aud sacred seasons. The proposition now advanced is designed to suggest the audacity that lurks in every encroachment upon this high prerogative. To some it may seem a proof of zeal for the glory of God, and even of humility, to appropriate to the special service of God other set days than those which he has expressly claimed; but, to my mind, such a course, though wearing the aspect of humility and devotion, is dictated by the spirit of arrogance, and, if of zeal, of that kind "which is not according to knowledge." When Peter says to his Master, "Not my feet only, but also my hands and my head," he may have seemed to be uttering the language of profound humility; but he was unconsciously revealing the pride and self-sufficiency of his heart, for he was presuming to dictate to his Lord, and improve upon his plan.

It is not without significance that the apostle, writing to the Colossians, describes those zealots who inculcated "a voluntary humility" as "vainly puffed up by their fleshly mind." Col. ii. 18.

7. Besides, it may be asked, "What limit shall be set to the appointing power, if with man it resides to prescribe solemn festivals?" If men are authorized to set apart a day to commemorate the birth of Christ, why may they not appoint memorial days of all the great events in the history of the church? Thus to carry to its logical conclusion the principle that men of their own authority may raise one day of the year to the rank of a sacred day it might result that every day in the year should be so appropriated, although God has said, "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work." Toward this issue Popery has, in point of fact, made a very considerable approximation, and thus helped to engender habits of indolence, and dignify them with the name of religion. In thus expressing myself, I would not have it understood that I deny the propriety of setting apart for humiliation or for thanksgiving, days occasionally, as the circumstances of Providence might seem to suggest. For such occasional, not fixed observances, the word of God affords sanction. But I would resist the regulation of such matters by the calendar, so that when a certain day arrived it must be observed as a fast or as a sacred feast, whatever our circumstances might at the time be. * * * True piety contains the spirit of obedience to all divine precepts, and, in so far as it prevails, tends to completeness and symmetry of character. Hence, if a regard for Christmas be a natural product of true faith, we would expect to find it accompanied by a proportionate reverence for the Sabbath. Do facts, however, prove that such an association of Christmas and Sabbath exists? I think not. That regard for Christmas may in individuals co-exist with much respect for the Sabbath, I do not deny; but I do deny that in the mass of cases the ardent advocates of Christmas are distinguished for their careful sanctification of the Sabbath, or that the more Christmas is honored, the more is the Sabbath loved. Now we know that the Sabbath is from God, and if Christmas also was, we should doubtless find that the more a community was attached to the Sabbath, the more would it be to Christmas; and as love of the latter prevailed, so, in the average of cases, would love of the former. For be it noted that, if Sabbath observance and Christmas observance are duties, they are duties of a closely kindred character, duties, so to speak, in the same plane; so that the temper of mind which prompts to the one would naturally dispose to the other. But if, on the whole, it be found, as I think it is, that a strong inclination to the one observance is not accompanied by a like inclination to the other, a grave doubt may be thereby suggested that each alike is not from God or sanctioned by him. Now, the parties in this controversy agree that the Sabbath is of divine authority. Therefore it might be inferred that Christmas is not. Thus we may reason against Christmas in two ways; either by examining the Bible and showing that it affords no sanction to such a festival, and therefore is opposed to it, or by drawing on observation, and proving that in proportion as Christmas rises in the estimation of a community, the Sabbath goes down. The lean kine, in Pharaoh's dream, ate up the fat kine; and in like manner the tendency of human devices and unauthorized additions in the worship of God is to neutralize, displace, and bring into disregard and contempt his genuine ordinances. And, whenever we discover that a particular rite or ceremony tends to supplant another of whose divine authority we have sufficient evidence, we may well suspect that the former is an intruder without warrant, a usurper without title. The ordinances of God form a majestic harmony, each lending beauty and strength to the other; whereas mere human ordinances in the sphere of worship jar with those that are divine, and tend to destroy them: a fact affirmed by our Lord, when he said, "Thus have ye made he commandment of God of none effect by your tradition." It may appear wise to multiply rites, and holy days, and symbols of sacred things; but when men act thus of their own authority, they will, in the end, be proved to be fools. As churches become carved and crusted over with crosses and kindred devices for setting forth spiritual things, they lose the real doctrines of the Gospel, and the spirit of true ligion. The curse of God follows all intermeddlings with his prerogative.—United Presbyterian.

THE MICHIGAN STATE CONVENTION.

Editor Cynosure:

Allow me to say through the columns of the Cynosure that our State Christian Association held in Hastings, Dec. 6th to 8th, was a success in every particular. Delegates were present from various parts of the State, representing seven denominations of Christians: Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, Reformed Presbyterian, Wesleyan Methodist, Free Methodist, Baptist and United Brethren, yet so united were they in their work, that one would have supposed that they all belonged to the same church.

Reports from the various parts of the State were very encouraging and spoke well for the success of the anti-secret cause in this State. In some places lodges have been so affected that they have not kept up their regular meetings, and many young men have been saved from the lodge by the lectures and efforts put forth by the friends of our cause. The Association was so well pleased with the reports of our State Lecturer and Agent (Rev. J. L. Barlow and C. B. Remington), that they unanimously re-appointed them to fill those positions for the coming year.

The Association was some in debt for services rendered by the lecturers, which was a source of embarrassment, until Prof. Blanchard came to the rescue and presented the subject of finance in his winning way, when the friends opened their hearts and donated in cash and pledges about four hundred and sixty dollars, which brightened our prospects and made us feel good again. It is believed that the coming year will be as the past, only much more abundant.

Two ministers were present who had been Master Masons, and one of them had belonged to some other secret orders. They gave their experience in connection with the lodge, and both asserted publicly, in substance, that they received Masonry just as it has been revealed by Wm. Morgan, Edmond Ronayne and others.

Bro. J. L. Barlow lectured on Wednesday evening, and Bro. C. A. Blanchard on Thursday and Friday evenings. Bro. Barlow lectured on the Religion of Masonry and referred to several standard Masonic authors, whose writings proved the points that he made. Bro. Blanchard told us in a very clear and forcible manner why he objected to secret societies, and appealed to common sense and good judgment, as well as the best Masonic authority to prove his positions. He has an excellent way of telling things, and somehow people are made to think just about as he does after he has talked to them, and I venture the assertion that Masons in Hastings would be glad to have the visits of such men as these two very few and far between.

Several members of the craft were present and on the last evening were invited to speak in defense of their cause, but they all bore the cross and kept still.

The following preamble and resolutions were presented and unanimously adopted by the Association:

WHEREAS, Freemasonry claims to be, and undoubtedly is, a religious institution, having a religious faith peculiar to itself, and antagonistic to that of the Christian church; and

WHEREAS, It claims to be a regenerative, purifying power, sufficiently strong, abstract from the grace of God and the blood of Jesus, to qualify its subjects for heaven; thereby setting aside the mediation of Christ and the blood of the covenant; and

WHEREAS, Secret societies have not only polluted the church and desecrated the altars of God, but have also intruded their unholy and corrupt influence upon our courts of justice, and offices of trust in the State and nation; therefore

Resolved; That it is the duty of all American citizens to cleanse the same by electing men to fill them who are not trammeled by selfish oaths, and who are free from the pernicious influences of the lodge.

Resolved; That Freemasonry is the foe of true religion, the Christian Church, the Bible, the God of the Bible and humanity, and should not only be kept out of the church, but exposed, destroyed and banished from the face of the earth; for the speedy accomplishment of which we will devoutly pray and earnestly labor.

Resolved; That the warmest thanks of the Association are due, and are hereby tendered to the pastor, trustees, and members of the church for the use of their house of worship for our meetings; and to for the uniform courtesy shown us, those friends who have so kindly made a home and home comforts for us during our stay.

The officers for the coming year are as follows:

President, H. D. Inman, Coldwater.

Vice-president, G. W. Fast.

Corresponding Secretary, C. B. Remington, Fentonville.

Recording Secretary, E. W. Bruce, Hickory Corners.

Treasurer, C. Quick, Weston.

Lecturer, J. L. Barlow, Fentonville.

Agent, C. B. Remington, Fentonville.

Vice-presidents were appointed to represent the various counties in the State as follows:

Monroe, J. S. Hitchcock.
Lenawee, J. T. Comstock.
Hillsdale, Azel Backus.
Branch, A. S. Buffham.
St. Joseph, O. C. M. Bates.
Berrien, J. B. Crall.
Kalamazoo, W. S. Clark.
Allegan, Daniel Legget.
Jackson, Harry Wilcox.
Wayne, T. H. Banks.
Washtenaw, Mrs. Dr. Gerry.
Genesee, Charles Smith.
Oakland, Hoyt Glasbie.
Livingston, Wm. Duryee.
Ingham, J. C. Martin.
Eaton, Mrs. C. C. P. Taylor.
Barry, E. W. Bruce.
Ionia, Griffin Marcy.
Kent, W. J. Olmstead.
Ottawa, Aaron Bunnell.
Bay, A. Oldfield.
Oceana, James Shigley.
Muskegon, A. M. Thompson.
Gratiot, A. Bovee.
Midland, J. H. Lewis.
Isabella, Israel Hutchinson.
Clinton, Edward Root.
Calhoun, H. M Willis.
Sanalac, James Ward.

Printed copies of the Constitution of the State Association will be sent by the Corresponding Secretary to each of these Vice-presidents, whose duty it is to canvass his county thoroughly, and secure all the names that he can for membership, also as much money as he can, for the purpose of carrying on the work in the State.

Everything in connection with our Association passed off smoothly and pleasantly, and we hope the time is not for distant when lodge power will be broken in this State; when truth shall triumph over error, and those now in bondage become free. E. W. BRUCE, Secretary.

The New Hampshire State Convention.

CENTER STRAFFORD, N. H., Dec. 8, 1876.

DEAR K:—The first anniversary of the New Hampshire Anti-secrecy Association closed last evening with results exceeding the anticipations of the friends. The meetings were held in Austin Academy, beginning on the morning of the 6th with a small attendance, but with an excellent spirit that continued through the Convention, so far as the members and Christian people present were concerned. Letters of interest containing expressions of sympathy from prominent clergymen in the State were read by the Secretary, and a number of instances showing lodge interference in church and state were given by persons who had been eye-witnesses of what they related. Most of the time was given to prayer and free conference and much interest was developed before the day sessions closed.

The Hall was crowded at an early hour in the evening with a mixed company anxious to learn something about what is "done of them in secret" lodges. A slight change in the programme was deemed advisable, and after stating distinctly that I had never been connected with any of the so-called secret orders, I proceeded to open the lodge in the first degree of Freemasonry and to give as full an account of the ceremonies as seemed practicable. At the proper time a candidate "duly and truly prepared" for the third degree was brought in and led three times round the room and made to kneel at the altar, after which he was "permitted to retire and invest himself in that of which he was divested."

This exhibit so "moved with choler" the "brothers" and their obsequious attendants as to cause considerable disturbance. One man in particular distinguished himself by calling the speaker a "a liar and a perjurer," and to give force to his statements added, "I am a Mason and a Christian." He was commended for his plainness of speech, thanked for his confirmation of what had been said and done, and assured that as a reward for his volunteer assistance he should, at the proper time, have an opportunity of saying what he wished to. It was evident that he felt himself abused and in need of sympathy and counsel; so leaving his seat he made his way straight to the back part of the room where he was soon in confidential conference with his "mystic brothers," who, I am informed, are men of questionable morals, addicted to profanity and other gross and glaring evils. His Christian brethren looked on with amazement and every thoughtful person present wondered to see this "Christian" pass his own pastor and the deacons of the church to which he belonged and who were present, to take counsel of men who unblushingly blaspheme the name of God. He is however (his own statement being true), "a Mason and a Christian," and this was a most opportune moment to show before his neighbors to which of the two systems, Freemasonry or Christianity, he was most strongly attached. It was such a striking illustration of what had been said in the Convention that no one could fail to see the dangerous and demoralizing effect of Masonry upon its members. Subsequent developments only served to deepen this conviction, for it soon became evident to all that the stamping, hissing, groaning, shrieking clique had by common consent elevated this "Mason and Christian" brother and informally but unanimously constituted him the champion of a disgraceful row. Lest a link should be wanting to complete the chain of evidence and thereby leave a doubt in the minds of some in regard to his willingness to occupy the position, when requested with others to observe quiet while the meeting was closed with prayer by his pastor, he exclaimed in a very excited manner, "I don't want to hear him pray since he has got those fellows to come here;" referring to those who had been exposing the shams and blasphemies of the lodge, thus clinching the nail by his own testimony.

The meeting broke up informally and in a very disorderly manner, it being impossible to secure sufficient quiet to be heard in prayer. Thus ended the first day's work of the Convention in disorderly tumult led on by a man who announced himself "a Mason and a Christian."

When seated in the cheerful home of Bro. Kimball and with him reviewing the day's record, he remarked, "I told Bro. Rathbun last year at Lake Village that he could speak anywhere in New Hampshire without being disturbed, to which Bro. R. responded, 'If you have a reformed devil in New Hampshire I should like to know it.'" Bro. Kimball's ideas of the "lodge devil" are undergoing a careful revision and there ar e evident indications of a change.

Thursday's sessions were more largely attended than those of the day previous, and it was apparent that our movement was rapidly gaining strength among respectable people. Rumors however reached us from different sources that plans were on foot for a general time. Eggs, rotten apples, etc., etc., were to constitute an important feature in the evening's programme, and some of the faint-hearted thought it best to keep at a safe distance to preserve their principles, patriotism and their good clothes for future use; but enough came to fill every available foot of space within, while a goodly number remained of necessity to act as outside guardians.

The pulse of the meeting indicated a very feverish condition of the body especially in the back part of the room near the entrance; but a few timely words from Father Winckley, now in his 84th year, had an excellent effect, and probably prevented a more serious disturbance than occurred on the evening previous.

The exercises although somewhat lengthy proceeded with very slight interruptions to the close when all retired without molestation. Every person present desiring to speak had an opportunity to do so, and the "opposition" was fitly represented by their champion who declared himself the employed advocate of the disaffected ones by saying at the beginning of his speech that he appeared at the earnest solicitation of a number of persons who had called on him for that purpose during the day, but said he did not wish to begin unless he could be allowed all the time he wished to complete his speech. When assured by the chairman that he should have unlimited scope he proceeded in a manner eminently fitting to his subject and I suppose highly gratifying to those who had procured his services by such earnest and repeated importunities. He made some strange disclosures, perhaps secrets kept from the profane world by the craft hitherto. I have not room to give a list of all the wonderful things he told us, but here is a specimen brick: "Everybody knows that Christ quoted the parable of the rich man and Lazarus from Virgil." "Everybody knows that a great many of our eminent and good men have been Masons," &c. He also read from "Hall's Masonic Monitor" which he told me the Masons had furnished him for the purpose to show that the "Savior," which he said meant "Jesus Christ," was recognized in the Masonic lodge. His speech was a compound of personal defamation, vilification of the church and windy eulogy of Freemasonry and but for the fact that he was the employed and accredited exponent of the lodge that had provided him with one of their spurious monitors, he would have scarcely deserved a notice.

As to the personal character of this man chosen and put forward by the secretists as their advocate, any one in New Hampshire or elsewhere desiring further information is respectfully referred to his neighbors who assert that he has swindled them out of hundreds of dollars by knavery and falsehood, and to the records of the civil courts in this county, and to the minutes of an ecclesiastical body in this place, by which he was deposed from the ministry, for stating in the pulpit as a reason why he could not pay his debts, that he had been robbed of $1,000; which on investigation proved to be an absolute, direct and malicious lie. If the secretists of N. H. had started out with the deliberate purpose of heaping the greatest possible odium upon their institutions I can conceive of no method by which they could have more effectually accomplished their purpose. The measures adopted and the men put forward, were offensive to every honest man, and could only evenuate in bringing their institutions to shame.

Thus God has overruled an intended evil for great good, and in thus causing the wrath of man to praise him has greatly encouraged the hearts of the brethren here and added many more to the number who will have no fellowship with this dark system but rather reprove and expose it.

To Him be all the glory, Amen.

J. P. STODDARD.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The annual meeting of the New Hampshire Anti-secret Christian Association was held in Austin Academy, Center Strafford, Dec. 6 and 7. The weather was remarkably pleasant for the season of the year and the Academy was crowded each evening. The providential presence of our dear brother, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, was to us like the coming of Titus to the brethren of Macedonia. We greatly needed his help, and no doubt much fruit will result from his abundant labors among us. His lectures on Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and the grange were able and convincing. The Spirit of the Lord hovered over our meetings with manifest approval and encouragement. One young man, at least, was hopefully moved to give his heart to God. The usual church prayer-meeting the evening after the close of the convention was the most fully attended and best of the season. The Spirit of the Lord seemed to run from heart to heart. I write this to show every reader that true reform work is in helpful accord with revival religious interest.

The following officers were chosen:

President—Eld. J. F. Browne of Lewiston, Me.

Vice-presidents: Rockingham Co., Rev. E. G. Cogswell, Northwood Center.

Strafford Co., Rev. C. C. Foster, Strafford Corners.

Belknap Co., Ezra Morefield, Lake Village.

Carroll Co., Eld. S. P. Fernald, Melvin Village.

Merrimac Co., Rev. F. E. Davison, East Andover.

Hillsboro Co., Rev. D. Q. Quint, No. Weare.

Cheshire Co., Asa Cole, Keene.

Grafton Co., Eld. N. Jones, Canaan.

Coos Co., Rev. Justis Erskine, Franconia.

Treasurer—Dea. E. Smith, Center Strafford.

Secretary—Eld. S. C. Kimball, Center Strafford.

Executive Committee—Dea. S. B. Gray, Bow Lake and Dea. Simon Rowe of Gilford.

Resolutions were passed commending the Christian Cynosure, the Publishing House fund, and the tract work to the favorable notice of Christian people. Resolutions were also passed reprimanding the Morning Star for refusing to publish the action of the Free Baptist General Conference against secret societies, while claiming to be the organ of the Free Baptist denomination.

The address of Pres. Browne on the heathenism of the lodge was a perfect demonstration. The friends of reform feel that a good work has been done, and the watchword is: Forward, in the name of the Lord!

Ronayne in Ohio.

Mallet Creek, O., Dec. 7, '76.
Editor Cynosure:

Having attended Mr. Ronayne's expose of Freemasonry at Berea on the 4th and 5th inst., please allow me to say a word by way of encouragement to Mr. Ronayne, and for the good of the cause in which he is engaged, and also to express my gratitude to the giver of all good for sending forth, endued with wisdom and courage, so able a defender of the truth.

Bro. Ronayne's powerful and convincing expose at Medina last March was all that could be expected of mortal man. But when the other evening he looked upon that large hall filled to overflowing with eager and anxious listeners, a large portion of whom were students from Berea College, from which must come many of our future legislators, governors, doctors and preachers, he seemed to be inspired with the spirit of the occasion and endowed with more than mortal energy, his mouth being filled with burning truth full of love, sympathy and goodwill to all such as would listen to the voice of truth and obey its dictates. Had all those young men been his sons and their destiny for both worlds depended on that single effort, I know not how he could have done better.

All this, with God's help has been brought about by the persevering efforts of one feeble woman, a former student of Oberlin College. While many have sympathized, none have had sufficient faith to labor or sacrifice with her. Many years has she, single-handed and alone, prayed, toiled and sacrificed for those young men that they might be saved from the darkness of a Christless lodge, a Christless grave, and a Christless hell. I feel fully assured that God, in his infinite faithfulness and love, has sent Bro. Ronayne, endowed with wisdom, to portray the superlative wickedness of the lodge in answer to her prayers, so abundantly exemplified in her faith and works, which will save most, if not all, who are now free, from ever entering the lodge, and that many such will bless God to all eternity for that woman's prayers and for Mr. Ronayne's agency in answering them. While there are others in that community who have been drawn into the lodge by the influence of lodge-going church-members and preachers who will curse such through all eternity for enticing them into a Christless order and dragging them down to a Christless hell.

If the friends of Berea will organize and keep up their aggressive movements against the lodge, the town is virtually redeemed from its power. But we are always to understand that eternal vigilance is the price of human liberty. That while men sleep the enemy sows tares.

I understand that the good people of Oberlin are hesitating about the propriety of opening their College doors to brother Ronayne's expose. I want to say to them that had my sons, when students at Oberlin, been permitted to listen to such an expose it would have saved me money sufficient to pay Mr. Ronayne for one year's service, and saved me long years of pain and anxiety, and saved one son the extreme degradation of being led into the lodge like a bullock to the slaughter, with a rope around his neck, and there made to take an oath with the vilest of the vile to protect and defend each other here and be eternal associates in the Christless lodge above; with a penalty attached of having his bowels torn out, burnt to ashes and the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven, etc. Had I a thousand sons to educate and the fear of the lodge be such as to keep Mr. Ronayne out of Oberlin, I would in like manner burn my scholarships, and scatter their ashes to the four winds, that there be no trace or remembrance left in my house after I am gone that I ever had any sympathy or did anything to support an institution that would quail or falter in such a time as this, when the devil is scraping up the dregs of hell and the five points of creation and marshalling them against our civil and religious and republican institutions in the name of Masonry, Ku-Klux, White Leagues, Knights of the Golden Circle, with all their hot-beds and infant school such as Templars, grangers, Odd-fellows, etc.

God said let there be light. All good people will respond, Amen.

Yours for light, S. Hale.

Berea, O., Dec., 8, 1876.

Editor Cynosure:—Mr. Ronayne has come and gone in person, but he still lives in the minds of the people. His exposition in Berea was a grand success. The Lord heard our prayer. When all the fall had been cloudy, rainy and muddy, so that even the moon did not give her light, in due time "He gave snow like wool; he scattered the hoar frost like ashes; he cast forth his ice like morsels; he showed his word unto Jacob, his statutes and judgments unto Israel. Praise the Lord; exalt his holy name. Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord"

Mr. Ronayne killed Hiram, we think, to the ultimate downfall of the craft here, and although Hiram was resurrected and still lives, yet we think his progeny here are all dead, dead to Masonry but alive to the truth concerning it. The large hall was crowded both evenings, and Mr. Ronayne kept his entire audience until eleven o'clock, and none seemed tired. A number of old people who had passed their three score years and ten, and others of four score years were there, some coming from the country from five to eight miles away, yet the larger share were young men and ladies, some residents of Berea, others students of Baldwin University, and German Wallace College of this place, and others came by the sleigh-load from the country. Rev. Mr. Burr, of Oberlin, was present, also the wife of Rev. George Clark, with another lady by the name of Smith. Mr. Clark would have been here but for poor health. Mr. Hale of Medina Co., was here. The lodge was well represented; but the Masonic preachers, where were they? A guilty conscience no doubt kept them away. Do they not know that "his servants they are, to whom they yield themselves to obey whether of sin unto death or of obedience unto righteousness?" Do they "sin that grace may abound?" Do they not know that if the watchman see the sword coming, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned, if the sword come and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity, but his blood will be required at the watchman's hands? and that if he warn the wicked of his way to turn from it, if he do not turn from his way he shall die in his iniquity; but the watchman has delivered his soul?"

What do the people say, do you ask? Why, that Mr. R. is a wonderful man, a powerful man; that he is fulfilling his mission, that God has given him a work to do and he obeys. One mother in Israel says she never heard a Methodist preacher exhort better. The little boys went home shouting through the streets the pass-words of Masonry they had learned. But the Masons —what do they say? Oh! he is crazy.

May the Lord spare him and give him health that he may work till Masonry is among the things of the past. May the Spirit of the Lord guide him, and may he be humble, realizing the meaning of our Lord's words, "Without me ye can do nothing;" and give God the glory is my prayer. Yours in Christ,

Lois B. Smith.

Ronayne in Iowa.

Oskaloosa, Iowa, Dec. 5, 1876.

Dear Cynosure:—Something over two months ago Edmond Ronayne visited Oskaloosa, delivered a lecture in the U. P. church on the "Religion of Masonry," and on the two following evenings worked the first and third degrees—one night in the church and the next in the City Hall. The houses were full, and the last night perfectly packed. A large number of students from the College was present and I doubt not were thoroughly put on their guard for future life against the insiduous wiles of secretism.

A large number of Masons were present, and it was interesting to note their countenance and conduct. Some would try to laugh but could not. Some would scowl, and some —the poor dupes who honestly thought that Masonry was a divine and sacred treasure wholly unknown to the uninitiated and too holy to be exposed to the vulgar crowd—would stare in perfect amazement! Some remained until the lodge was opened; some until the candidate was introduced, and some until the killing of Hiram, and a few remained through the entire performance. The length of time each remained depended evidently upon the make-up of the individual. None of them went away in cool spirits, but some had steadier nerves than others. After it was all over, and even until this time they are the worst set of crest-fallen fellows I have ever seen. One prominent Mason here told me Ronayne was a much brighter Mason than the Past Master who drilled him. One fellow during the performance was rash enough to hiss. Ronayne "went for him," and I have never seen a victim so utterly scathed. I really pitied him. The hiss had scarce left his teeth when the fierce lightning of invective from the speaker's lips flashed upon him, and struck him dumb. It was done in a moment, but that fellow I am satisfied will never hiss again! This little circumstance convinced the enemy that Ronayne was an "ugly customer," and had better be let alone.

One minister of the Gospel, a Master Mason and President of a College, came the first night, but did not appear subsequently. No other preacher came near except Bro. C. of the Baptist church, and an Anti-mason, and Bro. B. of the Congregational church, also an Anti-mason. The rest are all either involved in the system or afraid of it. What can be expected for the church in such a state of affairs? These men have evidently no idea of separation unto God, nor of "speaking boldly in the name of Jesus."

The influence of Bro. R's visit and work has been of the best character. It has alarmed the denizens of the secret conclaves, strengthened the wavering friends of truth, and prepared the way most happily for our State Convention which meets here in April next; when, it is hoped, he will return and exhibit the "deeds of darkness" to hundreds of others who were not permitted to hear him before.

Ronayne does his work thoroughly, and no one can question his thorough preparation for it. May the Spirit of the living God give him to fully understand Christ and his work, and to clearly discriminate between true Christianity and the "truth as it is in Jesus," and its false representations as seen in the conduct of thousands of its professed devotees. Earnest natures often make "shipwreck" just here. May this brother continue to see clearly and be long spared to wield the thunderbolts of God's truth against the dark dens of iniquity. M.

Correspondence

Another Confession of Masonry.

Hamburg, Ia., Dec. 11, 1876.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

A stray copy of your valuable paper fell into my hands, and in looking over the contents I found an article by Gen. J. W. Phelps concerning the burial of President Roberts of Liberia, in which it is said that Masonry is a very undesirable element in the education of a new country; that it is a relic of paganism, and it was a great oversight, therefore, in the managers of the colony in admitting Freemasonry into it.

It cannot be denied that the teachings of Masonry and paganism are the same in many respects. I have taken seven degrees in Masonry and I frankly confess that they are alike in many respects. It is to be deplored that it is so. I had been taught to believe that Masonry was a good institution; not a saving. but a good, moral institution, or fraternity of brothers banded together for the elevation and civilization of mankind. That men and Masons should be teaching heathen doctrines as old as Herodotus is to be greatly deplored, and should not only receive our condemnation, but every Christian of every name and order should not only discountenance it, but use the utmost endeavors to open the eyes of the world to this great evil.

CHARLES CARMAN.

OUR MAIL.

J. B. Stark, Edwards' Station, Illinois, writes:

"Many seem surprised that any one dares to say or do anything against Masonry. I am fully convinced that I ought to do all I can to help on the good cause."

Philip Kribs, Lamartine, Pa., writes:

"There are many anti-secret men and women about here, but no workers."

All who prize the privileges they enjoy in this country should do good to others as they have opportunity.

J. S. Sherk, Cromwell, Ind., writes:

"My trust is in God and his Word, and I am determined to do all I can in the warfare against lodge-rule, corruption and fraud. The majority of the people of this community are opposed to secret societies, but are fearful timid and backward. They lack moral courage."

Do they not also lack information? We find that a great deal of timidity is the result of ignorance.

J. M. Oxley, Philo, O., writes:

"I have lived in this locality about six months and have received the Cynosure regularly. I have circulated my papers and between three and five hundred anti-secret circulars, through the surrounding country, and I think they have been a blessing to the neighborhood. Three Odd-fellows told me that they would leave the lodge for they believed it had no Christianity in it, and two Masons also said the same."

Wm. Hosford, Grove City, Kansas, writes:

"We expect to hold a semi-annual meeting of the State Christian Association opposed to secret societies, in the Reformed Presbyterian church on the line between Jefferson and Jackson counties in this State, in the month of December or January next, and the ministry favorable to the cause are going to make a rally throughout the State this winter."

It is cheering to receive such good news from both Kansas and Nebraska.

James Shigley, Hart, Mich., writes:

"I love the principles the Cynosure promulgates and I will do all I can for it."

E. W. Bruce, Hickory Corners, Mich., writes:

The car is moving here and we are joyous over future prospects. We expect C. A. Blanchard at our State meeting."

G. W. Rose, Guthrie Center, Ia., writes:

"It is a source of great comfort to me to read what mighty things are being done for the overthrow of the great monster, secrecy."

Chas. Mulholland, W. Lorne, Ontario, writes:

"I consider the Cynosure the best paper published that I am acquainted with. I live in the midst of a hot-bed of secrecy, and stand alone in opposition to its blasphemous as well as idolatrous and pagan ceremonies. When the Odd-fellows of this village organized their lodge over a year ago, they borrowed several cattle chains from one of our merchants for the night. It was a mystery to all outsiders who knew anything about it, what they did with those cattle chains, until I was wicked enough to inform on the three-link brethren. Not many days after the above affair transpired some of our citizens were not a little surprised to see a new 'coffin' leave one of our undertaker shops (or rather see that it was gone) and no person dead that could be heard of to put into it. But it was not long until it leaked out that it, the 'coffin,' belonged to the Odd-fellows Then, of course, I had to tell the use they put it to in the lodge. The aforementioned merchant told me himself that he sold them the trimmings for the coffin, and lent them his ox chains."

E McCoy, Union City, Mich., writes:

"I pray God that he will bless all those who are laboring to overthrow all secret societies, that have long been a curse to the world, and a hindrance to the spread of the religion of Jesus Christ."

A lady sends for a copy of the Cynosure and writes:

"I found a piece of one and was so much pleased with it that I cannot feel satisfied until I know more of it My husband, I regret to say, is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and until his connection with it was an upright, Christian man, but he is very different now, and if your Association will be the means of breaking up secret organizations, you will bring comfort and peace to many a sorrowful home."

Noah Littlefield, Jordan township, Jasper Co., Ind., writes:

"Our Conference sent us this year a preacher who has tried to hold a protracted meeting at a place called Green Schools. He has made a total failure. One day when he was at my house I showed him the Cynosure that had 'Freemasonry at a Glance' in it, and asked him if it was correct. He said some of it was. The way was then open for a discussion. Before I got through with him he owned to me that he had been in both the Freemason and Odd-fellow lodge. I then asked him if our Conference sent Freemasons to preach the Gospel when it is directly opposed to the principles of the U. B. Church. He said if they knew that a man was such he would be thrown out of work. I long to see the time when Baal shall be rooted out of our churches all over the land, and a full surrender made to Christ; then the car-wheel of salvation will begin to roll."

S. E. Orvis, Waukesha, Wis., writes:

"In our literary meeting next Monday evening the subject of secret societies is up for debate, and I am on as leading disputant in affirmative of their antagonism to the best interests of mankind."

Dr. S. L. Cook, Albion, Ind., writes:

"I am lecturing every night. Am working in Lagrange and Noble counties."

Thos. H. Langley, Washington, D. C., writes:

"I have long been grieved to see persons who belonged to the Christian church after they become Masons substitute Masonry for religion."

Thos. A. Falt, Cherry Vale, Kansas, writes:

"I shall stand up for Christ against wickedness wherever it may be found, let them say what they will; for I can truly say that I am saved by the precious blood of Jesus."

A student, Hillsdale, Mich., sends fifty cents to send the Cynosure to the Reading Room of Hillsdale College, and writes:

"I would send for one year if I had the money. I know that your paper could not find a place where it would do more good than here."

Will not the example of this student excite others, who are able, to supply college and other reading rooms with the Cynosure?

J. H. H. Woodward, Cincinnati, Ohio, writes:

"I voted for Walker and Kirkpatrick, but do not find my vote reported for them from Hamilton county, in the published official list. What does it mean?"

We suppose it means that you voted one of the tickets of the lot first sent out, which were not printed according to the laws of Ohio, and hence thrown out.

Mrs. S. G. Reed, Hannibal, N. Y., writes:

"If women voted I would have cast one vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick if it had been the only one in the county. I am weak but the Lord is strong He is able to raise up strong men to overthrow the strongholds of Satan, for which I continually pray."

Alexander Russell, Phœnixville Pa., sends two new subscriptions and writes:

"I am now seventy-six years old and have fought Freemasonry since 1827. I am now hardly able to walk. * * My hands are palsied or I would would write more."

If Mr. Russell under these circumstances can send us two new subscriptions, how many can you send?

Thos. Ginn, Geneva Lake, Wis., writes:

"I love the good cause you have espoused. We have had three M. E ministers in succession who are Masons; a few out-spoken Anti-masons and a great many silent ones. We need Ronayne here very much"

W. S. Spooner, Hebron, Neb, writes:

"The anti-secrecy cause in Nebraska is in a very backward state at present, but there are a few of us here who can feel free to labor in the good cause. I propose to get a club of Cynosure subscribers as soon as possible, and by correspondence and concert of action to secure a State organization as soon as possible."

Geo. W. Taylor, Gibsonburg, O., writes:

"The village of Gibsonburg is getting plenty of secret society men. I hope that some good lecturer will come to this section of the country this winter and stir up those who are saying so much in favor of secrecy. I think some of them would sing a different tune."

The Sabbath School.

THE SABBATH-SCHOOL.

The fifty-third and last lesson of the year for Dec. 30th is an Annual Review or a special lesson selected by each school. As many schools will probably select some Scripture suitable for the close of the year, we give instead of a lesson outline a selection suited to the season, which will be profitable to all Sabbath-school teachers.

A THOUGHT FOR THE SEASON.

Business men just now are busy. The end of the year is a time for reckoning results and arranging for new efforts. Books must be balanced, and accounts of stock taken. Partners congratulate each other on success, or devise plans more successfully to prevent loss. With Sabbath-school workers the close of the year and the beginning of another is a time for thought, a time for looking both backward and forward. A year's work is done; be it well or ill, it cannot be undone. The profit or loss is entered up. The evil influence exerted must work its effect. The opportunities lost cannot be recalled. Another year however opens and brings other opportunities. Forgetting those things that are behind press forward to those that are before. In one sense the things behind should not be forgotten. They are our lessons or our teachers. Their experience is added to our working capital. The present is a time for looking into the year's work and weighing its results. If we have failed there is a cause of failure; if we have succeeded the ground of success should be our own. If the school is disorderly, if the class is where it was, if no scholar has been brought to Christ, if our own heart has grown cold, we should go on our knees to the bottom of the trouble, that next year may not tell the same story. If a blessing has been with us bless God and be sure we do not let it go. With some success and failure have been combined, but each single case may be studied by itself and may throw its light on some dark places in the coming year. With some discouragements prevail. They count up only losses and see only the prospect of loss before them. Like the disciples on Lake Gennesaret they go on because the Lord has bid them, but the storms beat and the winds are contrary and they wonder that through so many long watches the Master does not come to them. Ship-masters of to-day sail by the sun. Christ is the Christian's light; his Sun of Righteousness. Each day, as the ship-master turns his instruments to the sun, so should the Christian find himself and regulate his course by Christ. That his heaven has been overcast, and he has run without reckoning only makes an observation more important. Let this, by God's grace be a time for accurate reckoning for the correction of errors, and for a full understanding of our future course. —Sabbath-School Monthly.

The wonderful popularity of Mr. Sankey's hymns in the great revival in Scotland is quite a phenomenon. So says a Scotch paper. Their popularity is the more remarkable, since hymns have hitherto never taken a very deep hold of the Scottish mind. "In one short half-year a set of hymns and tunes have sprung to a place which even the songs of Burns hardly reached in their palmiest days. You hear them in drawing-rooms, in workshops, in dressmakers' rooms, in Sunday-schools, and at prayer-meetings; you hear them hummed by the thoughtless gamin, and accompanied with the concertina by the itinerant street-singer; the fisherman in his boat, the ploughman in the field, the mother lulling her infant, all resort to them; north and south, east and west, nothing is so popular as Sankey's hymns. Apart from its religious significance, this is a remarkable phenomenon in an intellectual point of view. What a power must be in any set of songs that acquire so wide and so sudden a popularity!" Well, what songs is Mr. Sankey singing? None other, we believe, than such as are heard in our own schools every Sunday.—Ex.

THE MAJESTY OF BIBLE PRECEPTS.—There is no weakness in them. No one of them is emasculated by the modern prefix, "try." The Bible says, "Cleanse your hands ye sinners, and purify your hearts ye double-minded." "Cease to do evil, learn to do well." "Depart from evil, and do good." And thus through the whole book, from Genesis to Revelation, a moral precept is never prefixed with the enfeebling "try," now so universally common. Just think of the Bible saying, try to depart from evil! Try to cleanse your hands ye sinners! Try to speak the truth to one another! And instead of "Do not kill," "Do not steal," "Do not commit adultery," suppose we had, do try not to kill, do try not to steal, do try not to commit adultery! It is time to stop recommending experimenting in morals. None of it is from above. It is all from beneath, a device from the devil to break down the force and majesty of the precepts of the Bible. That glorious book never uses the word 'try' in any such connection. It knows nothing of experimental morals. "Try" is never properly used except where a failure may be justifiable. A failure in morals never was, and never can be justified.—Baptist Union.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DEC. 21, 1876.

MOODY'S LATEST AND BEST AGAINST SECRETISM.

The great evangelist has again lifted up his voice against the abominations of secret lodges. It was in Farwell Hall during the afternoon meeting of December 14th. His theme was "Walking with God." He mentioned as one of the conditions separation from the ungodly, quoting Paul, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." These words, he said, must mean something, and he made three distinct applications of them: as forbidding business partnerships with unbelievers, entering the marriage relation with an unbeliever, and joining secret lodges. On the last topic he said: "I expect I will be treading on some one's toes, perhaps some in the audience, and perhaps some of these ministers; but out with it. I do not see how any Christian, most of all a Christian minister, can go into these secret lodges with unbelievers. They say they can have more influence for good, but I say they can have more influence for good by staying out of them, and then reproving their evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than Lot had. If twenty-five Christians go into a secret lodge with fifty who are not Christians, the fifty can vote anything they please, and the twenty-five will be partakers of their sins. They are unequally yoked together with unbelievers. "But," says some one, "what do you say about these secret temperance orders?" I say the same thing. Do no evil that good may come. You never can reform anything by unequally yoking yourself with ungodly men. True reformers separate themselves from the world. "But," you say, "you had one of them in your church." So I did, but when I found out what it was I cleaned it out like a cage of unclean birds. They drew in a lot of young men of the church in the name of temperance, and then they got up a dance and kept them out till after twelve at night. I was a partaker of their sins because I let them get into the church; but they were cleaned out, and they never came back. This idea of promoting temperance by yoking oneself up in that way with ungodly men is abominable. The most abominable meeting I ever attended was a temperance meeting in England. It was full of secret societies and there was no Christianity about it. I felt as though I had got into Sodom and got out as soon as I could. A man rescued from intemperance by a society not working on Gospel principles gets filled with pride and boasts about reforming himself. Such a man is harder to save than a drunkard. "But, Mr. Moody," some say, "if you talk that way you will drive all the members of secret societies out of your meetings and out of your churches." But what if I do? Better men will take their places. Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who are separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up."

This is a brief and imperfect report of the words of Mr. Moody, spoken in his earnest, almost impassioned manner. They were not lost on the audience. One good brother twice shouted Amen, and two or three times low bursts of applause rippled over the crowded house, the only applause that was heard during the meeting.

THE BALLOT-BOX AND MR. MOODY.

We have published from Rev. Messrs. Faris, McCain and others, articles in condemnation of the ballot-box. Another able article has just been handed me by the Junior editor which has been waiting some time for intended insertion: but as we have published already strong articles of the same tenor, and as we wish, in justice to our readers to avoid denominational discussions, I have advised against inserting this article. Meantime, out of respect to the writer, I will insert extracts presenting his views of the ballot-box and Mr. Moody. The writer says:

"Reforms can gain nothing at the ballot-box. It is not an instrumentality ordained of God to work reform. If it were, the Bible would have definitely referred to it. It (the ballot-box) is not spiritual. It is carnal; a scheme devised by carnal minds * * * and, being carnal it is enmity to the law of God. It is not subject to his law neither, indeed, can be."

Now I shall not assail the Covenanter doctrine, but simply state the doctrine of the Cynosure from its first number which is this: Civil government, i. e., "The powers that be" (Rom. 13) is ordained of God. The ballot box is merely the mode of exercising "the powers that be." It is not "definitely" referred to in the Bible, neither is the "session" of a Covenanting church. The word "session" is not in the Bible, Greek or English. But eldership is a Bible institution, and "session" means a 'sitting' of elders; just as the ballot-box is a tool or instrument of popular election, which is God's institution sanctioned by his prophet Samuel. The Hebrew kings were elective. "The people came to Gilgal to make a king." God sanctioned their choice if their king "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord." And the Son of God was called after one of those kings, "The Son of David."

The Cynosure therefore goes for "the powers that be," and Scripture "eldership"; and the ballot-box is just as much in the Bible as is the session. Neither is there in name; but both in fact. And as the Cynosure from the first number has held and taught both, it will not go back on popular elections nor on Bible elders, believing both to be "ordained of God." See 1 Sam. x. 24 and Acts xiv. 23.

Now, to save anybody writing articles which we shall not publish, I will state, fairly, that I have met the doctrine of Garrison & Co. years since, which was that civil government, granted to Israel by God through Samuel, was a thing that Christians should come out of and despise, "as carnal," because Israel "sinned in asking a king."

The fact is true, but Garrison's no-government inference from it is false. Samuel was told by God to give them a king. He did so, and the people elected him by acclamation, (1 Samuel, chapter 10.) And those who refused to receive civil government as given by Samuel, are called "Sons of Belial."

We cannot re-open this great discussion. The Cynosure has held to civil government and popular election as "ordained of God" by Samuel; just as it has held to Bible elders. It teaches that "the powers that be are ordained of God." That the civil magistrate is the "minister of God for good," "a revenger to execute wrath;" that he is to be obeyed, till he violates his charter by commanding sin; when he is to be resisted and we are to "obey God rather than man." And if we are right, then God has ordained popular election, and the ballot-box, as the necessary tool and implement of popular election, is included in the sanction of Holy writ. As the Cynosure was started on this doctrine, and as the National Christian Association, and the great anti-secret masses have sanctioned this doctrine and acted on it, if we conclude we are mistaken and that we must go back on the ballot-box, as "carnal," and "enmity to God," we shall fairly notify our subscribers of the change in our views. Meantime we shall, as we have done on this subject, give every good man a hearing as far as the size of the paper will admit.

MR. MOODY.

Our writer says: "Either all the efforts of the anti-lodge reformers are 'fuss and feathers,' or he (Mr. Moody) has a fearfully queer way of doing it, by advising his converts to attach themselves to churches whose officers have invoked on themselves double damnation, by drinking wine from the skull of a dead man; and who have blackened their souls, and deadened their moral sensibilities by taking profane and blasphemous and ungodly oaths * * * and by commending them to the spiritual guidance of and association with those who have denied the Lord Jesus Christ before men,'—and thus "yoked them unequally with unbelievers, infidels, snd sons of Belial," etc., etc.

Now this writer does injustice to the position of Mr. Moody. In Philadelphia, New York and Chicago he quoted this very text, and condemned Christians being "yoked with unbelievers" in the lodge. In Chicago he has gone further, and cited Christ's example against lodge-secrecy; and, at the top of his voice, and with great energy, called out for "Separation! separation! SEPARATION!" from the world in general and the lodges in particular. This is his duty and his whole duty. Mr. Moody is not a pastor but an evangelist. He is moderator of no session; presides statedly at no communion table, and is responsible to God for the discipline of no particular church. An "evangelist" is a Gospel-man, and when he sets Christ's Gospel square against evils and sins he has done his duty, and if the pastors and churches whom he teaches do theirs, then the world's evils and those who practice them, will be separated from the body of Christ which is his church. Now churches in Chicago are said have deacons who are Masons. If so, that is direct in the teeth and eyes of Mr. Moody's teaching. Those deacons have no more right to go to the lodge and the communion table, than their wives have a right to have paramours in addition to their husbands. For the lodge worship, being Christless, is spiritual adultery. And Mr. Moody has only done a plain duty in calling for "Separation! separation! SEPARATION!"

And for the readers of the Cynosure, they could not easily commit a worse mistake than to abuse this great man of God, whom God has taken, as he did David, "from the sheep-cote" of an obscure and lowly beginning to teach nations as David did.

On the contrary we must pray for him, and glorify Christ's great power in him, and, if need be, "teach him the way of God more perfectly." For "He is a good man, full of the Holy Ghost and of faith, and much people are turned to the Lord." To Christ be all the glory. Amen.

Some good friends, who don't like to hurt anybody's feelings while cutting off their lodge vices, say that Moody did just the right thing in his last remarks,—nobody would take offense. Vain hope! Right in the audience were women whose prejudices were stronger than their good breeding, for they kept up an indignant whispering at the remarks. A Royal Arch Baptist minister could hardly rest that night for what he termed "one of the most disgraceful speeches he ever heard." And in the Tribune of Monday some one ashamed of his name, but signing himself "A Minister," openly attacks Mr. Moody for uncharitableness and "bitter and censorious" speaking. Devils "believe and tremble" but they never showed any satisfaction after meeting Jesus Christ when he was on earth.

Bishop Fallows.

"The Right Reverend Samuel Fallows, D. D.," has a church in Chicago. He has been on the front of the Tabernacle platform, aiding in the Moody meetings. The Voice of Masonry for December inst., tells us that Bishop Fallows made a speech in Oriental Hall, Chicago, Nov. 9th last, at a "Lodge of Intelligence" formed by leading Masons in the city of Chicago. The object of this new Masonic movement, as stated in the notice, is "To prove that there is something connected with it (Masonry) of greater importance and deeper significance than the mere forms and ceremonies through which the initiate passes;" and which Mr. Ronayne is making known to the world. In short, this new "Lodge of Intelligence" is a new trick of the exposed harlot of the lodge; and this Bishop Fallows is the first speaker selected to lead this forlorn hope movement. We believe this Right Reverend Prelate, who is still a young man, has been a member of one or two churches, and was, like McLaren, an Episcopalian of a very brief period, when he grasped the crozier in the Cheney or Reformed Episcopal church. How low down he has gone in the lodge we know not. But that he can be fraternizing and conspiring with the lodges of Chicago while the Moody revivals are going on; that he should be selected to prove that the real benefits of Masonry are not in the ritual which they have sworn to conceal as the thing of most importance in their lodges; that he should lend himself to this new device of the order to keep up public confidence and "the dues," proves that this Right Reverend Bishop has the heart of an harlot in the bosom of a man.

At that very "Lodge of Intelligence," and in connection with Bishop Fallows' speech on "The need of Masonry," a poem on the same subject by Rounseville, was read and is printed in the Voice of December. This poem argues, that, because Cain killed Abel, "there was need of something more" than God gave to man by Adam. That because Aaron made a calf "there was need of something more than God gave by Moses;" and that because Judas betrayed and Peter denied Christ:

"It needed something more than Gospel law
The callous soul of Judas forth to draw."

And the poem then goes on to present Masonry as "needed" to supply the defects of every revelation the infinite God has made to men.

This is the very ear-mark and shoulder-mark of Satan on the lodge. "Yea hath God said" so and so, and then the serpent proceeded to make betterments upon the works of the Almighty! So this poem, most unblushingly, presents the lodge as superior to all the moral light given to man by his Maker!

There are some good ministers in the Reformed Episcopal church who abhor the blasphemies and idolatry of the lodge. But if this Bishop Fallows has been hoisted into the Bishopric in that church by his Freemasonry, as McLaren seems to have been into the same office in the church from which Rev. Mr. Cheney and others have come out, Episcopal prospects in Illinois are gloomy indeed. Infant baptismal regeneration is no worse, at least, than regeneration by blue-lodge Masonry, which claims to free a man from sin (Mac. Lex., Art. Acacian) and to send a Mason to heaven no matter how he has lived or died.

Hon. Samuel D. Greene.—This venerable and truly honorable man, we hear incidentally, is in straitened circumstances. He is 89 years old next February, and has been preserved almost by miracle, to give his testimony to the world against the "Image of the beast" of the Apocalypse; one of the three final battle-fields of Satan on this earth.

Mr. Greene has his biography written out at large, including a religious experience like Paul's, striking and almost miraculous. This experience in his bosom, was the standard which God's Spirit lifted up against the enemy of God and man, who had "come in like a flood." A dollar each from the Anti-masons would, with Mr. Greene's frugal management, and that of his careful wife, make his last days comfortable; and thousands who have read his books would be glad to help him. We give this information without his knowledge or consent; hoping that these few words will lead either to the purchase of his manuscripts or some other effectual mode of relief.

—Bro. Stoddard and Past Master Ronayne are this week in Pittsburgh. The good reports of their work in various places given in this number will encourage every reader, and are promise of great meetings in the "Iron City." It is possible that both will attend the Indiana State Convention next week. The work in that State would have a new impulse from their presence.

—Dr. S. L. Cook has been doing a good work in Indiana all through the fall, though we partly believe the friends in that State have not reported all of them. Bear in mind, friends, that a good report of a good meeting, promptly sent, adds wonderfully to its usefulness for the reform.

—Bro. Kiggins writes from Kansas, desiring the republication of articles on "Christmas" printed a year or two since. The excellent articles reprinted from the United Presbyterian, will be sufficient on this subject we hope. Let no reader pass them by on account of their seeming length. Their interesting facts and logical style make them attractive, aside from the universal interest in the topic discussed. Let no family to which the Cynosure comes fail to have the scope of this argument understood by all its members. We are compelled to leave the concluding portion till next week from pressure of other matter.

Hammond's History.—Can any reader of the Cynosure inform me by letter where I can find a copy of "Hammond's Political History of N. Y." I wish to consult it on some matters connected with the history of the State from 1826 to 1833. J. P. Stoddard,

"WEAR OUT."

"Wear out!" but never let the rust
Of idleness corrode the trust
Your Maker gave; your part to play
In the great drama of "To-day"
Is to deal justly; aid the weak:
Ever for right and wisdom speak;
Keep burning clear Truth's beacon light,
That like a radiance through the night
Be to the lost on life's bleak moor
Like Bethlehem's star that shone of yore,
Guiding the shepherds on their way
To where the child-redeemer lay.

"Wear out!" 'tis nobler far to bear
On breast and brow the marks of care,
Scars of life's conflict bravely fought;
Patents of peerage, fairly bought;
Titles to claim in the fair clime
Of those who worship truth sublime;
E'en if your feet have never trod
The narrow path that leads to God,
Avoid, as death, the scorner's seat,
Nor let his sandals press your feet,
With contrite heart and tearful eye,
Stand still while the elect pass by.

"Wear out!" though stern your features grow,
Though raven locks be turned to snow,
On to the front! no laggard be,
With sturdy blows comes victory!
Shame on the weak, the nerveless hand,
That cannot grasp truth's shining brand;
That shrinks when from fair freedom's tower
The tocsin sounds the trial hour;
That fails when justice calls, to go
With battle-axe and bended bow,"
And prove, upon his native sod,
His fealty to man and God!

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS IN WEST AFRICA.

It is now nearly four hundred years since the first attempt was made to introduce Christianity into the western portion of Africa. The summary of Christian missions on this coast may be given in a few words. The Roman Catholics came first. In 1481 the King of Portugal sent ten ships with five hundred soldiers, one hundred laborers, and a proper complement of priests as missionaries to Elmina. The Romish missions thus founded lingered on for a period of two hundred and forty-one years, till at last, in 1723, that of the Capuchins at Sierra Leone was given up, and they disappeared altogether from West Africa. They had made no impression except upon their immediate dependents, and what impression they made on them was soon totally obliterated. Protestant missionary attempts were commenced by the Moravians in 1736, one hundred and forty years ago, and continued till 1770. Five attempts cost eleven lives without visible results. The Wesleyans followed next. In the minutes of the Conference of 1792, we first find Africa on the list of the Wesleyan missionary stations, Sierra Leone being the part occupied. In the minutes for 1796 we find the names of A. Murdock and W. P. Patton set down as missionaries to the Foulah country in Africa, to which service they were solemnly set apart by Conference. The Church Missionary Society sent out its first missionaries in 1804. They established and attempted to maintain stations among the aborigines, but they could make no progress owing to the hostility of the natives, who preferred the slave-traders to them. The missionaries were forced to take refuge in Sierra Leone, the only place where, at that time, they could labor with safety and hope. The Basle Missionary Society—one of the most successful on the coast—had their attention directed to Western Africa as early as 1826. But it was not until 1828 that their first company of missionaries reached Christianburg, near Akra, the place where the Moravians had attempted to occupy more than thirty years previously. The United Presbyterian Synod of Scotland commenced a mission on the Old Calabar River, in the Gulf of Benin, in April, 1846. Five denominations of American Christians — Baptists, Methodists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Lutherans — are represented on the coast in Liberia, at Lagos, the Island of Coresco, and Gaboon. The first American Mission was established on the coast in 1822. Now, what has been the outcome of these missionary operations? The results thus far achieved are in many respects highly interesting and important. At the European settlements established at various points along the coast from Senegal to Loando, and that the purely native stations occupied by the Niger [native] missionaries, the Scotch missionaries and the American missionaries, some thousands of natives, having been brought under the immediate influence of Christian teaching, have professed Christianity and, at the European settlements, have adopted European dress and habits. Numerous churches have been organized and are under a native ministry, and thousands of children are gathered into schools under Christian teachers.—Frazer's Magazine.

A WOMAN ON WOMEN.

Women have their own place both in nature and society—a place beautiful, important, ennobling, and delightful, if they would but think so, if they would but care to make it so. But with the curse of discontent resting upon them from the beginning, they prefer to spoil the work of men rather than try to perfect their own. Say, of their own special work, what is perfected to such a high degree of excellence as warrants their leaving it to take care of itself while they go to manipulate something else? The servant question in all its branches harasses and annoys every one; but this, essentially a woman's question, a circumstance of that part of life which is organized, administered, and for the larger proportion fulfilled by women, is professedly in a state of chaos and disorder, paralleled by none other of our social arrangements. The extravagance of living, of dress, of appointments, which is one part of the servant disorder because maids, being women, will trick themselves out in finery to attract as much admiration as their mistresses, and men, being animals, will gorge themselves where the masters feast—whence do these come save from women, rulers of society, regulators of modes and fashions as they are? Do the husbands order the dinners, or decide on the length of the train and the fashion of the dress? If ladies chose that the rule of life should be one of noble simplicity, beautiful, artistic, full of meaning and delight, the false ornament and meretricious excess with which we are overweighted now would fall from us, and this servant question among others would get itself put straight. It is a matter of fashion, not necessity, and the mot d'ordre comes from above. But where is the spirit of organization, the resolution to meet difficulties, the courage of self-control, through which alone great movements are made and great reforms are led? The women who want to influence the councils of the empire, to have a voice in the making of laws which are to touch and reconcile contending interests, to help in the elucidation of difficult points, the administration of doubtful cases, see the servants standing in a disorganized mob at the gates of the social temple, and are unable to suggest any thing whereby they may be brought to content and order. But at the same time, the women who complain of their own stunted lives, and who demand leave to share the lives and privileges of the men, deny the right of their maids to live up to a higher standard, so far as they themselves are concerned, and hold the faith that service practically should mean servitude.—Belgravia.

COURAGE.

Have the courage to discharge a debt while you have the money in your pocket. Have the courage to do without what you do not need, however your eyes may covet it. Have the courage to speak your mind when necessary, and to hold your tongue when prudent. Have the courage to speak to a friend in a "seedy coat," even though you are in company with a rich one, and richly attired. Have the courage to make a will and a just one, before your dying hour. Have the courage to tell a man why you will not lend him your money. Have the courage to cut the most agreeable acquaintance you have, when you are convinced that he lacks principle. "A friend should bear with a friend's infirmities, but not with his vices. Have the courage to show your respect for honesty in whatever guise it appears; and your contempt for dishonest duplicity, by whomsoever exhibited. Have the courage to wear your old clothes until you pay for your new ones. Have the courage to obey your Maker at the risk of being ridiculed by man. Have the courage to prefer comfort and propriety to fashion in all things. Have the courage to acknowledge your ignorance, rather than to seek credit for knowledge under false pretences.

Have the courage to stand for God, even if you have to stand alone. Have the courage to say nothing when you have nothing to say. Have the courage to remain "on the fence" as long as the mud is knee deep on both sides. Have the courage of two evils to choose the least, but of two wrongs to choose neither. Have the courage to believe in God with all your heart, and to own his name everywhere.—The Christian.

WHAT AM I DOING FOR THE SALVATION OF OTHERS.

I profess to love Jesus, to hope in him, to wish to be like him. Am I like him in doing good? He came to save souls. Am I trying to bring souls to him? And if not, why not?

The greater number of my acquaintances are candidates for eternal woe, and I know it.

I cannot say that I have no opportunity of telling them of their danger and Jesus' dying love. I am alone with some of them nearly every day. And funerals, accidents, sudden deaths, solemn sermons, and many other occurrences afford favorable occasions for inviting them to Jesus.

But then I am not gifted; I cannot talk with the unconverted about their souls. Ah, am I sure of this? I can talk freely on any other subject. Have I fairly tested myself in this matter?

But I am afraid my conduct will not agree with what I say. Then I must be more consistent. If I am trying to do my duty, will not men see that I am sincere and listen to my testimony for Jesus? If I make my inconsistency an excuse for being more inconsistent, do I not dishonor my Master, and endanger my soul?

But I don't have that enjoyment in religion, or that desire to do good that I should. Did I ever hear of Christian enjoyment other than in the endeavor to do known duty? To glorify God is to enjoy him. If I wish more faith and more love I must not only pray for them, but put what I have into exercise.

But I feel too timid. Yet, what do I fear? The face of man? The Lord is on my side. A repulse? Perhaps, after all, my friend is wishing, or at least willing that I should speak. But if not, should I not, in God's strength, do my duty, and let God take care of the result?

I hope to feel better and do better sometime. But when? Why not now? "The night cometh when no man can work."

Lord help me to resolve,

1. To pray more for my unconverted friends.

2. To ask God to show me my duty to them personally, and help me to do it.

Has he not said of him I leave unwarned to sink into hell, "His blood will I require at thy hand?"

Has he not promised, "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and forever?"

May God help me to prove for myself his words,

"Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters."

Religion ought to learn from science the practical methods which may improve moral and spiritual training, the instrumentalities by which war, poverty, crime and injustice may be removed or lessened, the kingdom of heaven be brought down to earth, and the truth of a universal divine Fatherhood be verified by the experience of our race.

Children's Corner.

A Little Prayer.

O Thou who in Jerusalem
Didst little children take,
And laid them in Thy bosom,
And on them blessings spake,
And looked and smiled upon them
So sweet and joyously,
And said to their fond mothers,
"Of such my kingdom be."

We're told thy heart's a fountain
Of grace to children dear;
A sea of love, an ocean,
Of which we love to hear.
O dearest Savior, hear us!
Thy love on us bestow,
That we in life may serve Thee,
At death unto Thee go.

Oh, love us, love us, Jesus!
We little children be;
See us bowed at Thy footstool,
Our eyes raised up to Thee.
We would be in Thy bosom,
And there be blessed by Thee:
Heirs of Thy kingdom make us.
Amen So let it be.

The Children's Centennial Letter.

In the railway carriage we can ride in such comfort with our cushioned seats or in the Pullman sleeping cars. The worst of traveling which you young folks know is the distance from your homes to the station, but I can remember when the stage coach was the best conveyance to be had, and your grandfathers often have been upset in the muddy road and have had to walk a mile or two probably when the horses could not do more than drag the empty coach through the mire. And then the time it took! But now we growl if we don't go in an hour a distance which then took a day. But really we go too fast when we pass by rail through fine scenery which we would like to enjoy.

Thus it is as our train runs among the mountains along the Baltimore and Ohio railway. Sometimes bleak and dreary enough if one should think of living there; but again so picturesque and grand that no wonder your admiration draws forth its praises. We ran along the side of the mountain which towers above us on the left and falls deep down to the narrow valley on the right, into which some cars had tumbled and been wrecked, but I did not get particulars. Now we are surrounded by hills; again have glimpses of charming vales and fruitful fields. What's the matter? startled at entering a tunnel? Yes, we have more than one on the way: but perhaps that village so peacefully nestling beside the beautiful river amid such a variety of scenery, is the most interesting one to the patriotic traveler, for it is a name which has become historical in connection with the chivalrous John Brown, whose "body lies mouldering in the grave" near Harper's Ferry, but whose soul is marching along as the very spirit of freedom over our country. Of course all of you know the story of John Brown. It will be known hereafter for many generations.

It was something new to some of you to see stone walls for fences and the canal with its slow boats but when we got into Ohio we had fine undulating land and better farming, while the stations were found to average about six miles apart; a proof of the general fertility of that fine State. Two farmers came on the train with whom I got into conversation and found that one was opposed to secret societies and the other said nothing. Another farmer when asked if he was a member of any secret order slowly replied: "I don't know whether I am or not;" which caused a laugh He gave an explanation which showed that he did not approve of such organizations although he had once been entrapped into one during a time of political excitement many years ago. So you see the effect continued long after the cause had ceased. And thus it is with us all the time, so that we ought to be very careful not to do anything which may cloud our after years, and secret societies are often the cause of such clouds over the happiness of men. Keep yourselves free from all such entanglements, and be free to do right as long as you live.

Look there! Snow is on the ground. The trees — how beautiful they are with every sprig so adorned! As we pass these woods don't it look as if the trees were dancing, and so gracefully dressed in white? And how rapidly they change the figures; quicker than Highlanders can respond to the bagpipes, the darkey to his banjo or the witches in Calloway Kirk ere they pursued luckless Tam O'Shanter! Let us however rather people our remaining woods with the fancies of the extinct races of our poor Indians in whose behalf, dear young friends, I beseech your warmest sympathies and future labors Let them be protected not devoured by our Eagle. Let them have the right to appeal to our laws and let it not forever be a record against our country that we destroyed life which we might have saved and civilized as successfully as our Canadian neighbors have done and are doing. "Dare to do right, dare to be true."

But we are getting near our home and we shall now say good-bye, for our friends will be waiting our arrival and there is always much confusion at the depot. Our trip is ended; and so when the journey of life is over may we all have the blessed hope of going to that home of "many mansions" which Jesus has prepared for his people

"That's How!"

After a great snow-storm, a little fellow began to shovel a path through a large snow-bank before his grand-mother's door. He had nothing but a small shovel to work with

"How do you expect to get through that drift?" asked a man passing along.

"By keeping at it," said the boy cheerfully; "that's how!"

That is the secret of mastering almost every difficulty under the sun. If a hard task is before you, stick to it. Do not keep thinking how large or hard it is, but go at it, and little by little it will grow smaller and smaller, until it is done.

The Three Tentions.

1. Intention.—If a boy has a sum to work out or a lesson to learn by heart, he will not be able to succeed, unless he goes at it with a will, or unless he "intends" to do it.

2. Attention.—If he means his work to be well done, he must withdraw his thoughts from tops, balls, kites, and such things; he must not chatter with his school-fellows, but must, for the time, give his whole mind, or "attend," to the lessons before him.

3. Retention.—It is of little use to learn anything unless we remember it, or "retain" it in the mind.

Room in Heaven.—A little child was dying, and called her mother to her bedside. She had a cross and unsympathetic parent. "Mother," said the child, "is there room for me in heaven? You always said I was in the way here. Will I be in the way there?"

And the poor mother wept bitter tears as she said, "Yes, there will be room for you there."

Home and Farm.

Warm Dwellings.

As the winter approaches I notice that the papers are considerably filled with advice to farmers in favor of providing for the better sheltering of their domestic animals.

I have long thought that much more should be printed in favor of the better sheltering of human animals. For it is well-known that to a large majority of people in this latitude, the winter is a season of positive suffering from cold. This need not be, and, of course, ought not to be; for there are ways to construct houses so that people can pass the winter in perfect comfort, at less expense than is required to live as they now do.

I know of many families who are now enjoying such houses; and who would not be willing to part with them for a large amount of money.

The extra expense of constructing such a house will be refunded to the occupant every year, in the saving of fuel, wherever wood is worth five or six dollars a cord.

"I speak as unto wise men; judge ye what I say." "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

Diphtheria and earache.—If you once nurse your children through a siege of diphtheria, you will know the symptoms next time; the inflamed and ulcerated throat and terribly offensive breath are not to be mistaken. I have doctored my family for this disease every winter, and sometimes in summer, for five years, and my remedy is this: One part pulverized alum, very fine, and six parts pulverized white sugar; mix thoroughly; it must be taken dry, and no water drank immediately after, as drinking would wash the powder off the cankers. If the patient has a high fever, take a dose every half hour, if not much fever, four or five times a day will answer. For an adult, a full teaspoonful of the powder is a dose; for a child ten or twelve years old, half a teaspoonful, and less for younger ones. We also rub some good ointment on the outside of the throat. This remedy was given to me by my brother-in-law, Dr. D. M. Reed, who was a resident of Hickory, Washington county, Pa. He was without doubt the best physician for children that I ever knew, and of adults also. He told me never to be afraid to trust to this remedy, that "if you only commence using it in time it is a sure cure," and so it has proved with us. It has saved us doctor's bills, which for that disease alone in that length of time would have amounted to over one hundred dollars.

Many years ago, two my of children, one aged three, the other one year, had a terrible attack of earache all one day and night. I worked over the little sufferers, doing all I could think of, and trying remedies suggested by our neighbors. On the second morning of the attack, a lady came in, and asked me if I had tried burnt sugar. I told her no, that I had not heard of that. She told me to put some live coals on a tin plate, sprinkle some brown sugar on them, set a funnel over it, and then hold the child so that the smoke could go into the ear. I did so, using the same remedy for both little ones. The result was marvelous; the pain stopped instantly, and soon both little sufferers were in a sound, refreshing sleep.—Josephine C. Long, in the Germantown Telegraph.

To beautify the teeth.—Dissolve two ounces of borax in three pounds of boiling water, and before it is cold, add one teaspoonful of the spirits of camphor; then bottle for use. A tablespoonful of this mixture, mixed with on equal quantity of tepid water and applied daily with a soft brush, preserves and beautifies the teeth, exterpates all tartarous adhesion, arrests decay, induces a healthy action of the gums, and makes the teeth pearly white.

Never strike a horse for shying or starting when an unpleasant object presents itself, nor when his fears are excited. A soothing word, a steady rein, and a gradual introduction to the object which excites the animal will soon teach him to confide in his master and become fearless. We have taken a horse at ten years old, whose nerves were very excitable, and who had become unmanageable and would run away at the sound of or sight of a locomotive or railroad train or any object suddenly presented in the road, and after a few weeks' steady handling and kindly talking to on the road and in the stable had him stand and view an approaching railroad train quietly; a horse which no rein or bit would hold when once excited became manageable with a slack rein and a soothing word.

A dairyman whose attention being called to the fact of an increase in milk the days he gave his cows salt, experimented until he decided that salt given in small quantities every day is the best way. Salt in the morning just before turning them out, a tablespoonful to each cow, and the flow of milk will be considerably increased every day.

Sheep will nibble and pull their own wool when their skin is irritated by lice, ticks, or some disease, such as scab. The irritation may also be caused by too high feeding or a too warm pen. A teaspoonful of sulphur with an equal quantity of cream of tartar and salt given once a day for a week may tend to allay the irritation. If the sheep not take it readily, it should be placed upon the root of the tongue with a spoon, and the mouth held up until it is swallowed.

ELECTION REPORTS.

A final summary of election returns, together with a review of the AMERICAN PARTY AND THE LAST ELECTION will be given next week.

If you do not want the Cynosure yourself, help on the good cause by sending it to your minister or a friend.

ALBANY, Vt., Nov. 20, 1876.

Please inform the readers of the Cynosure if either of the nominees for President or Vice-president belong to any secret organization, for some of our anti-secret men had such a prophetic view of trouble in the camp if Tilden was elected that they voted Republican.

Yours truly,
FRANKLIN PIERCE.

ANS.—Hayes has been an Odd-fellow, and Green Clay Smith is a Good Templar. We do not know that any other of the candidates were members of any secret order.

MASONIC "BULL-DOZING" IN OHIO.

In the last American Freeman, Alexander Needels, a tried friend of our reform and father of the edltor tells how "intimidation" is attempted in Ohio. The story is prefixed with a copy of the Ohio ticket first sent from this office with portraits of the candidates and the list of electors. The account of his arrest and trial he gives in the fololwing:

EDITOR FREEMAN:—I will give you a short article. On the seventh day of November I handed a ticket to the judges for Walker and Kirkpatrick like the one above. On the 9th, about two o'clock, I was arrested with a State warrant, caused by the Masons. I being out of health, not able to go, told the constable I would go next morning. I started to be there against ten o'clock as I agreed. I sent Enoch Bowen ahead, when I got about half way I met him coming back; he told me to wait until Tuesday. I heard no more until I saw the constable on Saturday the 11th, he told me he had broken the law and wished me to go to Marve Lions, (a Masonic Squire), living at Bloomfield, and relieve him, and I told him I would go, and accordingly did. I found the Squire and a number of other gentlemen in the office. In a few minutes after I got there in stepped W. C. Harris, another Mason Squire, and Philander Beard, a Mason lawyer, (a great man, as you are aware) appeared to form a court, without saying anything to me; then asked me when I wanted the trial. I told them the next Saturday, being the 18th. I got a copy of the affidavit, that one John Austin had sworn out, a man I had never seen, that I know of. Everything went off pleasantly. I departed in peace without their asking of me bond or security. I heard no more until in the evening, Mr. Beard sent me word that if I would pay the cost and a little something, they would drop it and say nothing more about it. I told the messenger I would hardly do it to save my own life. I heard no more of importance until Tuesday, the 14th, when I went into the house of Squire Harris to tell him to subpœna some witnesses. He appeared very friendly indeed, asked me to take dinner with him and I did so. After dinner, I asked him who wrote the affidavit; he said Beard. I then asked him who was present. He said no one but himself. I asked him who Mr. Austin was, and was he a Mason. He said he was not. I said, "then only a Jack to bear the burdens for the Masons, but I cannot help but mistrust that he has been stripped, hoodwinked and cabletowed, and bowed the knee to Baal, passed through the Masonic new birth, swore not to tell the good thing to wife or sweetheart, under no less penalty than to have his throat cut across, his tongue torn out by the roots, and his body buried in the rough sands of the sea." I asked Harris who got this thing up, and why it was done? He said, "they said I had said hard things, and now was their turn. Now I acknowledge the hard things I have said and had them published. First, Mr. Beard and myself were talking one day in the tin shop before a number of witnesses, about Masonry; I asked him if their death penalty did not choke him sometimes, he said there were no death penalties. I asked him if I was to understand there was no penalty attached to a Mason's oath, if executed; he raised up and raised his hand and said there was not, brought it down with force, and said he knew whereof he affirmed. Then said, "Uncle Alex. you know nothing about Masonry." I answered not much, but I would give him five dollars to file his affidavit to that. He answered he would not do it. A few days after, I was in Harris' store. He was standing behind the counter, some six or eight men in the room. I was telling the story about Beard. He said if I would give him five dollars that he would file his affidavit that there was none that would produce death. I answered, "enough said," and went and left the money with Squire Lyon, and told him the contract. I left it some eight or ten days. Could not get the affidavit but got the money back. The Squire did not wish to talk about it. I added to it that Harris said he was a Methodist but I would not believe it till I was made to believe that Masonry and lying were associated to Methodism. I again acknowledge they were hard things to publish.

Saturday, Nov 18th. Now three o'clock. Had my trial. They have bound me over to court on a bond of two hundred dollars. Well, I see in the first start that I should have said things that I did not say. I wish it noticed that I am near eighty years old; never was arrested, have set as a juror from first to last some six weeks, never was objected to in but two cases, never bore testimony in county court as a witness, never was called on by Sheriff or Constable for debt, but those ancient and honorable Masons had me arrested for voting for Walker and Kirkpatrick. Now I say to all lovers of the Republican Government, to open their eyes and see whither we are drifting. We are certainly in the hands of these rings. Also to the lovers of Christ I would say it is time we cease paying Mason preachers, especially as members of the M. E. Church.

Although I have spent likely thousands, to help build that church, as it was the church of my choice, but now see I was only helping build up a Mason priesthood. To this end, henceforth I pledge myself, to pay no Mason preacher knowingly. I have told doctors, lawyers and priests that I could prove that speculative Masonry is Anti-christian and Anti-republican, and claimed to fit men for Heaven and for the great Lodge above without Christ. They dare not try me for slander on the old hand-maid. Thus I have drawn great wrath down on myself.

ALEX. NEEDELS.

ALL ALONG THE LINE.

Thos. C. Radabaugh, Cambria Mills, Mich., writes:

"The Masons and jack Masons try to browbeat and skull me for voting the American party ticket. They don't know as yet which of their candidates is elected, and they ask me in a taunting manner how my candidates are getting along. I tell them my candidates are all right and have been elected by overwhelming majorities; that one with God is a majority, and that I knew they received numerous votes and therefore an overwhelming majority was theirs; and more especially if God instead of secret society men was to have the telling of votes."

A. C. Read, West Salem, Ohio, writes:

"We feel that we must buckle on the whole armor and work for the cause of the American party, till we, by God's blessing, bring about a great moral reform."

S. D. P., Albion, Iowa, writes:

"It is almost one month since we cast our votes for President, and yet we are in doubt who it will be, but hope for the best. There is one thing that the citizens of this (Iona) township are not in doubt about and that is in regard to who gained the day in this township, Masons or Anti-masons. Although not in possession of any Anti-masonic tickets for county, State, or United States, some of the good citizens of Albion got together and nominated Anti-masonic township officers and elected them, notwithstanding we had a hard fight for it. * * *

I pray that they may continue to fail here and all over the world till there is not a secret, oath-bound man allowed to hold an office high or low. I hope that other townships will nominate anti-secret candidates, and by the next election put no one in office but non-secret oath-bound men."

Thomas Baldwin, Jonesboro. Ind., writes:

There were two votes polled at Jonesboro, one at Fairmount, and one at Liberty. I have lived sixty-six years, and voted three American tickets, two State and county, one Presidential, and if I live to see another election I intend to pick the flint, and try it again."

J. C. Graham, Viola, Ill., writes:

"Our county papers fail to report any votes in their table of returns, either because our 'Northern Kuklux' failed to return the American vote, or 'intimidation,' I am not informed which. The American ticket is sound; for it embraces sound, live issues; ours a Christian, and not a pagan country; prohibition of rum, and some advances against the 'invisible empire,' our nation's sworn enemy. There is good cheer for the American ticket that I can report. Many, very many Republicans in our county, while voting yet the Republican ticket in this hour of our nation's peril, admit freely the soundness of the American ticket, and many are free to express their opinions that it will take rank yet as a leading party. At this very day there are voters enough in Mercer county, who hate the lodge of secrecy deep down in their hearts for its pernicious fruits so constantly cropping out, to hold firmly the balance of power. All that is lacking is a general awakening to these facts and the necessity for action. It is a notorious fact and ominous for good yet, that you can scarce find a man outside the lodges, but has it fixed in his mind that Freemasonry is a power for evil in all our courts. What our country most needs now is light shed on the fact that our political contest now in array, is a 'Republican government' against the 'invisible empire.' Color it as you may, cover it ever so deep with subterfuge, give it any name you please, the irrepressible conflict in America is 'popular government' against 'imperialism.' Taxation without representation in the struggle for independence—slavery, in the great rebellion, and now 'organized secrecy,' all mean the same thing, Imperialism against Republicanism. Free men! look and see while you may!"

A. F. Stevens, Bedford, Iowa, writes:

"There were four votes cast for the American party, but there was no notice taken of them. I know not whether the trustees of the township failed to report them, or whether the editors of the county papers suppressed them. I know there were other votes cast in the county, but how many I am unable to tell at present; but you may count on four from Ross township, Taylor county. Our number is slowly increasing in this part of the State. One by one they are added to the ranks of anti-secrecy, and one by one the various secret societies are adding to their already long list of crimes and wrong doings. Truly the hand-writing has appeared upon the wall, and the word 'Tekel' is portrayed in bold characters. And if we are but guided by the One who said, 'In secret have I said nothing,' we need have but little fear."

O. Breed, Avery, Jo Daviess Co., Ill., writes:

"A prominent Mason stood at the polls when I folded my ticket to hand in. He said: 'Do you expect to bore a two inch hole with a gimlet?' 'No, Sir, but I expect to bore a deeper hole with a sharp gimlet than you can with a dull two-inch augur.' Keep the ball rolling; we must not despise the day of small things. The truth is mighty, and with the Lord on our side we are sure of victory."

Geo. Mc Elheny, Darlington, Pa., writes:

"I sincerely hope that the course pursued by the Cynosure during the campaign has not alienated any of its friends, nor any of the true friends of the cause it so faithfully advocates. I feel that no lowering of tone or compromise of principle has been made to secure the continued co-operation of the brave ones who hitherto have persevered through all the dark hours of the past."

"John Morrison, Mt. Palatine Putnam county, Ill., writes:

"The Ottawa Republican published that the American party Presidential ticket received fifteen votes in La Salle county, eight of which were cast in the town of Hope. In this town I was overseer of the poor three years ago when Wm. McKinzie the Mason died, and I had to take care of his family."

James S. Hickman, Seemly, Ill., writes:

Iroquois county gave one vote for the American party. Do Republicans think it was throwing away votes, because the first voters at the beginning of the party failed to elect their candidate? The first votes were just as necessary as the last votes that gave Lincoln the majority. Parties, like children when first going to school, have to learn their A B C's. The official vote of Illinois shows that 157 are learning their alphabet. All the weeklies and dailies throughout the State are assisting us to make the school a success by advertising that there is such a school, where anti-secret socicties are both voted for and taught."

Religious Intelligence

—The great evangelical meetings in this city formally closed on Sabbath last with an afternoon meeting for women, and in the evening for men only. Although a heavy snow was falling the vast Tabernable was too small for the crowds. Both services were most impressive. Special meetings for young men, reformed men and all inquirers and young converts will be kept up in the Tabernacle and Farwell Hall this week in which Moody and Sankey assist.

—The Scandinavian Department inconnection with the Baptist Theological Seminary in this city has achieved great success. Between three and four hundred persons have been brought into the church through the efforts of its students; two churches have been formed; several Sunday schools organized and useful publications have been issued.

— A Christian mission has been established among the descendants of the Aztecs in New Mexico. The work is progressing beyond expectation, and the natives are in a fair way to abandon the last forms of heathen dances and devil-worship. The church is crowded every Sabbath with attentive hearers.

— The Connecticut Congregational Conference, at its recent meeting adopted a resolution that " when a church has in its communion a reformed inebriate, to whom the taste or smell of alcoholic wine is perilous, we recommend the use of unfermented wine in its administration of the Lord's Supper."

— In the great revival going on in Philadelphia under Mr. Hammond's preaching, the daily press reports that seven hundred and thirty-five have been examined and signed the covenant, expressing the belief that they have passed from death unto life. The great hall over the Reformed Episcopal Church is too small to hold the crowds. The singing, from the "Song Evangel," by a choir of two hundred, is delightful. In the young converts' meeting, a converted gambler, a converted thief, and a converted actor told the story of their conversions. Many children are giving evidence of a change of heart.

— Dec. 4th, the day of the opening of Congress, a prayer-meeting was held in New York for a blessing on the assembling legislators. A similar meeting was held in Philadelphia, in which a few words from the chairman, Geo. H. Stuart, Esq., were the only "remarks." Prayer and song filled the entire hour. Such was the spirit of the meeting that a continuance of such an observance during the session of Congress, was agreed upon.

News of the Week.

—The Pennsylvania Central railroad is about to begin running a fast train to carry mails and passengers to this city and St. Louis from New York. The arrangement is said to discriminate against Chicago and in favor of south-western trade.

—A severe conflagration threatened Chicago last Friday night in the vicinity of large lumber yards and combustible buildings, having started in a cooper-shop and helped on by a high wind, The firemen succeeded in preventing great damage.

—An excursion train of one car with several journalists and rail-road officers on board was thrown from the track near Lafayette, Ind., last week. The car rolled over a 30 foot embankment and nearly every occupant was severely injured.

—A bill has been introduced into the House for a fund to print books with raised letters to be distributed among the blind in the various institutions of the country.

—The Louisiana Investigating committee from the House has trouble in getting at the facts. The Returning Board retires behind State sovereignty principles and refuse as State officers to give up their books and papers. The telegraph companies also refuse to turn over to this Democratic committee the private dispatches entrusted to them —The two houses of Congress took the first step toward amicable adjustment of pending difficulties last week by each appointing a committee of conference to discuss the electoral question. There is a dead lock between the two bodies on the subject of appropriations to defray the expenses of their respective Southern Investigating Committees. The House refuses to concur in the Senate's figures, reducing them from $50,000 to $30.000, while increasing its own allowance by an addition of $9,000. Of course the Senate retaliates, and the result will be deficiencies to be made good hereafter.

—The preliminary convention at Constantinople has closed and reported to the various powers represented. It is yet believed that a Turkish Russian war is inevitable by high authorities. Intelligence from St. Petersburg states that Russia is determined to meet immediately the grievances that have been indulged too long for the peace of Europe, but she will not proclaim war till able to make an irresistible assault. The Pope rejects any proposition of foreign occupation, and refuses to cede any territory to Montinegro or Servia.

- Several merchants arriving at New Orleans confirm the news of the capture of the city of Mexico by Gen. Diaz. On account of a disagreement between Diaz and Iglesias who was about to assume the Presidency, the former has proclaimed himself President. and the rival pretenders are preparing for a renewed struggle.

Freemasonry Weighed in the Balance AND Found Wanting.

CONCLUDED.

In the first specification it will be noticed that I am accused of advising, and persuading Bro. William Aiken, then Secretary of said lodge etc," and that this "gross" act of "unmasonic conduct" occurred on April 23d, 1873, and during my administration as Worshipful Master of the lodge.

Now if the statement contained in this specification be true why did Keystone Lodge wait for over eighteen months before taking action in the matter? What highly moral fraternity they must be, surely, to allow their Worshipful Master to be guilty of the"gross" act of "advising and persuading the Secretary etc., and yet to never breathe a single syllable as to any wrong or guilt in counection therewith until nearly two whole years had elapsed and then only to bring the matter forward for the evident purpose of swelling the number of specifications.

And again, if it was "gross unmasonic conduct" on my part a Worshipful Master of the lodge to "advise and persuade the secretary," etc., (supposing the above statement to be true) how did it happen that the same Keystone Lodge on January 14th, 1874 presented me with a magnificent Past Master's Regalia and a purse of seventy-five dollars and further, how did it come that the then Worshipful Master of the lodge Bro. J. H. Dixon, on his own account, presented me with a Past Master's Jewel? Was all this kindness shown me and all these beautiful presents showered upon me for "gross unmasonic conduct?" And what is still more singular, Keystone Lodge, No. 639, and her Worshipful Master made me all these beautiful presents over nine months after this gross act of unmasonic conduct is alleged to have been committed. But supposing that I did commit unmasonic conduct in "advising and pursuading Bro. Wm. Aiken etc, even then Keystone Lodge or any other subordinate lodge had no jurisdiction over the matter. The Master of a Lodge is amenable only to the Grand Lodge or to the Grand Master during recess, and Keystone Lodge violated every solemn obligation which bound her to the Grand Lodge by inserting this specification in these "Charges"—A Master Mason swears that "he will ever mantain and support the constitution, laws and edicts of his Grand Lodge" See page 99. Now hear what the Grand Lodge of Illinois decided at its Thirty Second Annual Communication held in Chicago, October 1st, 2d and 3d, 1872, page 29 Grand Lodge Report. "A Master may be tried by his lodge upon the expiration of his official term; provided the charges shall contain nothing which can be justly construed as official acts "According to this decision the Worshipful Master and Wardens of Keystone Lodge are guilty of masonic perjury, and J. H. Dixon, M. Pflaum and Oscar L. Eckvall ought to besummarily expelled from the institution for the same, as they wilfully and contumaciously violated the above Grand Lodge decision. I was Worshipful Master at the time, the Secretary was my subordinate officer, he received his orders only form me, all monies were paid out by my order and could not be paid without my order. And in "advising and persuading Bro. Aiken" it was unquestionably my official act and dare not be brought forward nineteen months after it occurred and nearly seven months after the expiration of my official term, without wilfully over-riding the laws and edicts of the Grand Lodge and so commiting what masons call perjury.

Brothers, hold up your heads and receive your sentence.

The facts in the case are simply these: All our Chicago lodges allow their secretaries some remuneration for their services. Keystone Lodge usually paid her secretary one-hundred dollars which could be drawn quarterly or in any way he pleased, as soon as earned. Some time in April 1873 Bro. Aiken the then Secretary received twenty-one dollars, fifteen dollars for Nicolaby's initiation and six dollars annual dues from M. Mc Auley. This sum, at Bro. Aiken's request, I as Worshipful Master of the lodge authorized him to use for himself it being simply a part of the salary then due him from the lodge for over five months work, amounting in all to nearly forty-one dollars. This transaction of course was perfectly proper and Keystone Lodge so understood and regarded it until Bro. Aiken and myself renounced and denounced freemasonry, when all at once it became eminently proper and in perfect keeping with pure Masonic usage that as formidable a document as possible with high sounding phrases should be gotten up and presented by that intelligent Scandinavian Beauty whose Masonic duty it is to watch the Sun at Meridian height in Keystone Lodge.

Specification No. 2. I fear is literally correct. This is the head and front of my offending. I became contumacious I denounced freemasonry as a humbug and a fraud. Perhaps I called it a d—d humbug and fraud as it is charged. If I did not I ought to have done so, for it is that and a great deal worse. I advised certain Fellow Crafts, viz; Ben. Glover, E. J. Sittig, and Morris David to take no more degrees in Masonry, alleging as a reason therefor that they could buy as much freemasonry any book store in the city for twenty-five cents as they could get in any one of our best and most aristocratic lodges for fifty or seventy-five dollars. I did and said all this on that memorable night in Keystone Lodge away up near the garret, and I said something more as stated in the Specification.

I expressed a firm determination to expose the so-called secret workings of freemasonry to the world and even Masons themselves must bear me witness that I am doing this as skillfully, and as correctly as it can possibly be done. "Guilty, Most Excellent King Solomon."

Specification 3 as will be readily seen is of no account whatever. It is frivolous, mean, weak, contemptible. and utterly beneath the notice of any intelligent body or society of men Just imagine Joe H. Dixon Deputy Superintendent of Police of this great city spending his valuable time over such contemptible dribbling. What gross misconduct on the part of Bro. Ronayne! He actually blacked balled some poor deluded jew peddler who was throwing away money or the high privilege of running around in semi-nude condition, blind-folded and with a rope around his neck, like a half witted boy playing blind man's buff, and all the [illegible] him thereafter to wear a masonic emblem conspicuously on his vest front and give him carte blanche to cheat his brother [illegible] on the square. But suppose I did cast a black ball, that was my privilege. What are black balls for if not to cast them There is many a man in the city of Chicago to day, sorry, deeply sorry that he was not blackballed before he joined that cursed institution. And there is many a woman too in this city who must patiently suffer wrongs innumerable, the direct results of the midnight potations of masonic and Odd Fellow Lodges.

Specification 4 is partly true. Bro. Pflaum did not get the whole of that correct. I must try and set him right. I did not call the Brother "a thief and a swindler," but I called him a fraud, a cheat, and a liar, and on Nov. 4th, when a vote was taken on this specification in a lodge of thirty-eight members twenty-nine of them voted that I was not guilty of unmasonic conduct in thus designating the high moral qualities of our noble Senior Warden, and nine voted that I was. And further I did not use these common nouns in regard to Bro. Pflaum on Oct. 6th, but on the same night in which I renounced masonry as stated in specification 2d.

Now there is the whole case in a nut shell. Comment is unnecessary except to say that I have the hearty sympathy and silent secret co-operation of numbers of Chicago Masons, members of Keystone Lodge included. In the work in which I am engaged of publicly working the Masonic degrees and thus doing my part in the national effort now being put forth to banish Freemasonry for ever from our churches our Court Houses and our Legislative Halls. Now let Masonry stand up and defend itself if it dare.

TRACT NO. 7:

SATAN'S CABLE-TOW.

A 4-page tract. This is a careful analysis of the character of Masonic oaths, and shows them to be most blasphemous and unchristian; and the Masonic Cable Tow is clearly shown to be the cable Tow by which Satan is leading thousands to eternal death. 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 8:

Is a 2-page double tract, "ILLUSTRATED." The first page represents a Mason proclaiming the wonderful wisdom and benevolence of the order, with an article below, entitled "Freemasonry is only 152 Years Old," and gives the time and place of its birth.

The second side is entitled, "Murder and Treason not Excepted," and shows that the Masonic order is treasonable in its constitution, and is both anti-Republican and anti-Christian. Price 25 cents per 100; $3 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 9, ILLUSTRATED:

FREEMASONRY IN THE CHURCH.

Copy of a petition for the higher degrees of Freemasonry, in which Blasphemous and Despotic Titles are enumerated and prayed for. The Copy was printed for the use of "Occidental Sovereign Consistory S. P. R. S.," 32d degree—a Chicago Lodge—and was ordered by a deacon of a Christian Church who is Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge of Ill

TRACT NO. 21:

MASONIC CHASTITY.

BY EMMA A. WALLACE.

The author, by wonderfully clear illustration and argument, shows the terribly corrupt nature of Freemasonry. No true woman who reads this will ever speak with approbation of this institution. A 4-page tract 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT No. 22.

LINUS CHITTENDEN ON FREEMASONRY.

The Author a Seceding Master Mason states his objection to the Lodge, drawn both from experience and observation, in a clear concise and forcible style.

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100, $2.00 per 1,000.

TRACT No. 23

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV. A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

Translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M.E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150,000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots The present demand is fully 100,000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150,000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

"GOOD WORKS."

"Maintain good works." See Titus, 3: 1, 8, 14.

"We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works." See Eph. 2: 8–10.

One of the good works to be maintained is the Christian Cynosure. Many Christians have the privilege, the duty of maintaining it. The winter campaign for new subscriptions is pleasantly opened with a club of eleven for a year and one for six months from L. Sperry, Waupun, Wis.; a club of nine for a year and four for three months each, from Benj. Ulsh, Silver Lake, Ind.; a club of six for a year from Gideon Preston, Lakeport, Mich., and ten for a year from S. A. Reynolds, Waverly, Pa.

Ten others have written that they are now at work securing clubs. How many will begin a club this week? The winter is the best time to work for new subscriptions. In most places the harvest is ripe. Thrust in the sickle for the maintenance of good works.

Among the exhibitors at the Centennial Exhibition may be mentioned the well-known Organ manufacturers of Brattleboro, Vt., Messrs J. Estey & Co. The "prominent absence" of such a firm from the "list of awards" has doubtless occasioned many questions as to the reason. The explanation is simple indeed. They did not compete. They simply exhibited their instruments on their own intrinsic merits, with no efforts to obtain recognition except from the public.

We cannot too highly commend such a course, as compared with some exhibitors whose sole aim seemed to be not to give the public pleasure in examining their wares, but to obtain the bronze medal.

Enquiry elicits the fact that Estey & Co. are the largest manufacturers and the heaviest exporters of their class, one-half of the entire amount of organs shipped to European markets being from this house.

RICHARD WAGNER, of whose ability to judge there can be no doubt, writes, "The tone of the Estey Organ is very beautiful and noble and gives me the greatest pleasure. My great friend Franz Liszt is also charmed and delighted with them."

MME. ESSIPOFF says, "I can play with exquisite enjoyment for hours on these beautiful instruments."

OLE BULL.—"Excel in fine, powerful tone."

MME. LUCCA.—"I am surprised at their full, noble and organ-like tone."

RUBENSTEIN.—"Tone full, noble and exceedingly animating."

There is no doubt about the meaning of such expressions as these from the leading musicians of the age, and Estey & Co., may well claim, to lead the world.

In his Bible reading in Farwell Hall, Chicago, Dec. 14th, Mr. Moody took for his theme, "Walking with God." As one of the conditions of this state he mentioned separation from the ungodly, quoting Paul, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." These words, he said, must mean something, and he made three distinct applications of them: as forbidding business partnerships with unbelievers, entering the marriage relation with an unbeliever, and joining secret lodges. On the last topic he said: I expect I will be treading on some one's toes, perhaps some in the audience, and perhaps some of these ministers; but out with it. I do not see how any Christian, most of all a Christian minister can go into these secret lodges with unbelievers. They say they can have more influence for good, but I say they can have more influence for good by staying out of them, and then reproving their evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than Lot had. If twenty-five Christians go into a secret lodge with fifty who are not Christians, the fifty can vote anything they please, and the twenty-five will be partakers of their sins. They are unequally yoked together with unbelievers. "But," says some one, "what do you say about these secret temperance orders?" I say the same thing. Do no evil that good may come. You never can reform anything by unequally yoking yourself with ungodly men. True reformers separate themselves from the world. "But," you say, "you had one of them in your church." So I did, but when I found out what it was I cleaned it out like a cage of unclean birds. They drew in a lot of young men of the church in the name of temperance, and then they got up a dance and kept them out till after twelve at night. I was a partaker of their sins because I let them get into the church; but they were cleaned out, and they never came back. This idea of promoting temperance by yoking oneself up in that way with ungodly men is abominable. The most abominable meeting I ever attended was a temperance meeting in England. It was full of secret societies and there was no Christianity about it. I felt as though I had got into Sodom and got out as soon as I could. A man rescued from intemperance by a society not working on Gospel principles gets filled with pride and boasts about reforming himself. Such a man is harder to save than a drunkard. "But, Mr. Moody," some say, "if you talk that way you will drive all the members of secret societies out of your meetings and out of your churches." But what if I do? Better men will take their places. Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who are separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up.

—Let every one who has heard Mr. Ronayne work in earnest to bring about the result he desires. See another column on this page.

THE GRAVE OF THE YEAR.

Twelve stanzas, one for each month, appropriated to the last day of the year.

BY A. OLDFIELD.

Be at rest, every toil and each turbulent motion
That encircle the heart in life's treach'rous snares,
Let the hour that invites to the calm of devotion,
Be unmixt with regrets, unencumbered with cares.

How cheerless the late blooming face of creation!
Weary, time seems to pause in his rapid career;
And fatigued with the work of his own desolation,
Looks behind with a smile on the grave of the year.

Hark! the wind whistles rudely, the shadows are closing
That enwrap his broad path in the mantle of night,
While pleasure's gay sons are in quiet reposing,
Undisturbed at the wrecks that have numbered his flight.

From yon temple where Fashion's bright tapers are lighted,
Her votaries in crowds deck'd with garlands appear;
And as yet their warm hopes by no spectres affrighted,
Assemble to dance round the grave of the year.

O! I hate the stale cup which these idlers have tasted,
When I think on the ills of life's comfortless day,
How the hours of my childhood their verdure have wasted
And the friends of my youth have been stolen away.

They think not how fruitless their warmest endeavors,
To recall the kind moments neglected when near,
And the hours that oblivion cancel'd forever,
Are inter'd by her hand in the grave of the year.

Since the last solemn reign of this day of reflection,
What throngs have relinquished life's perishing breath!
How many have shed their last tear of dejection,
And closed their dim eyes in the darkness of death.

How many have sudden their pilgrimage ended
Beneath the low pall that envelopes their bier,
Or to death's lonesome valley have gently descended,
And made their cold beds with the grave of the year.

'Tis the year that so late its new beauties disclosing,
Rose bright on the happy, the careless and gay,
Who now on their pillow of dust are reposing,
Where the sod presses damp on their bosoms of clay.

Then talk not of bliss while her smile is expiring,
Disappointment still drowns it in misery's tear;
Reflect and be wise, for the day is retiring,
And to-morrow will dawn on the grave of the year.

Yet awhile and no season around us will flourish,
But silence for each her dark mansion prepare;
Where beauty no longer her roses will nourish,
Nor the lily o'erspread the wan cheek of despair.

But the eye shall with lustre unfading be brightened,
When it wakes to true bliss in yon orient sphere,
With sunbeams of splendor immortal enlightened,
Which no more shall go down on the grave of the year.

CLERICAL FREEMASONRY IN SCOTLAND.

We are well assured that the influence of secret societies is often potent in the settlement or removal of ministers in this country; but we were not aware that it had been felt in the same direction abroad, especially in Scotland. The letter of the Edinburgh correspondent of the Dumfries and Galloway Standard and Advertiser, of Oct. 4th, makes a revelation in relation to the matter. The writer speaks of the modes in which congregations in that city obtain pastors. After mentioning two, he says:

"I will now mention a third mode namely, the agency of Freemasonry A vacancy will speedily occur in one of the established churches here by the translation of the minister who was brought to Edinburgh chiefly, if not solely, through the influence of the Freemasons. My informant is, or was the ruling elder in the church, and he informs me that the congregational meetings are rarely attended by more than a score of the congregation. He tells me, moreover, that although the annual stipend is scanty, twenty applications have been already received from candidates. Freemasonry may be a good thing in its place. Some of my most intimate friends belong to the order, and have strongly advised me to enter it. For reasons satisfactory to myself, I have held aloof, and I cannot say that I particularly admire the religious feature of the league. Be that as it may, I was unprepared to learn that clerical Freemasonry was a passport to a church and a benefice."

Some of our readers will probably be surprised at these statements by this writer. Their surprise will be modified, however, when they reflect that Freemasonry is the same the world over, and that it is an intensely selfish institution. The saddest thought to us in connection with what this correspondent says is, that there is scarcely any testimony borne by the church in Scotland against Freemasonry.—Evangelical Repository.

IN all my travels I feel one thing most deeply, and that is that unless the Cynosure has a much larger circulation our labor is almost in vain. I have more confidence in the Cynosure as a means of enlightening the public mind in regard to the evils of Masonry, both in church and state, than I have in all our lecturing or even in public exhibitions; and I feel it very keenly when I am unable to stay in a place long enough to canvass for its list. I urge upon all friends the great necessity of renewed efforts in obtaining more subscribers for this paper. We ought to have at least 20,000 by the first of May next.—Past Master E. Ronayne.

A Walk to Kew—The Royal Botanic Gardens—A World of the Beautiful and Curious in Vegetation—The Home of Wolsey and Henry VIII.—A London Dairy Show—Intemperance in London—The Degradation of Female Tipplers.

London, Eng., Nov., 1876.

The Royal Botanic Gardens and Pleasure Grounds at Kew, delightfully situated some seven miles west of London, afford a rare treat to the lovers of the beautiful. Covering over 270 acres, they were first laid out by the father of George III. in 1730, and for long years remained the private property of the Royal family. Since 1840 they have been open to the public. Before entering them I walked along the grassy border of the Thames, winding so prettily along the north side of the gardens, and gliding so quickly, yet so quietly, Londonward towards the sea. On the other side of the river was a bustling village. The inevitable and unsightly red tile roofs and chimney pots of its houses; the tall smoke stacks of manufactories, sending heavenward clouds of coal smoke, soon to descend again with the fog; and the dull and often dingy looking brick buildings, with only here and there a church spire to relieve their gloominess and monotony, presented not a little contrast to the pleasing river at my feet, and the lawns of green and linden trees in autumnal dress behind. Although November, the month of fogs and dismal weather, the air was clear and the day bright and sunny, most favorable for the enjoyment of the lovely scene that presented itself on entering the gardens. I hardly know which were more beautiful or of greater interest, the general grounds with their stately avenues and pleasure walks, winding through extensive lawns of unrivalled softness and beauty of color, around wooded mounds and among and beneath forest trees, whose giant branches and gnarled and knotted trunks so plainly indicate that theirs might be the tale of centuries; or the many immense glass buildings and conservatories, crowded with trees plants and flowers gathered from different countries and various climes, including almost everything rare and beautiful, and in almost infinite profusion and endless variety. There is the Sago palm from Ceylon, which the attendant will tell you is doubtless 1,000 years old, a rough and ugly customer, which the most audacious of urchins would hardly care to climb; and near by is a little tree of the same variety, which has hardly celebrated its first "Centennial." There are large fern trees from Mexico; the Wild date forty feet high, with its fruit just ripening, and the West Indian Fan palm, still taller, well laden with green and black berries. In the palm-house, a beautiful glass structure 362 feet long and at its centre 66 feet high and 100 feet wide, may be seen the vegetation of the tropics in all its luxuriance. High as is this structure, the roof in its highest portions even, checks the growth of the tallest of the palms. In the water tanks grow the papyrus of the Nile and the Victoria Regia, that queen of lilies (not now in bloom), with its large green leaves two-and-a-half and three feet in diameter, floating prettily upon the waters, besides many other varieties of water plants.

The museums, of which there are three in number, are well worthy of mention, so full are they of botanical and other curiosities. Nor must I omit to mention the "Tropical Fern House." I dare say many lovers of the beautiful would think a voyage across the Atlantic, with sea sickness one-half the way, a small price to pay for a sight of the loveliness it discloses. Oh! the wealth of green and elegance in form and manner of growth! Tiny, delicate ferns of infinite variety; trailing ferns, vine-like ferns, moss-like ferns, and ferns resembling miniature oaks of the forest and the larger brakes of the tropics, with graceful branches drooping, willow-like! If these conservatories and pleasure-grounds prove so attractive in November, what a sight must they not present in June.

Hampton Court, some miles further up the Thames, where I also spent a day most pleasantly, is interesting not only for the beauty of its location and its vast collection of pictures, but also and mainly for its historic associations and memories. Thoughts of Henry the VIII. and of the ambitious Wolsey, by whom Hampton Court was founded, very naturally come to mind as one walks through this ancient and once most magnificent of palaces, the princely present of that great and vicious cardinal to his king. Here died several of England's queens, and one King, Edward VI., was born here. In passing through its seemingly endless succession of rooms and apartments, thoughts of the joyous banquets so magnificently ordered and frequently given when Wolsey was in the height of his power, were naturally suggested, as well as of like festivities held here in after times; also of other events of gloomy interest in the later history of this palace. Unfortunate monarchs, unable to reside with safety in London, at different times resorted hither as a place of more quiet and greater security. It was the palace prison of Charles I., for a short period before his execution. To some Hampton Court is a place of much interest because of the celebrated conference between the Presbyterians and the members of the Established church held here in January, 1603, of which conference James I. was moderator. Hampton Court has not been the residence of royalty since George II. and his queen, Caroline, occupied it. Near the palace is the famous Maze, which affords not a little of amusement to many. One of the greatest objects of interest in the garden is the large vine planted in the year 1768, supposed to be the largest in Europe, if not in the world. It is over 110 feet long and its stem measures nearly thirty inches in circumference at three feet from the ground. It was hanging full of rich ripe clusters of black Hamburg grapes when I saw it. Some seasons it bears over 2,500 bunches. The whole plant covers a space of 2,200 square feet. Adjoining the palace is Bushby Park (some 1,100 acres. Its fine avenue of trees, largely of linden and horse-chestnut, is over a mile in length. The park is well stocked with deer.

During the last week of October London held a "dairy show" in Agricultural Hall, Islington. The display of choice milch cows was very fine. There were Jersey and Alderney and English Short-horns, as well as other breeds. In one apartment was a large exhibit of butter and cheese from the various counties and districts of England, extremely nice, so fresh and golden, and all so beautifully made. There was also a fine display of poultry; the choicest of chickens. ducks and geese and magnificent turkeys. Considerable farm machinery was also on exhibition and some new inventions as well. I could not but notice the clumsiness of English farm tools and machines in comparison with similar articles of American manufacture. Yet this was true of them, they were all well made. Like England's castles, cathedrals and public buildings, many of her machines and tools seem by their extra weight and strength to proclaim that they are to serve for centuries also.

Intemperance is very marked here. A stranger would very reasonably suppose that all the inhabitants of London drink. The public houses for the sale of liquor are very numerous. At the hotels and in the restaurants every one apparently takes liquor of some kind with his meals. The women drink in London, not occasionally, but regularly, and not little, but much! I have seen more intemperate women than men here; more women reeling at night through the streets; more women engaged in brawls and fights at the corners and along the sidewalks, than I have seen men in like degraded circumstances and conditions. Many of these women that I have thus seen were of respectable appearance and mothers of families. I have seen their children often trying to quiet them and get them home. The drinking saloons have usually nearly as many women in them as men, either drinking at the bar, or with pitchers, pails or bottles in which to carry liquor home. I have seen hundreds of children, girls and boys, some of them attendants of Sunday-schools, neatly and cleanly clad, carrying like utensils full of liquor; and often trying father's beer on the way to see how it tastes.

But I have commenced on a full subject which I have not time to pursue. Suffice it now to say that the people are becoming alarmed and temperance meetings are being held weekly and nightly, and many of the churches are organizing temperance societies, and hundreds of earnest men are circulating the pledge and endeavoring in every way to stay the wreck and ruin that is so prevalent, and which, unless checked, must soon in this country become almost universal.

An Unsafe Refuge.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

"When the overflowing scourge shall pass through it shall not come unto us, for we have made lies our refuge and under falsehood have we hid ourselves."—Isa. 28: 15.

Few realize the amount of hypocrisy and lying to which members of secret societies must inevitably resort as a protection against the searching investigation now going on in the public mind.

It is a fact of which every well-informed Mason is distinctly conscious, that Freemasonry has been fully revealed and is no secret to those who will take pains to read what has been so abundantly written by some of the wisest and best men in our land; and yet he must pretend that this is all false, and the natural and necessary inference is that such men as C. G. Finney, David Bernard, Nathaniel Colver and others are liars and slanderers. True he does not directly affirm this, probably he dare not, but he indirectly does so; and greatly wrongs the reputation of the great and good men by false insinuations that have in them all the venom of malignant slander. Can it be possible that men can do this and love Christ and his brethren? Not only so but he must lie to his most intimate friends and dearest kindred. A wife asks her husband if it is true that he was stripped, haltered, hoodwinked and sworn on penalty of having his throat cut, that he would never tell any of these foolish things; and he must either tell her that it is none of her business, which is a practical confession that it is true; or he must be guilty of deceiving her in some way and making her believe it is not true. In other words he must lie to his wife or confess his shame. If the church shall deal with him about his Master Mason's obligation, and shall ask him if he did swear to conceal all the secrets of a brother Master Mason except murder and treason and did ask God to help him do it; he must in like manner lie to the church, by making them believe that this could not be so, for certain other good(?) men have taken these same obligations that he has taken and they would not have done so if they had not been innocent.

Thus at every point his refuge is in lies and he forgets that God has said: "Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet, and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place." Isa. 28: 17.

A Baptist Testimony in 1859.

Leesville, Lawrence Co., Ind.

Editor Cynosure:

The old order of Baptists, as a church, are opposed to secret societies. Their church organ, the Signs of the Times, published at Middletown, N. Y., is now in its forty-first volume, and its editor, Gilbert Beebe, if living, is in his seventy-sixth year, and has been its editor and publisher ever since its commencement. In looking over some old files of that paper I found in a number dated August 15, 1859, a letter of inquiry and a reply by the editor, which I send you for publication if you see proper. Permit me to say, however, I am of the U. B. church, and am opposed to "the unfruitful works of darkness." I copy the letter of inquiry and reply, verbatim et literatim et punctuatim. Yours respectfully,

J. T. Hobson.

Shrob, Jasper Co., Ill., May 7, 1859.

Dear Brother Beebe:—I earnestly desire you to answer, through the Signs, the following questions: 1st. Why do the Old School Baptists object to their members joining secret and oath-bound orders, as the Freemasons and Odd-fellows? 2nd. What course should a Gospel church take with members who join those orders and attend their lodges? For one, I feel deeply the importance that the Baptists should be well-informed on these points, for numbers of them are joining these orders. I mourn that it is so. Please answer early. Affectionately, your unworthy brother,

D. Bartley.

REPLY.

In replying to the enquiries of Bro. Bartley, it is not necessary for us to attempt to show what are the merits or demerits of the societies or orders of which he speaks, and we frankly confess our utter inability to do so from our own knowledge. We have never been connected with any of them either directly or indirectly. Like most of the modern self-styled religious societies of the present age, these orders claim to be benevolent, moral, and philanthropic, and to possess some valuable secret, which their philanthropy does not lead them to divulge without money and without price. Our soul has never come, nor sought to come into their secrets, with their assemblies we have had no inkling to be connected. As worldly, social, or benevolent institutions, we shall not attempt to analyze them, nor to pronounce sentence of approval nor condemnation on them. But the question of our brother calls for the reason of the course pursued by the Old School Baptists in regard to their own members, and we deem it proper that we should, so far as we are able, reply to his enquiries. Of course he does not expect us to answer for all the Old School Baptists, or to pledge all Old School Baptists to indorse what we may say on this or any other subject, but merely to give such reasons as have weight on our own mind on the subject.

The first reason we have to give why we do not join those institutions, or feel willing that our brethren should join them is, that whatever may be their excellence, even admitting them to be as pure and benevolent as their advocates claim that they are, we find in the Gospel of Christ and in the organized church of the living God, a fullness which leaves no room to hanker for any of the leeks or onions of Egypt. In Christ, it has pleased the Father, that all fullness should dwell, and if, as professed disciples of Jesus we are found seeking for treasures or comforts which are not found in Zion, we simply by our conduct that there is not that fullness in our Father's house which has been represented. Why should we go abroad for joys if we have a feast at home?

Second. Whatever may be the secrets held by Freemasons or Odd-fellows, we have a secret which is far more profound, more useful and important; for the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and God will show to them his covenant. As heaven is higher than earth, so does the Lord's secret transcend all human mysteries. In Jesus our Lord are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. And this fact the Apostle has declared to the saints, "lest any man should beguile them with enticing words." Col. ii.3-4. This wisdom and knowledge comprise all that can be profitable to the saints; for in him is given to them "all things that pertain to life and godliness." 2 Pet. i. 3. This heavenly treasure, this divine secret of the Lord, which God has hidden from the wise and prudent of this world and revealed unto babes, is far superior to any secret of the orders under consideration. First, because it is the free and sovereign gift of God, and cannot be bought with money. Secondly, it requires no oath, pledge, or penalty to keep it; for none but God can reveal or show it, and none but those who are born of the Spirit of God can possibly learn it. Christians may talk freely about it before all men; ministers of the Word may proclaim it unreservedly to Jews and Gentiles, without the fear that any of Adam's race will ever know it unless it be to them revealed as it was to Simon Bar-jona, by our Father which is in Heaven. To seek for a secret or mystery in any other fraternity or brotherhood than that of the household of faith is to depart from the greater to seek a less.

Third. Old School Baptists object to their members uniting with those orders because the obligations assumed in doing so conflict with the obligations assumed in their allegiance to Christ, to be subject to the watch-care of one another. In visiting the lodges, they cannot be under the watch-care of their brethren, who are not permitted to accompany them in their secret conclaves. That which makes void the law of Christ is incompatible with the Christian profession.

Fourth. It is said an oath or affirmation, a solemn pledge, or profane imprecations are exacted of those who become members of those orders. Presuming this to be the case, the Old School Baptists object to their members assuming such obligations, because the King of Zion has forbidden them to foreswear themselves.

Fifth. To wave all other objections, it is certain that when members of the church unite with those institutions, it occasions grief and trouble to their brethren. This, of itself, is sufficient to render it highly improper and disorderly for any of the members of the church to join such orders. They have professed to prefer Jerusalem above their chief joys; and, if they do not, they certainly never ought to take on them the sacred name of Jesus, or profess before heaven and earth to be disciples of the Son of God. Those who name the name of Jesus should regard it as the business of their lives to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; to follow after the things which tend to peace, and things whereby one may edify one another. What can there be in our joining the secret orders of Freemasons or Odd-fellows that tends to the peace or edification of the saints of God? Churches have been thrown into disorder, distress, and, in some instances, have lost their visibility from this very cause. But who that sincerely loves our Lord, who is willing to deny himself, take up his cross daily, and follow the Lamb, will persist in breaking the peace of the church, wounding the hearts of dear brethren, and in bringing a reproach upon the sacred cause of God, for this gratification of his fleshly mind? Who would, like Esau, for one morsel of meat, sell his birth-right among the saints in the house of God? We have Christ and his apostles as our example, and until we can find them running into these connections, and disregarding the peace and comfort of the church, we are solemnly bound to abstain from them.

These are, at least, some of the reasons, as we apprehend, why Old School Baptists object to their members joining any of the societies, and they are some of the reasons why we could not consent ourself to join them, or feel satisfied with brethren who do join them.

The second question of brother Bartley is, "What course should a Gospel church take with members who join those orders and attend their lodges?

Answer.—According to our understanding of the laws of the kingdom of Christ, a Gospel church should labor faithfully, affectionately, and prayerfully to reclaim such disorderly members. Point out to them the impropriety and wickedness of their course, and restore them to the order of the church. But if, after a Gospel course of labor they cannot reclaim them—if they really prefer the society of Freemasons and Odd-fellows to that of the church of the living God, then the course of the church is very plain. Let them go to their own company; but let the church withdraw from every brother that walks disorderly, as Christ by his apostle has commanded. If they refuse to hear the church, let them be unto thee as heathen men and as publicans.

Before we close this article, we wish to say, that on all subjects of discipline, a hard, overbearing, or domineering spirit should be studiously avoided. You that are spiritual should attempt the work of restoration in the spirit of meekness. Let nothing be done through strife or vain glorying, but with singleness of heart to the glory of God. We have doubted the propriety of requiring of a brother who has joined any of the orders to come out and denounce them, or to divulge any of their secrets, which he has promised or pledged himself to keep secret. To satisfy our own mind, it is enough that the brother discontinues his connection with such institutions, comes out from them, and walks no more with them.

A Novel Scene.

A few days since, as a white man with an assumed Indian name asserts in the Syracuse Journal, "A curious and very interesting ceremony was gone through by the Onondaga Indians at the Castle."

A young teacher or missionary among the Indians, named Walthart, from Hobart College was adopted by the Indians. Twenty-four chiefs and many warrior braves took part. After a repast, the council of the nation assembled, and a speech was made by the Chief Captain and High Priest, after which he led the candidate eight times around the circle, pronouncing each time the name of the candidate—"New Canoe"—which was responded to by the wild war whoop of the Indians. And the Masonic clergyman who tells the story says: "The trust of the young candidate being well founded, he followed his conductor, and feared no evil. He bore the ordeal bravely; not a muscle quivered."

The new "Ingin" replied in a speech reported as follows: "In my short life I have gone through more than one ceremony of initiation. But I am prouder of being adopted into the brave Onondaga nation, than any other incident of my life."

We will not quote further from the speech. This is enough to show the animus of the aspiring young man, and the drift of his ambitions, since this was the proudest day of his life. A man must both be very easily "tickled with toys," and count his union with the church as of very little importance, if by some strange metamorphosis or legerdemain he can turn into an Onondaga brave and aid them in burning a white dog to keep off the witches, and esteems such connection as the proudest period of his life.

But another question arises. Is not this induction both as sensible and sacred as those which precede membership into a Masonic lodge, and burning a white dog as praiseworthy as approaching the Father without a mediator, as is done according to the statutes of Masons and Odd-fellows? "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." "I am the door of the sheep; if any man climb up any other way, the same is a thief and a robber."—Am. Wesleyan.

Christians all over christendom have been wrought into a fury of excitement on account of the cruelty of the Turks in Bulgaria, and have charged it to their religion, and declared that such a people were unworthy of a national existence. But how much better did Napoleon do with an army of Christians (?) when he massacred 4,000 Turkish soldiers at Jaffa, after they had surrendered upon promise that their lives should be spared, thus furnishing the Mahometan Turks with a monument of Christian perfidy and atrocity. And yet Napoleon is a demi-God whom many Christians worship.

Christmas.—III.

9. Opposition to Christmas is no new thing in the church of Christ. If to oppose such an observance be fanatical, some of the noblest men the world has ever seen were fanatics. So far as the popish advocates of Christmas are concerned, the names we could cite in opposition to it would, I grant, have little weight; but they ought to have weight with any who have any proper claim to the name of Protestant. The Waldenses, for example, who stood erect and so carefully kept the faith "when all our fathers worshipped stocks and stones," rejected all religious festivals except the Sabbath. Luther, although he admitted the fatal principle that the church might enact what she esteemed edifying ceremonies, expressed in one of his treatises the wish that no festivals were observed among Christians, but the Lord's day. Not having myself met with this sentiment, so far as I recollect, in any of Luther's writings, I make the statement on the adequate authority of the renowned George Gillespie. Calvin, too, as Gillespie in his "English-Popish Ceremonies," satisfactorily shows, entertained in relation to Christmas the same view.

In 1578 the martyr churches of the Netherlands expressed in Synodical capacity the wish "that the six days might be wrought upon, and the Lord's day alone celebrated." That the church of Scotland was in the purest days an uncompromising opponent of Christmas, no one who knows the history of her struggle against the "Five Articles of Perth" will venture to deny; nor can it be successfully disputed that such is the traditional tone and spirit of the churches that have directly or indirectly sprung from her; however much in some of them a disposition to ape the airs and customs of Episcopacy may betray itself at present.

Enough has been said to indicate that resistance to Christmas observance is no new movement, and that they who now withstand that form of ritualism and will-worship which is,—especially through the medium of Sabbath-schools,—acquiring a foothold in churches heretofore deemed proof against it, are associated in their protest with a host of worthies, and are not to be disposed of with a sneer as "oddities."

I have thus far addressed myself to those who claim for Dec. 25th recognition as a holy day. There are others, who, refusing to treat Christmas as a holy day, are disposed to accept of it as a holiday, and therefore to this aspect of the question I now turn.

The arguments used to defend this mode of Christmas-keeping are such as these:—that human beings need days of relaxation and recreation; that the 25th of December is as suitable for these ends as any day; and, besides, that on the part of many there is on that day, from religious motives, a cessation from labor, and hence that it is convenient and proper for those who attach no sacredness to the day in particular, but who wish a holiday, to take advantage of the extensive stoppage of work occasioned by the conscientious scruples of those around. I am inclined to think that one of the potent influences in some quarters in behalf of a Christmas holiday, as well as a Christmas holy day, is love of money; for such a festival forms a harvest day in some departments of trade: but this consideration is not apt to be addressed as an argument for a Christmas festivity. Under cover of the arguments which have been stated, many wish to hold Sabbath school festivals on Christmas; and through the "celebrations" which take place on that day an air of semi-sacredness at least is thrown around it. The youth learn to look forward to "Christmas," and to look back on it too, as a season of peculiar enjoyment, compared with which the Sabbath is dull and gloomy.

To the advocates of Christmas as a holiday, and especially as a day for Sabbath-school entertainments, I would respectfully say,—

1. That I have no objection to a holiday. I believe that men need some respite from the monotonous routine and drudgery of life, and that, while the Sabbath is provided in part to meet this necessity, and would perhaps altogether meet it, were the race for riches less strenuous, it may be needful to intersperse at proper interval days of recreation, not holy days, but holidays proper as a counterpoise, to that intensity of application to business which characterizes society at present, and as a restorative expedient for the benefit of overtasked humanity.

2. That yet I object to the use of Christmas as a holiday, and especially as a day for Sabbath-school festivities. On two grounds do I object. In the first place it is hard to tell what may result from this mode of distinguishing the day. Being fixed upon as a day for the making of gifts and for social enjoyment, it gathers to itself a halo of distinction, and becomes gradually enshrined in the memories and imaginations of the young. For a generation or two, perhaps, no palpable tendency to raise the day to the rank of a sacred day may be exhibited; but who can tell what inclination in that direction may at length be engendered? And peculiarly is such an issue to be feared at a time when a powerful influence, emanating from Popery, is at work to raise Christmas to a rank of commanding importance as a sacred season. In poetry and prose, through book, and magazine and newspaper, the name and fame of Christmas are spread. Children reared in the atmosphere of a festal Christmas, and accustomed to hear and read of it as the day on which the Savior was born, are admirably prepared for becoming the prey of Ritualists and Papists. The holiday may soon be converted into the holy day, and this steptaken, others will follow in the downward path. All history warns us to beware of lending facilities to the spirit of will-worship which makes its advance in subtle guise. He who rises from the study of the origin and growth of that gigantic system of superstition and priest-craft, known as Popery, is destitute of the spirit of a philosopher, if he be not impressed with the wisdom of the maxim, "obsta principiis," "Resist beginnings," the beginnings of evil.

But, in the second place, granting even that we are secure against seduction, we owe it to those who are entangled in the meshes of superstition to do nothing which we can lawfully avoid, that would seem to countenance their false notions. We live and act in the presence of fellow-beings, many of whom are the bondsmen of Popery. To them Christmas is a day of peculiar sanctity, and it forms one of the contrivancies whereby Popery holds them fast in her grasp. So long as we by word and act declare that in our judgment the day is no more deserving of consideration than any other day, a standing protest is raised against the entire system with which the festival is peculiarly identified, and the dupes of Rome may in consequence be led to think and investigate. But if we appear to vie almost with Papists in distinguishing the day, our conduct is likely to confirm them in their creed. In such circumstances, can we say that we are innocent of the blood of our fellow-men? If we loved them as we should, we would hate what injures them, and would even deny ourselves, were it necessary, in order to influence them aright by our example. Spurious love to men may not be, indeed is not, coupled with a hatred of his sins, but the genuine heaven-born affection implies aversion to sin as hostile to man as well as to God. In Lev. xix. 17, we read, "Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart: thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him." This high-toned, discriminating morality was enjoined upon the ancient Israelites. Is it too refined for us? Let all who, without any conscientious regard for Christmas, yet practically lend countenance to the superstitious observance of it, consider whether they are not hating their brother in their heart, and dealing ungenerously by him; whether they are acting in the spirit of that resolution of the apostle, "Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no meat while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend."—Evangelical Repository.

Christmas was not the birthday of Christ. Let us examine the Scripture history of the Jews. In Exodus 12th God gives to the children of Israel the Passover; Ex. xiii. 4. "This day came ye out in the month Abib" This gives us the month and the days of the month when the Passover must be eaten. According to the best historians this time corresponds to the last of March or first of April. Now turn to Luke first chapter. There we have a history of Zacharias and his wife Elisabeth and the birth of John, dating from the time Zacharias was dumb to the birth of John, his birth must have been about the first of January, and Christ was born six months later, being the first of July. M. R. Britten.

—A New York paper prints an obituary poem, as a "Masonic tribute" to a liquor seller, in which occur the following sentiments:

"Dear brother, thou hast gone before us
To thy Father's House on high,
But thy grip will gladly cheer us
When we meet in yonder sky."

"He will stand beside the crystal river,
And fold you in his arms again."

"Though passed from sight his spirit lingers near
And guides your footsteps in the path to heaven."

Under the circumstances, a secret lodge, which practices a religion which holds all other religions as equally inferior, could only endorse these lines.

The Lodge Strikes at Mr. Moody.

The last testimony of the evangelist against the church-destroyer of secretism was too much for some zealous abettors of Freemasonry and they rushed into print in the true Masonic style of misrepresentation and concealment. Our readers will be anxious to learn all the particulars of Mr. Moody's testimony and the following from the Tribune of Dec. 18th is therefore printed in full:

gratifying degree and exemplar of humility. Of course, there are hundreds of people, here and elsewhere, who have come, through their attachment for the man, and by virtue of that impulse of human nature which worships success, to regard the great revivalist as an oracle. What "Mr. Moody says" has, in religious circles, quite as much potency as what "Mrs. Grundy says" may have in society generally. For this Mr. Moody can scarcely be blamed, however.

It has pretty generally been recognized as one of the prime elements of Mr. Moody's success that he has revealed both the tact and fraternal spirit which ignores all questions at all controversial, as between the widely differing denominations of Christians. Generically, Christians are one: generic principles only enter into the essential work of soul-saving, hence Mr. Moody has uniformly proceeded on the plan of forgetting differences which, though possibly necessary, belong to the specifically human in organization, and not to the divine fundamental, which precedes all human organizations.

Any other course would have invited defeat from the start. This important fact makes the gratuitous utterances of Mr. Moody with reference to secret societies, recently, all the more without excuse, and they have certainly greatly pained some of his best friends. It will be remembered that during the Convention, recently, among the "questions" propounded was one covering this vexed question. Mr. Moody answered it at some length, and, as many then thought, in a spirit of intolerance. As he was specially called out by the question, however, his friends who differed from him materially were not disposed to be critical. At the 3 o'clock lecture, however, on last Thursday, in Farwell Hall, Mr. Moody went out of his way to attack secret societies, and used language which was both censorious and bitter against his brethren who chanced to be members. Considering the fact that a liberal percentage of the ministers and workers, as well as friends and well-wishers generally, who have helped to make the glorious results of the past ten weeks possible, are members of, or sympathizers with, some of these same secret societies, such a course is simply unfair, and every way reprehensible, not to say unchristian.

Thousands of the most devoted Christians are members of some so-called secret society, with which they stand connected, possibly, as one of the ways of doing good and enlarging their opportunities for usefulness.

By what authority does Mr. Moody sit in judgment on the lives, and essay to keep the consciences of his brethren? If it comes within the legitimate sphere of a man in his position to proclaim himself an oracle on this subject, why not as regards politics or church-membership? We presume Mr. Moody has an opinion as to which political party is nearest right. Why not decide for his brethren and kindly tell them? Why not, inasmuch as the mere human organization known as a Baptist or Methodist Church is no less human than the order of Masons or Odd-fellows,—why not decide which is preferable and tell his brethren?

The writer has been a sympathizer with Mr. Moody's work, and a helper in the application of his methods (not all of which are perhaps entirely wise), and in perfect kindness would now suggest that, in the conduct of his future work in Boston and elsewhere, he cultivate still more the spirit of true Christian charity and humility, remembering that his Master long since ominously inquired: "Who is he that judgeth another man's servant?" A MINISTER.

These serious charges against the evangelist were promptly answered. A letter, which we learn was from the pastor of the United Presbyterian church of this city, though the types get a letter or two out of the way, appeared the next morning; which we subjoin, premising that this will not be the end of this matter:

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—In your issue of to-day is an article signed "A Minister," condemning Mr. Moody's reference to "Secret Societies." Under the circumstances, I object to such a signiture to such an article. Not because the writer is not a minister,—he may be; not because his official title is an improper signature in itself, but the writer knows a hundred ministers or more have, at different times, and almost every day, sat on the platform of the Tabernacle, and Farwell Hall, to signify their sympathy with Mr. Moody's work, and, I hope, "a liberal percentage" of them agree with Mr. Moody's views of secret societies. I know many of them do. Now, which of them all is to have the credit, or discredit of this article, charging Mr. Moody with being wanting in liberality, humility, fairness, charity, and Christianity, because he saw fit to express a fearless, honest, candid opinion as to Christians connecting with a society whose approved, honored, and accepted writers, and rituals, claim it to be religious; yet whose songs, and prayers, are, at least in most degrees, utterly Christless, and from the Scripture passages it uses, cuts out the very name of Jesus!—whose religion, tenets, worship, and ritual, is managed on such a liberal plan that it is boastfully claimed by its published advocates to be a "religion in which all men agree?" And I suppose it must be, for along with the thousands of "the most devoted Christians," to which this writer refers, it can fellowship infidels, Jews, heathen, tipplers, and libertines (not such as referred to Acts vi. 9) without offense! A better illustration of "The Happy Family" than P. T. Barnum ever exhibited. How any minister or evangelist can advocate the religion of Jesus Christ and not condemn Christians connecting with such societies is quite a problem to many, as was indicated by the applause both in the Convention at the Tabernacle, and on Thursday at Farwell Hall. Perhaps not only Mr. Moody was tramping on "A Minister's" toes (and I suppose he comes down with about 225 pounds) but all the feet that went up and down fell on his toes! No wonder the poor man should "squeal," according to Chicago phraseology. Why did he not sign his name? I will not say cowardice was the reason, for it may have been modesty, or only a Masonic manner he learned on the "square." As one minister who sympathizes with Moody, and does not desire the credit (?) of the article or credit of sympathizing with it, and not wishing any one wrongfully credited or discredited with this article, I sign my name, not my official title. Reform News.

RONAYNE AT ASHLEY, OHIO.

ASHLEY, Del. Co., O., Dec. 14, '76.

MR. EDITOR:—I beg leave through the columns of the Cynosure to notify the public of the effects and success of the lectures delivered by Mr. Ronayne of Chicago at this place. He had an appointment here to lecture and work the degrees of Masonry on the 6th, 7th, and 8th, and we had our meeting well advertised for miles around. But when evening came Mr. Ronayne did not arrive, but there was a large crowd assembled, and badly disappointed. Not knowing the reason of his delay we did not give out any other meeting; but on the next day at 11 o'clock he made his appearance. (The reason of his delay was there was a misunderstanding in regard to the time he was to be here.) We sent out word in every direction, and when night came we had a good audience, and he worked the first degree in Masonry.

This was interesting to many, but all were not satisfied that Ronayne had ever been in a Masonic lodge, and there was considerable growling by the craft and others. He gave out an appointment for the next night, and it proved to be a fearful cold and stormy night, but as bad as the weather was, our hall was well filled, and he worked the second or Fellow Craft degree. There was considerable noise and some signs of disturbance. With this degree he showed the similarity of the religion of Masonry to that of Romanism. This did not please the "Romans" much, and it produced some little disturbance, but all was quiet after a little, and he went on and worked the degree through and announced a meeting for the next night.

During the day there was all kinds of talk and opinions about Ronayne, and threats of disturbance. Although the weather was still very cold there was a large crowd assembled to see Hiram killed. Ronayne began his labors by opening the lodge in the third degree. There was some noise, but when about half way through it seemed that every man and woman was deeply interested to see the working of this degree with its profanity and mock prayers to resurrect Hiram Abiff.

How a minister of the Gospel can submit to such things I cannot conceive. Now Ronayne is through here and the result is, after seeing the third degree worked, there is not a man that I have talked with but what is thoroughly convinced that Ronayne is master of Masonry. Even some of the Masons themselves acknowledge he has been a Mason, which is virtually admitting that he spoke the truth. Some say he did not give it all, but he gave enough to make us feel that any minister, after going through such performances should be ashamed to stand in the pulpit before an intelligent audience to preach Christ and the resurrection. Masonry is thoroughly exposed in this community, and is not worth having here. It is no credit to any man here to belong to the lodge. No, it is very unpopular. All the grips, signs, and passwords are public property, if it may be called property at all. Even the children are playing with them on the streets.

Now, my brethren, if you want Masonry killed in your community, send for brother Ronayne to come and work the degrees of Masonry for you in public. If you have a hard fight this is the cheapest and easiest way to silence the craft. Don't be afraid to spend a little time and money to put down this vile system. I think it would be better to spend money this way than to support Masonic ministers and encourage them to remain in the lodge. L. POWERS.

BRO. HINMAN IN INDIANA.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Dec. 14, 1876.

DEAR BRO. K:—It is quite a long step from west Wisconsin to central Indiana, but there is where my last report of work left me, and here in Indiana I am. On Nov. 20th and 21st I lectured at Ironton and Valton, Wis., among the Friends, and had good attendance and interesting meetings.

Leaving there on the 21st I spent a brief time at home and on the 27th reached Rochester, Fulton county, Ind. I here found friends among the Seventh Day Adventists and made arrangements to lecture on my return. Three of the ministers are Masons. The M. E. minister preaches sanctification and practices Masonry. May the Lord open his poor blind eyes. I found here a candid Mason, a Knight Templar who cheerfully admitted all I said about Masonry and talked familiarly about its obligations, signs and words, as though he had never thought of making them a secret, and yet he held that Masonry is a good institution, far better than the church!

From here I went to Westfield, Hamilton Co., and was most kindly received by our faithful friend, Peter Rich. I found him full of quiet earnestness and glad to welcome any workers in the cause. During my stay here I attended the Friends' Quarterly meeting and listened to two excellent sermons, one of marked ability and spiritual power by Elwood Siler of Parke county. As the Friends and Wesleyans were both holding meetings I was unable to lecture here, but preached for the Wesleyans on the Sabbath.

On Monday evening, Dec. 4th, I lectured in the U. B. church at Eagletown. On the 5th came to Thornton, Boone Co. On the 6th and 7th lectured in the Friends meeting house at Sugar Plain. On the 8th lectured in Friends' meeting-house in Thornton. On the 10th preached and lectured in the Friends' meeting house in Walnut Grove. On the 11th went to Darlington, Montgomery county, and on the 12th spoke in the Christian (New Light) Church, and on the 13th attended Friends' meeting and spoke in their meeting house near Darlington. To-day I am stopping with A. P. Hutten, who is the only subscriber to the Cynosure I have seen since leaving Hamilton county.

This whole region of country has been unvisited by our lecturers and the people have very little knowledge of our movement. The society of Friends constitute the most numerous body of Christians. They are earnest and thoughtful, but slow, and cautious of everything new. Most of them are originally from North Carolina. They nearly all sympathize with the anti-secret movement, though a few have been drawn into Odd-fellowship and the grange. There is, however, a decided religious awakening in this body of Christians, and quite a number of renunciations of Odd-fellowship have taken place. I think the field a most hopeful one, and the results of the work done here will be substantial and abiding.

I expect to spend the two weeks between this and the State Convention in this and Hendricks county, and to finish up my work in this State with the close of the year.

Yours for the Lord,

H. H. HINMAN.

FROM CERRO GORDO CO., IOWA.

PLYMOUTH, Ia., Dec. 15, 1876.

The war against secretism in northern Iowa is still in progress, and its advocates in this section are becoming more popular, while the "Morgan killers" are alarmed, their craft being in danger. The Rev. J. H. Vandever, editor of the Iowa Freeman, is doing a good work in the cause of reform. We had the pleasure at Plymouth a few evenings since of hearing one of his lectures against the lodge. It was right to the point and will do its work. We are praying for the success of the Iowa Freeman, and that the Lord may sustain Bro. Vandever in his efforts in the cause of reform. Bro. Vandever is the right man in the right place. The country and the cause of Christ need more such self-sacrificing men. You may expect to hear from northern Iowa again.

Yours for the truth,

G. C. COFFER.

Reform the Church Leaders.

York, Medina Co., O., Nov. 1876.

I have hinted before at the causes which mainly obstruct the progress of the reform here. The people will not think and act independently. I mean the Christian people—for I don't expect others to do much for reform, only through political and secular action, and for selfish purposes. If they help us God be praised, for he governs not the intentions only but also the actions of men.

Why don't the people think and act for themselves? Why wait for leaders? Why wait for their ministers to advance before them in reforms that are unpopular? Will they do it? Did they ever do it? The prophet should lift up his "voice like a trumpet whether the people will hear or whether they will forbear." Thus he should deliver his own soul. In the days of slavery it was not so; the people were not warned—only by a few. The sword came and the land was deluged. How is it now? Then the people had enough of the knowledge of danger. They knew well enough that slavery was "the sum of all villainies," but they would not act. Why? Their leaders, their ministers, refused to move—they refused to advance—so they held back the Lord's host; "And the people loved to have it so." They knew their duty well enough, but to go faster than their ecclesiastical leaders was not to be thought of. Pray what are ministers for but to point out the whole way, to show what is duty here and to lead in the path to heaven? They are the holy men, and to attempt to be more righteous than they would be the very height of presumption. So the people waited till God overthrew the abomination, knocked off the shackles from the bondsmen's limbs and "proclaimed liberty throughout all the land," which the people should have done long before. Thus the wrath of man (not the love of man) shall praise Him.

Now how is it this present time? Just as before. We all know the church is to reform the world, if it ever is reformed. But who and where is the church? Is it the ministers, or the people, or both? The latter doubtless. The people are largely in the majority. The ministers won't move. Shall the people wait for them? This they are doing—and judging of the future by the past they may wait till doomsday, or till destruction cometh. Here is a system of iniquity scarcely less vile and dangerous than slavery, spreading all over the land, most God-dishonoring, soul-destroying, ruinous to all peace here and hereafter. The people know it, or may know it; the ministers know it, but the people will not act because their leaders do not, and so this system governs both church and state.

The undersigned attended a semi-annual conference of the Congregational church of this county lately. In many respects it was an interesting and profitable meeting. There was talent and apparent piety among the ministers and delegates. The programme of subjects to be considered embraced those that it is popular to talk about. The embodiment of anti-Christ, standing out in bold relief as in secretism was wholly ignored. One minister said to me the time had not come to attack that sin; the world was not ready for it; the towns and villages were full of Freemasonry and their kindred combinations; to attack them would expose any minister to dismissal, so that he would be without support and the power of doing good in any direction. He spoke of one minister who by uncompromising radicalism had lost all opportunity for doing good. He himself was living with a salary of less than $400. This minister was an Oberlin graduate. He spoke of another with whom he had conversed, who gave as the reason why he withheld testimony, that he was uninformed; he did "not know anything about it." "O tempora, O mores"! This was also an Oberlin graduate, a young man, just out of his class. Did he assign the true reason? Then is not darkness preferred to light? "If ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise." Is Oberlin the reformatory institution that it was her glory to be in former years?

Another minister I conversed with, thought a reason of my own failure of doing the good of which I lamented, was, I have been impatient and discouraged because correct principles had not progressed fast enough. This man was feeling outside of unpopular reforms, and trimming doubtless, for conscience sake. Such is the character of the Medina county conference, good preachers, faithful in preaching the truths of the Gospel which it is popular to preach—but careful not to say much against sins that are unpopular till the world is ready for it. If our conference was alone in this position it would be less discouraging. All others with few exceptions, are so. The ministers will not bring the blessed Gospel to bear against sins that are popular, and the people will not act without them. Again I ask, what shall we do?

But let us look again. It is an old saying that "there is a silver lining on the other side of a dark cloud." So here. While it is somewhat true, as our enemies boast, "there never was such an increase of secret societies as at present;" it is also true there was never so large a secession from them. The increase is not of the class of men that carry with them the largest influence. The nerve and bone of community are with those that hold back or secede. Public sentiment is undergoing a change. The people are beginning to see as never before, the true character of these secret pit-holes of Satan. It was never discovered till now, that what was considered the lesser class of secret combinations is gotten up and sustained by lodge-men to increase its power, while the greater ones in point of iniquity, such as the Ku Klux, Knights of the Golden Circle, White Leagues, &c., are legitimate emanations from it.

Let the honest masses once understand fully the fact, that the two great centers, though apparently opposed, (Jesuitism and speculative Freemasonry) are really and truly fed by such secret orders as Good Templars, Odd-fellows, grangers, and the like, and the murderous clans of the South, but the natural products of them, and they will awake to the danger that assails us, and use appropriate means for their dethronement. When the people learn to think and act independently, the ministers will learn that the time has arrived for them to labor in this work. The bread and butter question may then begin to assume a new aspect.

Now then, what we have to do is, to get the public sentiment right. As Bro. Ronayne says, "We must pray." His proposed week of prayer is a good suggestion. Call mightily upon God. He will hear and answer if from sincere, importunate hearts. But do not neglect Cromwell's charge to his soldiers—"While you call upon God, be sure to keep your powder dry." Remember the human side, and do the human work. Forget not what has been done already and take courage. The books, the tracts, the periodicals—how they have multiplied within a few years! The schools and colleges that discountenance secretism among their students! The number of seceding Masons who renounce their profane obligations, and unite their testimony with the thousands who have come out of the lodge before them. These facts encourage us to persevere.

But money is required—where shall it come from? I regret that I have not been more economical in early life. Then I might have $1,000 to apply now to the work diffusing information by the printed page. This is our urgent need at present. But God who has the hearts of all men, the rich and poor at his disposal can so move upon them as to loosen the purse strings to pour out the means in abundance. Lord help us, is the ardent prayer of your feeble co-laborer.

J. A. Bingham.

Who Hath Bewitched You?

I was impressed very strongly lately, in reading the letter to the Galatians, with the fact that the Apostle so fearfully denounced the teachers who taught the ancient, time-honored, and once even divinely authorized rite of circumcision, &c. Yes, he twice declared, "Let them be accursed."

Modern Masonic, ancient-rite advocates would certainly say with Eve's evil adviser, "Ye shall not surely be accursed!" And they might say that they don't impose their rites upon churches as such. But do they not teach the very same principle so severely censured in this epistle? They do. They teach in their books and in their lodges certain oaths, prayers and rites, all of which take hold of the religious faculties of their members, and when such members are professed believers in Christ this language of the inspired Apostle is precisely suitable for them. "Oh, foolish" professors of Christianity, "who hath bewitched you?" Certainly no Freemasonry can be in alliance with the Gospel without perverting it quite as much as the Jewish rites would have done in Paul's time. In fact Peter and other teachers had conformed then to Judaizing teachers, as ministers and members of churches now conform to Masonry and to the Masters of lodges, some of whom, like a deacon I know, will not listen to any one who tries to point out their perverted Gospel or their "false philosophy and vain deceit." Another worker in a church thought himself so far emancipated by staying away from the lodge that he expressed his sentiments freely against the system, but when asked to record his sentiments, he shrunk from that test, afraid thus to testify against this insidious adversary of Christianity.

Our Mail.

Justus Miller, Pikeville, Pike Co., Ind., writes:

"The anti secret spirit here is growing in interest and in power. The grange or independents have gone down and they are doing nothing. The United Brethren in Christ have had a hard time here; we had to fight or fall, and the fighting has been for me to do. We have got them so that they do not bother the church any more, but I am going to fight on while I live, all in a Christian spirit. By the grace of God we are able to conquer. May God help us to go on from one good work to another The Good Templars and grange have fought our church harder than all the rest. The old harlot, Masonry, was at the head of the work, but we have got them under our feet and we will hold them there. The Masons here have pretty much all turned out to whoring and acting the rascal in the courts, so that everybody is watching them, and some are leaving the lodges and others admitting Ronayne's book to be true."

John G. Miller, Coulterville, Ill., writes:

"We must stop some of our papers this year, but we cannot afford to do without the Cynosure, for we esteem it and the Christian Statesman the two great agents under God to save the country from ruin and utter destruction. May God bless you and make you a blessing to the world in saving it from the curse of the lodge and the slavery of the devil. Yours for liberty, light and truth. To be free in Christ is to be free indeed."

Andrew Alspaugh, Yates City, Illinois, writes:

"Please send me another bundle of your papers containing 'Masonry at a Glance.' Many persons are just beginning to believe that it is a correct exposition of Masonry, and I have calls for the paper nearly every day."

I. J. Gilbert, Derby, Conn, writes:

"The Cynosure is worthy of more patronage. I would not like to do without it"

S. E. Orvis, Waukesha, Wis., writes:

"Our literary debate on secret societies was decided in my favor, against them, as being antagonistic to the best interests of mankind."

We wish discussions on this subject could be held in every town in the land and reports of the meetings and their results sent to us.

L. Cranston, Sr., Raymonds, O., writes:

"I have known the Masons' signs for more than forty years."

George Bohrer, Bloomington, Illinois, writes:

"I am now eighty-five years of age and am getting up a club for the paper, which I will send on in a few days. My prayer is that you will continue in the good work and shortly come out triumphant."

He sends for twenty copies of that number of the Cynosure containing Mr. Moody's statements on secret societies, and says:

"If you have not them would it not be well to print a lot of them and propose in the paper for persons all over the country to send in for them. It will do good wherever it goes."

We think every one should read these remarks by Mr. Moody, and it is possible some of them may be printed in tract form.

E. McCoy, Union City, Mich., says he has just received the Morgan book and writes:

"I wanted the book not only for my own use, but to loan to others, to prevent if possible young men joining that worthless and anti-Christian society. If I were able I would circulate your tracts by the thousand. The people like them."

C M. Swan, who lives four miles from Union City, sends for tracts. We hope to hear of cheering prospects in this cause, from his part of the country this winter.

Isham Benefiel, Perkinsville, Indiana, writes:

"There is a large anti-secret element here if it was once waked up."

James Andruss, Amboy, Ill., writes:

"If I live through this winter I shall be eighty four years old. I am very feeble and it seems as though I could but just live now, and yet I have reason to expect much colder weather in the three months to come. If I live longer than this winter you may expect to hear from me again for I would rather have your paper than a dozen of any other that I know."

Rev. J. P. Stoddard writes from Pittsburgh, Pa.:

"Considerable interest is being developed in view of the approaching exhibitions."

C. Winter, Gouldsville, Washington Co., Vt., writes:

"I am sick of the name lodge. Secret societies seem to be the business of the day with too many here. I live in hopes that it will yet be as it was in Anti masonic times when the lodge went down, and pray that we may work together to build up the waste places of Zion."

BIBLE COMMENTARY.

V. 13.—I said days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom. Job 32: 7. A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger. Prov. 15: 1. Also Prov. 15: 4. Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly. Ps. 1: 1. Woe to the rebellious children that take counsel, but not of me. Is. 30: 1. Prov. 1: 25, 30. Athaliah was his counsellor to do wickedly. 2 Chron. 22: 3. Ps. 81: 12. Thy testimonies also are my delight and my counsellors. Ps. 119: 24. His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor. Is. 9: 6.

V. 14.—And ye shall cry out in that day because of the king ye shall have chosen you, and the Lord will not hear you in that day. 1 Sam. 8: 19. Luke 11: 46. Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers 2 Cor. 6: 14. Take my yoke upon you, Matt. 11: 29, 30. Their torment was as the torment of a scorpion. Rev. 9: 5, 10.

V. 15.—The preparation of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue is from the Lord. Prov. 16: 1. Also 20: 24. Jer. 10: 23 and Is. 45: 7.

V. 16.—Ought ye not to know that the Lord God of Israel gave the kingdom over Israel to David forever, even to him and his sons by a covenant of salt? 2 Chron. 13: 5. We have ten parts in the king, and we have also more right in the king than ye. 2 Sam. 19:43. 2 Sam. 5: 1-3. 1 Chron. 11: 1-3. The scepter shall not depart from Judah nor a lawgiver from between his feet until Shiloh come. Gen. 49: 10. Jer. 23: 5; Acts 13: 23; Rom. 1: 3.

V. 17.—David was king in Hebron over the house of Judah. 2 Sam. 2: 11.

V. 18—Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men and scribes; and some of them ye shall kill and crucify. Matt. 23: 34-39. I will send my beloved son; it may be they will reverence him when they see him. Lu. 20: 3-15. And they stoned Stephen. Acts 7: 59. Acts 13: 50; 22: 4

V. 19.—Even unto this day when Moses is read the vail is upon their heart. 2 Cor. 3: 15 Rom. 11: 7-10 and 19-26.

Spiritually the kingdom of Judah was stronger than that of Israel and so outlived it by nearly one hundred and fifty years. There were twenty sovereigns and all of one dynasty.—Hitchcock. See 2 Kings 17: 18-21.

TEACHERS' DIARIES FOR 1877.—This popular Diary contains a list of the International Series of Sunday School Lessons for 1877; names and residences of scholars; attendance of scholars; cash received from scholars; one page for each lesson for the year, on which notes are jotted down during the week; pages for illustrative memoranda; a list of the officers of the International Sunday-School Convention for 1875 78; a list of officers of the State Sunday-School Conventions, and a Calendar for 1877. Beautifully bound in Morocco with gilt edge An excellent New Year's present. All for 75 cents.

Adams, Blackmer & Lyon Pub. Co., Chicago.

Certain persons have strenuously urged that the adoption of the International weights and measures would be a great inconvenience and expense to the machinists and manufacturers. The advocates of the system, having made inquiries of machinists and manufacturers in various countries of Europe, reply that the objection is one of theory and not of fact, as those who have actually tried the experiment testify. As the old machinery wore out it was replaced with the new, and a little time being taken the greatly dreaded confusion and expense were greatly obviated.

Home and Farm.

CHILDREN'S COLDS.—The following is an excellent and safe remedy: Take onions, slice thin, and sprinkle loaf sugar over them, put in the oven, and simmer until the juice is thoroughly mixed with the sugar. It makes a thick sirup, very nice. Give a teaspoonful as seems to be needed, four or five times a day.

A CURE FOR CROUP.—It is said that the white of an egg given in sweetened water, is a cure for the croup. The remedy is repeated till a cure is effected.

THE WEIGHT OF WOMEN'S CLOTHING.—A writer in Good Health, says that the average weight, all the year round, of that portion of a woman's clothing which is supported from the waist is between ten and fifteen pounds; and that if a woman was sentenced to carry such a weight about in this way for a number of years, for some great crime, the punishment would be denounced as an inhuman one, yet thousands of women daily endure such a punishment voluntarily because it is the custom and because they do not know the bad effects likely to follow it. The writer earnestly counsels women not to adopt an attire similar to that worn by men, but to have their clothing suspended from the shoulders, by which dangerous pressure on the abdominal muscles would be avoided.

EFFECTS OF SMOKING.—A French physician has investigated the effects of smoking on thirty-eight boys between the ages of nine and fifteen, who were addicted to the habit. Twenty-seven presented distinct symptoms of nicotine poison. In twenty-two there were serious disorders of the circulation, indigestion, dullness of intellect and a marked appetite for strong drinks; in three there was heart affection; in eight decided deterioration of blood; ten had disturbed sleep, and four had ulceration of the mucous membrane of the mouth.

HOW TO SAVE FUEL.

There are many ways by which an economical person can save fuel. I will mention two of what I consider the most important ways. The first is to have a properly constructed house, that can be warmed with about one-fourth the fuel generally used. The other is to have your family, especially your wife, very warmly clothed and extremely warmly shod.

Persons thus clothed will be more comfortable in a temperature 60 deg. than people thinly clad will be at 70 deg. It is my opinion that it requires about twice as much fuel to keep a room at 70 deg. as at 60 deg.; and I believe it to be more healthy to live in as low a temperature as we can and be perfectly comfortable, than to be thinly clad and be obliged to keep a high temperature.

If I am wrong in this I hope Dr. Hunter, or some other learned doctor will set me right; for I certainly do not wish to lead any one astray from the laws of health for the sake of economy.

Much more might be said on this subject but "a word to the wise is sufficient," and twenty columns of the soundest logic would not be sufficient to convince fools.

The Christian Cynosure

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DEC. 28, 1876.

Astounding!

A BAPTIST MISSIONARY PEDDLING MASONIC GEW-GAWS! PEDDLING AND PREACHING.

We take the following slip from the Oklahoma Star, a weekly paper, published at Caddo, Chickasaw Nation, Indian Territory:

"We are pleased to learn that R. W. J. S. Murrow, Grand Lecturer of the Grand Lodge of the Indian Territory, A. F. & A. M., and Worshipful Master of Oklahoma lodge, No. 4, Atoka, C. N., designs obtaining an agency for the sale of Masonic books, periodicals, aprons, diplomas &c. The Territory is measurably destitute of such articles, and Bro. Murrow is the very man to supply the deficiency, as his missionary duties, together with those of Grand Lecturer necessarily call him over the whole country."

We call the special attention of J. W. Woods, Esq., of Baraboo, and John Wilson, Esq., of Menomonee, Wis., and also of Rev. Nathan Callender of Pennsylvania, to the above notice, and to the following facts sent us from sources supposed to be reliable, viz:

The Rev. Right Worshipful J. S. Murrow, named in the above notice, is general missionary agent for the Baptist missions in the Chickasaw Nation, with a good salary, and fifteen churches under his care. He is now travelling his circuit, preaching and making money by peddling Masonic gew-gaws. We further learn that the editor of the Oklahoma Star is Grand Master of Masons in the Indian Territory, that every Baptist minister in the Indian Territory is a Mason: that one of them, Ingalls, late Indian agent, is now travelling in the North to collect $25,000 for Baptist purposes in the Chickasaw Nation, and that the Rev. Right Worshipful J. S. Murrow, who preaches and peddles as per the above notice, has some $1,200 a year salary from the Baptists, and owns a large farm besides.

If the above gentlemen, to whom we refer these facts, will inform the Northern Baptists of them, we are sure that there is piety and virtue enough in that denomination to redress these infamies at once. We are not personally acquainted with our informant, but doubt not the facts are as above stated.

NEGRO MASONS.—We are informed that the Grand Lodge of the Indian Territory, Chickasaw Nation, lately expelled a member, "not because he was not a good Mason, but because he had once belonged to a lodge which admitted negroes, and they despise 'nigger Masons."

"Hail Masonry divine,
Glory of ages shine."

Surely the day of the universal brotherhood of the human race must come, when the lodge rules the world; rejecting women, cripples, negroes, and all who will fraternize with the colored and Chinese races.

Drifting into Liberalism.

A friend who has always been identified with Anti-masonry, lately expressed to us his doubts respecting the authority of the religious position of the evangelical churches, of Mr. Moody's preaching, and of the Cynosure. Having for some time been in the family of a relative, an influential, 32 degree Mason of this city, the uncertain condition of our friend's mind seemed to result from conversations with him respecting the lodge. This Freemason represented that the Romish church is the only one that has a clear abstract of title to its succession from Christ and the apostles, for Christ, as Papists claim, gave his authority to Peter (Matt. 16: 18), and so on through all the ranks of the so-called apostolic succession, so plausibly reasoned out by the priests of that apostate church. The alternative now was to accept Romanism with its unreasonable dogmas and practice, or to turn to the rationalism which accepts God as a sort of Jupiter Olympus, a creator, a benevolent and powerful being, but without any special relations to men in their present condition. Christ who professed to be his son and the only mediator, was only a good man, a great teacher like Plato, or Confucius, or Buddha, or Emerson, if we accept the refined infidelity of Boston. The great school of this liberalism is the Masonic lodge. It is the liberal church as opposed to the Gospel; and to one or the other, this high Mason held, all intelligent people must gravitate. This is the issue, lodge or pope.

This idea of lodge religion, while it agrees entirely with the doctrines of Mackey, Sickels and the whole circle of Masonic authors and the universal decisions of Grand Lodges, is a very popular way of presenting the gospel of Freemasonry; it sugar-coats a nauseous dose. It puts the lodge at the head of a political reform which promises to be popular, the champion of public schools and all other American principles attacked by the Jesuits. It reveals the secret of the struggle of lodge against priest in Italy, Cuba, Brazil and Mexico, where Freemasons assume to be the reformers, the leaders of the people out of the Egyptian bondage of papacy. In Italy and Brazil they have obtained so great influence in government as to carry important measures in the name of reform and personal liberty, covering the cloven foot of the order with fair-sounding phrases of freedom. Mexico, like the old Scottish border, has been alternately overrun, as one despotism or the other has gained the ascendancy, and between the two with conflicting laws she has become the seat of anarchy, the most wretched of the nations.

The mass of Freemasons, the mobile vulgus, may not be conscious of this tendency of their order. The infidelity is sweet-scented and its rankness is not discovered. But a little investigation will make it bare. Meanwhile they follow their leaders, as the blind Syrians did Elisha, but their eyes will be opened to see on every hand the walls and arms of their loved Freedom's foes, nor will their escape be without peril. But let these men awake, and following Ronayne prevent by a united energy the subjugation of American principles under the heel of Masonic despotism.

—Past Master Ronayne returned on Friday last from Pittsburgh, where three great meetings were held during the week in the Academy of Music. The three degrees were publicly worked to the disgust of Masonic dupes and the strengthening of the reform work in the hearts of the many true men of that city. A local association is being formed to utilize by organic work the results of this new victory for the truth. Bro. Ronayne has spoken during this trip in Ashley and Berea, Ohio, and Pittsburgh and Salem, Pennsylvania. At the latter place the Odd-fellow order was put forward to receive the brunt of the battle; and they had to take it, too. The Berea papers are fair in their notices of the exhibitions.

—Bro. J. T. Hobson has rescued for our readers a choice article from a Baptist pen written eighteen years ago. Without extravagance in style or argument it sets the Word of God clearly and happily over against the lodge system. Every one is strengthened and blessed by these testimonies from the mediæval period of our reform and we will be thankful to any who will send us extracts or copies of them.

—It was a mistake last week to credit the articles on Christmas to the United Presbyterian of Pittsburgh. They are from the Evangelical Repository, the excellent United Presbyterian monthly of Philadelphia. We are sorry to notice that the former has opened its columns this year to the popular notions regarding the day. May we ask Dr. Kerr if "Vox populi vox Deii" holds good in matters of religion.

—Just as we go to press a letter comes from our good brother Faris of Sparta, Illinois, in which he claims that he was misrepresented in our last issue. We quote a few lines from his letter which will set the matter right if injustice has been done:

"Covenanters agree with you in upholding the elective franchise as a principle. * * If the Constitution and the law made bad men ineligible to office as the Divine law does, the Christian would have a chance. But as long as it is legal to exalt the vilest of men, the Christian finds his way forceclosed. * * If one of the candidates had been John Morrissey every one will see the dilemma of the Christian's conscience in going to the polls. It is wrong for a Christian to vote even for a good man, since his first act would be to swear to support a constitution that makes a bad man eligible to office notwithstanding the express word of God to the contrary."

—The desperate malignity of the lodge is well illustrated in a case just now before us. Something over a month ago an evil report came from Missouri, sent thither by two brothers named Thornburg, one a preacher of the North-western Iowa Methodist Episcopal conference, and seconded by a presiding elder on the Sioux City district, all three Masons, It was to the effect that Rev. James Williams of Dakota, whose wonderful sermon and denunciation has been a terrible blow on the lodge in that country, had left the church and run away with a woman not his wife. The story is false from first to last. Bro. Williams is living in Elk Point, Dakota, and is well known and respected in all that region, where his discourse has had a wide circulation. References enough can be had of us of his fidelity as a man and Christian. It is only an attempted revenge inspired by the "spirits of unclean devils" that have a particular care of the well known clause in the Masonic oath regarding lodge charity.

—The Iowa Freeman notices what may be a similar attack on Dr. Richey, a local preacher at Albion, Iowa, who is free to condemn the infamous lodge system to the great scandal of other ministers in the M. E. conference. Their committee, it is said, offered Dr. R. the alternative of ceasing to agitate the subject of Freemasonry, and fellowship and support a Masonic preacher, or else serious charges will be preferred against him. What duplicity, if true! The Torquemadas of Spain were not so mean in their persecutions as these modern inquisitors, made by the lodge out of religious teachers.

—Some time since the New York Square, a monthly Masonic journal, began to issue weekly. The enterprise failed and the publisher fell back to once a month. The Freemason of that city suspended during last Fall. The Square thinks it a "sad commentary" on the intelligence of Freemasons, of whom there are 80,000 in New York State and 20,000 in the district around the city, that they "do not want a a first class Masonic paper, but are fully satisfied with remaining Masonically in the dark." That is not complimenting the work of the lodge surely, which professed to bring all these persons "into the light" Masonically. Are we to understand that this is another link in the Masonic chain of deception, and that it is necessary, after all the trials of initiation and dues, to take a Masonic paper to get "to light?" If that is the final step necessary, the poor men who take it and trust in its light are surely "in the dark." Is it not time that such men as Dr

Mackey of Washington, Geo. F. Gouley of St. Louis, Robt. Morris of Louisville, Illsley of New York, Reynolds of Springfield, McMurdy, Tisdall, Ransom, Myers, et al., found out their mistake in advocating a system from which common intelligence and conscience turns away disgusted. But we fear these "brighter lights" in Masonry are captivated with the liberalism of the lodge and are themselves fallen into the wiles of the devil.

Religious Intelligence.

—Although the preaching services were discontinued in this city on Sabbath the 17th inst., yet the inquiry meeting have been continued daily in Farwell Hall and the Tabernacle all through last week until ten o'clock each night. Moody and Lankey were assisted in this precious work of ingathering by many of the pastors and prominent lay workers of the city.

At the Thursday noon meeting Mr. Moody said the two or three previous days seemed the most blessed of his life. He gives to private interviews with inquirers of all classes the whole day not occupied with the noon meeting and one or two inquiry meetings for special classes which he prefers to lead himself.

—On account of the continued sickness of his daughter, Mr. Moody will remain in Chicago during the present week, continuing the inquiry meetings as last every day until ten o'clock in the evening. The Boston people are not ready yet for him, and it is reported that their Tabernacle will not be ready for occupancy before the 10th or 15th of January.

—As the result of Mr. Hammond's work in Philadelphia it was reported two weeks ago that some thousand persons have signed the covenant expressing a hope in Christ, and the meetings had then no immediate prospect of closing. At a men's meeting on Sabbath evening, Dec. 10th, nearly every unsaved person in the house arose to request prayers.

—The pastor of the Free Methodist church in De Witt, Iowa, reports the convertion of a member of four secret societies.

—The Free Methodist has reports of revivals in the churches of which it is the organ, in Norwich, N. Y.; Attica, Ind.; Aurora, Ill.; Three Rivers, Mich.; Galt, Canada; and Elwood, Minn.

—Bro. Stratton of the Am. Wesleyan has returned to his editorial work after conducting special meetings at Varick, N. Y., in which over half a hundred souls were brought into the light.

A series of meetings at Rockford, Ill., under F. M. Rockwell, J. V. Farwell and C. M. Morton of this city was the means of greatly reviving and uniting the Christians of various churches and beginning a good work of grace.

—Rev. Wm. Dillon of Dayton, O., was lately visited by the members of his congregation one evening who left satisfactory testimonials of their love to the value of $40. It was on the tenth anniversary of his marriage.

—Revivals in the United Brethren churches at Shoals, and Mt. Erie, Ind.; Hopewell, Wis.; Madison and Lacy Spring, Va., have added some 200 to the army of God below.

—Forty-five young men are studying for the ministry in the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Alleygeny, Pa.

—The Jubilee Singers, after successfully laboring in various parts of Great Britain and the Continent to raise money for the complete endowment of Fisk University, at Nashville, Tennessee, are now engaged with great success in seeking the funds for a new building for the University, to be called Livingstone Mission Hall, and the great aim in it will be to educate missionaries for Africa.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church has fifty-six settled pastors. Some of these are in charge of several small congregations. There are four congregations in Chicago, five in Philadelphia, three in Baltimore, and five in New York and Brooklyn.

News of the Week

—Last Thursday evening a meteor of remarkable size and brilliancy passed in an easterly direction over central Illinois. It was seen from Lawrence Kan., to Toledo, O., and from Mendota to Champaign, Illinois. It appeared nearly as large as the full moon casting a bright light upon the earth and emitting a fiery trail. At some points it made a heavy rumbling like thunder, and its explosion, heard at El Paso, Lincoln and Sparland, Illinois, caused such a concussion as to shake the buildings and cause great consternation among the timid and ignorant.

—The House Committee investigating the South Carolina election are satisfied that the Hayes electors had a majority.

—President Grant tells a press correspondent that he is anxious to let go the reins of government and see his successor installed. His plan is to settle down in Galena, Illinois, but will visit the West Indies and possibly Europe first.

—A late severe storm on the British coast caused unusual disaster to shipping. Many wrecks have been reported, and in numerous cases all on board were lost. It is thought several vessels have been lost from which no news have been obtained.

—A successful revolution in San Domingo has deposed Gonzalez and restored Baez to the Presidency of that Republic. Gonzalez has quitted the country, and Baez will resume the reins of government.

The National Sunday School Teacher for January is a well prepared number. The lesson notes are prepared with care and an appreciation of the wants of a Sabbath school teacher. The Scripture hints are most useful in inducing a critical study of the greatest and best commentary — the Bible itself. Articles on "Elijah and his Times," "Delight in Work," "Things that will happen in 1877" and a "New Year's Address" make up the contribntions. Chicago: Adams, Blackmer & Lyon Pub. Co.

The same publishers issue an attractive infant class paper, the Little Folks, and also a Superintendent's Diary, similar to the Teacher's Diary noticed elsewhere. Price $1.00.

—Don't put off till to-morrow—getting that neighbor to look at the Cynosure and subscribe.

Notices.

Mr. Ronayne expects to be at South Argyle, N. Y., Worcester, Mass., and other points East during the month of January. He will be in Chicago from the 1st to the 13th of January and would like to arrange for meetings in other cities in the Eastern States. Friends will please address him at once at this office.

To all Seceding Masons.

BRETHREN:—I propose that we, who have been members of the Masonic order, meet in general convention in some centrally located city as early as practicable; that we hold our convention six successive days; that we work a degree of Masonry each day or evening, and that we issue from that convention an address to the American people. All I feel will see at once the propriety of this movement and I have no doubt will do everything in their power to make it a glorious success. Think the whole matter over, brethren, and communicate your views through the Cynosure. Now let us all work and work quickly else we may not have time to work at all.

Though not through grips, still fraternally yours. EDMOND RONAYNE.

The Kansas State Christian Association,

Opposed to Secret Societies, will hold its next semi-annual meeting at North Cedar, Jackson county, Kansas, in the Reformed Presbyterian Church, on Tuesday, Jan. 23, 1877, at two P. M., and will continue in session about two days. Several public addresses will be delivered by popular speakers, and important business is to be attended to. The friends of the cause are urged to be present, and the public generally are invited to attend. Free entertainment will be furnished to all who may attend from a distance.

J. DODDS, Secretary.

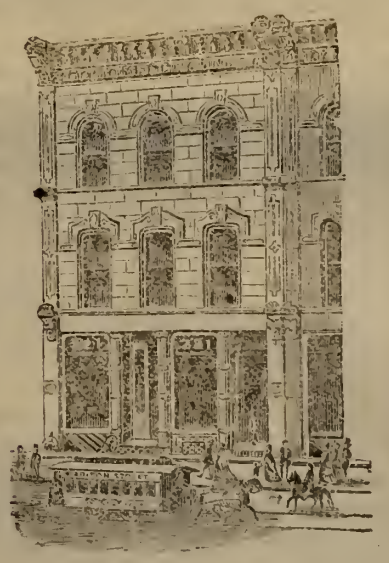
North Cedar is eight miles southeast of Holton, Jackson county and twenty-five miles due north of Topeka.



Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front buildiug No. 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr. Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr. 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The Home Circle.

What hast thou Done this Year.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest."—Eccles. 9: 10.

"What hast thou done to show thy love,
To him who left his throne above;
His glorious throne in yonder sky,
And came to earth for thee to die?
Tell me, my soul!

What hast thou done in all this year,
Since Christ in love dispelled each fear,
And in their place gave peace of mind,
And access to his throne to find?
Tell me, my soul!

Hast thou the world renounced entire;
And for its pleasure felt no desire?
From every folly turned away,
To seek for joys that last alway?
Tell me, my soul!

Where'er a brother in his need,
Appealed to thee to clothe or feed;
Did'st thou with generous soul reply,
And for Christ's sake thyself deny?
Tell me, my soul!

Hast thou e'er dried the widow's tear
Or sought the orphan's path to cheer?
Hast thou e'er raised the fallen up,
And hidden him once more to hope?
Tell me, my soul!

Or hast thou lived in selfish ease,
Seeking alone THYSELF to please,
Forgetful that thy God would claim
Thy service, if thou bear his name?
Tell me, my soul!

Forget not, soul, that by and by,
A reckoning comes in yonder sky,
When Christ, as Judge, will ask of thee,
"O soul! What hast thou done for me?"
Remember, soul!"

A Year for Christ.

We not unfrequently hear the ringing motto upon the lips of zealous evangelists—the world for Christ! The field, wide as it is, is no broader than that measured by the words of the Lord Jesus, "The field is the world!" There is no presumption in announcing this amazing work as among human possibilities, with the divine blessing. Although large results may not seem to follow, at once, local efforts, no spiritual endeavor, sincerely put forth in this direction, is lost. There is a form of consecration which is in harmony with this world-embracing work, and which can be distinctly apprehended and made practical in the daily experience of a Christian man. He may readily take up into his mind a limited portion of time, and by thoughtful plans, may devote it especially to the Master's service. He can embrace quite clearly, what is involved in the consecration of a year to Christ, and so determine the division of his time, and the use of his talents and substance, as fulfill the letter and spirit of his gift.

What is needed is a solitary hour such as the Master himself secured when he retired to the mountain to pray; a deep, sincere, heart-searching examination of the spiritual condition, alone, in the presence of God, as Jacob wrestled all night with the angel of the Covenant on the further side of the river Jabbok; an unqualified surrender of time, talents, and substance to the Lord Jesus, and a heart-felt submission of the whole direction of the life to his choice—Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do!

Such Christian disciples as have made the distribution of their worldly substance a matter of principle, and have set apart a definite proportion of it to be bestowed as Providence indicated, have been greatly surprised to find how considerable a sum was constantly in hand of the Lord's money to meet every rising exigency. So would our readers, if they should make this well-considered and honest consecration of time and affections to the Lord, and should go forth with the prayer always warm upon their lips, "what wilt thou have me to do," be both humbled and overwhelmed with gratitude, to discover how much blessed service, with its constant revenue of spiritual enjoyment, could be afforded amid all the recurring duties of daily life. How society around us needs this very labor, and how much, if possible we need it ourselves, to bring us nearer the Lord, who stands by the side of all the subjects of Christian charity, to save us from worldliness, to enrich our daily experience, to enlarge our ability for service, and as the fit expression of the obligation we owe to him, who, 'though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor,' and to whom belong all we are and have, for he hath bought us with a price. What an impression would be made upon all our churches, our Christian associations our charities, our families, our fellow citizens, if any number of persons should thus sincerely and devoutly consecrate themselves unto our Lord! Let this then be the motto for the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and seventy-seven—a year for Christ.—Selected.

A Call to Work.

Let us all go to preaching. Send polished Paul to Athens, and plain Bartholomew down among the fishing smacks by the sea. Do not look so anxiously into your pockets for your diploma from Yale, or your license from the Presbytery. If the Lord does not send you into the ministry, no cannon of the church can shoot you into it. But if he has put his hand on your head, you are ordained, and your working apron shall be your robe, and the anvil your pulpit; and while you are smithing the iron, the hammer of God's truth will break the flinty heart in pieces.

Peter was never a sophomore, nor John a freshman. Harlan Page never heard that a tangent to the parabola bisects the angle formed at the point of contact by a perpendicular to the directrix and a line drawn to the focus. If George Muller should attempt chemical experiments in a philosopher's laboratory, he would soon blow himself up. And hundreds of men, grandly useful, were never struck on a commencement stage by a boquet, flung from the ladies' gallery.

Quick! Let us find our work. You preach a sermon—you give a tract—you hand a flower—you sing a song—you give a crutch to a lame man—you teach a Sabbath-school lass—you knit a pair of socks for a foundling—you pick a splinter from a child's finger. Do something! Do it now! We will be dead soon! —Selected.

The Old Year's Gifts.

What have you brought to me, Old Year!
Many a hope, and many a fear,
Many a joy, and many a pain,
Pleasure I ne'er shall know again.
For the world grows sad as we grow older,
But smiles no less on each new beholder.

What have you brought to me, Old Year?
Love so sweet, and its burning tear.
Longings that mocked me, hopes that died,
Infinite wants unsatisfied.
And instead of thanks would not scorn be fitter
For gifts like these, unsought and bitter?

What have you brought to me, Old Year?
Doubt and darkness, not yet made clear,
Little of knowledge, but more of strife,
Days and nights with weariness rife;
While the earth's wild moan of discordant sorrow
Forever ascends from morrow to morrow.

What have you brought to me, Old Year?
Life the shorter, and death more near;
Dreamings ended and hearts grown cold—
Slumbering 'neath the damp earth mold.
I thank you, Old Year, for this you have taught,
To hope for little and fear for naught.

Forgive, forgive, O sad Old Year!
My tears are dropping upon your bier.
Solemnly tolls the midnight bell—
For all, Old Year, I loved you well.
One sweet hope broods like peace o'er my heart,
And not with the year will it thence depart.

Servia and Bosnia.

Servia, the Slavic principality now engaged in one of its periodical struggles with the Ottoman empire, contains an area of 21,000 square miles, lying between Austria, Wallachia, Bulgaria and Bosnia. The country is mountainous, and by far the greater part is covered with dense forests. The land which is under cultivation is extremely fertile, and yields bountiful harvests of the cereals, of hemp and tobacco, and of various fruits, particularly of plums and grapes. The climate is temperate and salubrious, but, in the elevated plateaus, is somewhat cool. Oak is the chief wood in the forests, yet chestnut and fruit trees of various sorts abound. In some places large tracts are covered with wild pear trees. The plum crop is one of the most important resources of the country, many of the peasantry depending upon it for their subsistence. The fruit is dried in the form of prunes, by a process which is known only to this people and to the Bosnians.

Almost one-half of the revenue derived from the exports of Servia is gained by the traffic in pigs. It is estimated that in one year 472,700 of these animals were sent out of the country. Their flesh is not used as an article of food, but they are melted into fat. Servia is rich in mineral products, and its mines of iron and copper are a prolific source of wealth.

The religion of the Servians is that of the Greek church, but they are independent of the Patriarch of Constantinople. They were converted to Christianity about the middle of the ninth century. The country was placed under tribute by the Turks toward the close of the fourteenth century, and in the middle of the fifteenth century was completely subjugated by Sultan Mahmoud. During the last 150 years insurrections have frequently occurred in Servia, which, though successful for a time, have provoked a barbarous retaliation from its foreign masters. In 1815, Milosch, the leader of a triumphant rebellion, was chosen Prince of Servia, and the election was sanctioned by a hatti-sherif of the Sultan. He was succeeded in 1860 by his son, and by Milan IV. in 1868.

Bosnia, lying on the western boundary of Servia, includes the Turkish domains in Croatia and Dalmatia, and the district of Herzegovina. It comprises an area of 26,874 square miles, and in 1869 had a population of about 1,100,000. The surface of the country is much like that of Servia, being mountainous and covered with forests. Some of the highest peaks of the Dinaric Alps reach an altitude of above 7,000 feet. The oak is the principal wood in Bosnia as in Servia. The Quercus Aezilops produces very large acorns, the cups of which are extensively used by tanners and dyers. They abound in tannin, and are exported from the Levant under the name of Valonia. The Q. infectoria furnishes the large brown galls known as Mecca galls, and used for dyeing, in the manufacture of ink, and in the preparation of tannic and gallic acids.

The iron obtained in the mines of Bosnia is of superior quality, and it, together with coal, lead, and other minerals, is found in great quantities. The fertile soil and temperate climate of the country are favorable to the growth of agricultural products, which are nearly identical with the crops of Servia. The Bosnian plums are esteemed above those of Servia, Croatia or Austria. The manufactures of the country are limited to the production of fire-arms, sabre-blades and knives.

About one-fourth of the population of Bosnia are Turks; the remainder consist of Bosnians, Croats, Morlaks, Montenegrins, Germans, Illyrians, etc. The Morlaks, inhabiting Herzegovina, are Greek or Roman Catholics. Bosnia was annexed to the Ottoman Empire in 1522, and has since been the scene of perpetual insurrections.—Tribune.

Carlyle on Huxley.

Ah, it's a sad and terrible thing to see nigh a whole generation of men and women, professing to be cultivated, looking around in a purblind fashion and finding no God in this universe. I suppose it is a reaction from the reign of cant and hollow pretense, professing to believe what in fact they do not believe. And this is what we have got to. All things from frog spawn; the gospel of dirt the order of the day. The older I grow—and I now stand upon the brink of eternity—the more comes back to me the sentence in the catechism, which I learned when a child, and the fuller and deeper its meaning becomes, "What is the chief end of man? To glorify God, and to enjoy him forever." No gospel of dirt, teaching that men have descended from frogs through monkeys, can ever set that aside.

The Pope as "Supreme Judge."

The most pitiful death scene which for a long time has come to public notice, was that of the late Cardinal Antonelli. He had, somehow, just how remains a mystery, accumulated vast riches, ten or eleven million dollars, besides art treasures innumerable; he had long been the next man to the Pope himself in wielding the scepter of the Romish Church, the greatest and most compact human establishment on the globe; but when death confronted him, his marvelous will, like a wounded tiger struggled against it most vehemently. But when the announcement was made by his physician that he had not forty-four hours to live, the Pope had himself carried up to the Cardinal's apartments. As the Italian Gazette, published at Rome, states:

This unexpected visit, immediately after the doctor's opened his eyes; he understood at once that his sentence was written, and tnat he must die. Pale, emaciated. agitated, and no longer master of himself, he rose suddenly to his feet, and then, falling on his knees beforc Pius IX., exclaimed, "Most blessed, father, you are the Vicar of Christ, and can absolve me; for charity hear me;" and here commenced a solemn scene.

And, as the same paper adds:

The Pope acted the part of the Supreme Judge, whose representative he is, and the once formidable Secretary of State, now become an humble penitent face to face with death, confessed his sins. At last the penitent became silent, and the hand which binds and looses on earth and in heaven was raised to absolve him in articulo mortis. When the Holy Father returned the second time to visit the dying Cardinal he was delirous.

Altogether significantly it is said, that the Pope "acted the part" of Supreme Judge, but alas, what a huge and awful tragedy, as well as blasphemous delusion it is in this stupendous "play" of Romanism, when a man pretends to "act the part of the Supreme Judge," and try to persuade millions, amid the temptations of life and in the agonies of death, to trust for pardon and salvation in him rather than in the Lord Jesus Christ!—Advance.

Maxims for Hard Times.

Take care of the pennies. Look well to your spending. No matter what comes in, if more goes out you will be always poor. The art is not in making money, but in keeping it. Little expenses, like mice in a barn, when there are many, make a great waste. Hair by hair heads get bald; straw by straw the thatch goes off the cottage, and drop by drop, the rain comes into the chamber. A barrel is soon emptied, if the tap leaks but a drop a minute. When you mean to save, begin with your mouth; many thieves pass down the red lane. The ale jug is a great waste. In all other things keep within compass. Never stretch your legs further than your blanket will reach, or you will soon be cold. In clothes choose suitable and lasting stuff, and not tawdry fineries. To be warm is the main thing, never mind the looks. A fool may make money, but it needs a wise man to spend it. Remember it is easier to build two chimneys than to keep one going. If you give all to back and board, there is nothing left for the savings bank. Fare hard and work hard when you are young and you will have a chance to rest when you are old.

Children's Corner

The New Year.

It's coming, boys,
It's almost here;
It's coming, girls,
The grand new year!
A year to be glad in,
Not to be bad in;
A year to live in,
To gain and give in;
A year for trying,
And not for sighing;
A year for striving,
And hearty thriving;
A bright new year.
Oh! hold it dear
For God who sendeth,
He only lendeth.

Children's Letters.

Waverly, Bremer Co., Ia.

Dear Editor:—I read in the Cynosure that little children write for that Christian paper. So I thought I would write a few words. My father is a strong Anti-mason. You know he lectures against the lodge. He was out in a place called Lime Rock, and from there to Horton and Clarksville. He had big meetings. He got cold and was sick three weeks. God will let father get well is my prayer. Masons don't want him to get well. A Masonic lady writes in our county paper about pa's lecture. Bro. George answered the Lime Rock lady; so God's work goes on. God bless Bro. Ronayne and Bro. Stoddard. Those gentlemen were in our house when in Waverly. God bless the Christian work. I am eight years old; when I get older I will write better.

Yours in Christ,
Bertha Smith.

My pa's name is Adam Smith.

Leetonia, O., Dec. 8, 1876.

Mr. Editor:—I send you an answer to the enigma which appeared in the Cynosure of Nov. 30th, "Constantinople." I herewith send another for the "Children's Corner," if you think it worth publishing.

Yours, &c.,
Allie Alexander.

ENIGMA.

I am composed of 28 letters.

My 18, 1 14 8, 25 and 15 is a musical instrument.

My 24, 1, 12 and 7 is an animal.

My 25, 17, 2, 21, 26 and 10 is a city of England.

My 5, 23, 5, 5, 15 and 13 is a kind of spice.

My 22, 25, 19, 27, 4, 16 and 28 is what some plants produce.

My 9, 16, 1 and 23 is a city in the United States.

My 3, 6, 9 and 13 is a wild animal.

My 18, 1, 16, 28 and 11 is a number.

My 13, 6 and 20 is a color.

My whole is an abomination to the Lord.

The Children of China.

Wherever you go in China these little children swarm about you like bees. Many of them are very pretty. They are peculiarly timid because they are trained to believe in ghosts and spirits, which they feed sometimes, and at other times frighten away by letting off crackers. They are very curious to see foreigners, and yet run to hide from them. They suffer, some more and some less from the heat, and from the bites of mosquitoes. Some, too, have very painful diseases—their heads covered over with boils, which show the more when their heads are shaven. The filth and dirt in which they are often left is very distressing. They are often beaten much by their parents, who say they have not time to amuse them, nor to train them in any better way; and often the one who has not done wrong is beaten because the mother does not try to find out the culprit. Their way of living is very miserable. They get their meals on the floor as best they can. Many of them huddle together on one bed. If you ask, How can five sleep so? mother says, "Well, if they slip off they must lie on the ground." They have not nice little songs and hymns as you have. They are very fond of pictures, but haven't any like yours. They have not much to cheer them, so they get some little toys, made of paper and mud, to imitate lions, tigers, cats, cocks, and hens, with nodding heads and tails. They easily break. These little Chinese boys and girls are not often sent to school, and when they are they learn very little, because their language is very difficult, and have not good teachers. While you are taught all that is good, they are taught all that is bad; so that they are not afraid to do wrong, as you are, and like to gamble and steal, and tell lies. But God has not forsaken these poor little children. He gives them fruits which they like to eat. One kind is called the pumelo; its appearance is like an orange, as big as your head. The skin is very thick, and makes a good cap for a little boy to keep his head from the burning sun. Sometimes, too, it is used to make marmalade. Besides this, they have a large variety of fruits. The only pity is, the Chinese gather them very early and the children eat them when unripe, which causes the illness and death of many. But, best of all, God through you, sends to some of these poor children the Gospel, and they are learning of Jesus, who loves little children, and of him who says, "I love them that love me, and those who seek me early shall find me."—Juvenile Offering.

"I Like to See Everything Happy."

"Take care, my dear! Mind you don't fall in! What are you reaching after?"

The words came from a lady passing along a country lane, and were addressed to a little girl who was leaning over a pond by the roadside, reaching after something with a long twig which she had apparently picked up in the hedge. The child drew back as the lady spoke, and turning to her, said simply—

"Oh, if you please, ma'am, here is a poor bee got into the water, and can't get out again, and I'm afraid he will be drowned. I was trying to push that leaf to him, for him to crawl upon; but my stick isn't long enough, and I can't reach it."

"Let me try," said the lady, smiling. "I daresay I can manage it. Poor little bee," she said, as she took the twig from the child's hand, "you shall not be drowned if we can help you; we should not like to be drowned ourselves!"

And with a little effort she succeeded in guiding the leaf to the drowning insect. They watched it with deap interest as it struggled to gain a footing on the dry leaf; and when at length it succeeded and began to wipe the water from its wings, it would have been hard to say which was the more pleased, the lady or the child?

"There, I think it will do now," said the lady. "The warm sunshine will soon dry its wings, and it will fly away as gaily as ever.

"But I have known children," she said, as they went along the lane together—for they were both going in the same direction—"both boys and girls, who would have taken more pleasure in seeing that poor little creature drowned than in helping it out of the water. I know one boy in particular who, I fear, would even have thrown stones into the water to sink the poor thing. I am glad that no such boys or girls caught sight of it before you."

"So am I," said the child, "I like to see everything happy."

"I like to see everything happy!" What a beautiful sentiment! How like God it is to have such a feeling! Look at the myriad creatures that God has made, and with which he has peopled the world! So different in size and shape, in habits and movements—some flying through the air, others burrowed in the earth; some walking over the land, others swimming through the water. Think how wonderfully he has provided for the innumerable wants of all these creatures, and in various ways fitted them for enjoyment, and how evident it becomes that God loves to see everything happy!

Learn the lesson, dear children—the lesson of kindness, not only to one another, but to all God's creatures.—Children's Friend.

Pigeons Love.

A writer in the Scottish Naturalist tells a story of a pigeon which illustrates the truth of the saying that God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, and the high power of instinct prompted by parental love. Two pigeons had built their nest in the top story of the dovecote, and had hatched their young, which came out of the egg about the middle of March, 1876. On the 16th day of March a very severe storm of snow and drift set in at dusk. It must be noticed that the door of the dove-cote looked to the northwest, from whence the storm was coming, so that the snow blew right into the portal where the young pigeons were lying, only a few days old.

The storm was very severe—so much so that it was thought to be the hardest that had happened for many years, and the young brood would have no doubt perished but for the happy expedient that the father of the young pigeons adopted. He stood in the door way with his tail spread out to the storm, and the wings in a fluttering position, evidently with the intention of stopping the draught, so as to shelter his naked offspring, and there he stood for hours with the snow thick upon his back and tail, breaking the intensity of the cold. But for this the young must have died.

May young friends, never indulge in the use of slang, nor allow the habit of using vulgarisms and silly jesting. With those who have formed this habit, everything, almost, is turned into ridicule, and some low and indecent term is often given to the most chaste expression. True politeness will not tolerate this for a moment, and it indicates an impure heart.

Political.

The American Party and the Last Election.

A few leaders in this movement remembering that the political contest grows hot near the time of a presidential election, bewildering or intimidating even conscientious men, said, "Let us nominate our candidates before men are pledged to support other parties." In accordance with this idea Hon. James B. Walker and Donald Kirkpatrick were nominated on the present American party platform at Pittsburgh, Pa., June 9, 1875.

This action was hailed with joy by all connected with this reform, so far as we know. A year later the Convention at Chicago endorsed these nominations with almost entire unanimity.

Electoral tickets were prepared for Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Kansas, Missouri, Minnesota, Nebraska, West Virginia and California, seventeen States.

State tickets were nominated in Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and California. Four years previous only the State of Illinois had an electoral and State ticket in the field. We believe that two Walker and Kirkpatrick flags were raised during the campaign; one in Ohio, and one in Illinois. A few campaign speeches were delivered in Missouri and elsewhere, and a thorough, able and candid discussion of the duty of voters at the polls was conducted through the columns of the Cynosure in a Christian spirit.

Those who voted the American party ticket were earnest, intelligent men, whose motto was "Trust in God." Many of them were patriots who had voted for the same principles forty years ago.

Ballots of the American party may have been fraudulently thrown out in some instances, and there is no doubt that tickets were sometimes detained till after election by unprincipled post-masters, but in general we think that considering the exciting contest and close race between Hayes and Tilden, the results of the election are very encouraging to friends of this reform. A great advance has been made on four years ago. Let us thank God and take courage.

Gov. Bullock on Civil Service Reform.

If the presidents and professors of the colleges must deem it their duty to participate as public speakers upon the hustings, it is of the gravest importance that they should return to their classic halls in robes bearing no soiling by sophistry, by partisan exaggeration, by disguised apology for corrupt practices, by any, even the slightest compromise of a Christian scholar. Let their instruction and their example, without which all their instruction is vanity, fire the rising student-citizen with the resolution that, if ambition is to make him the servant of the people in office, honor is to prevent him from becoming their victim or their slave. The press, the third estate, which has become the first, must be counted on as a chief reformer, itself not seldom needing reform. This omnipresent observer, this universal censor, at all times aggressive, and a part of the time just, already become in large proportion individual and independent during nine months of the year, and in smaller proportion through the whole year, in its higher representatives fully up to the culture and moral sentiment of the professions and the schools, must be a mainstay in all our hopes of moral advance and political reformation. It is from this quarter that the citizen is to receive his daily encouragement in eclectic voting,—of two bad candidates, taking neither, of a good and a bad choosing the good one, of two good ones, selecting the better of the two. There is no teacher of civil reform equal to a well-cut and discriminating ballot.

The Springfield Republican comments upon the above as follows:

Gov. Bullock's recipe is good. Every voter can do a deed in civil-service reform,—every eclectic ballot, every scratched name, every instance of taking a good name from one ticket, and a good name from another, and leaving the poor ones out altogether, is a direct civil-service reform act. A discriminating ballot is a civil service reform club.

From all Along the Line

D. W. Elderkin, Spartinsburg, Pa., writes:

"The American party cast eighty-three votes in the State for Walker and Kirkpatrick. I regret that our brethren in this reform did not stand shoulder to shoulder in this trying time, by voting for honest and untrammeled men, and leave the result with Him who led Israel out of Egypt and delivered the bondmen of the South from slavery. How can we expect to save our country from ruin by voting for either the Republican or Democratic parties? Both are led by ring men, who have sworn allegiance to a secret conspiring, heathenish, Christ-denying and God-daring empire. Men whose purposes are to rule or ruin. At every election these secret society leaders, who have disgraced the Republican party, and thinned its ranks by leaving out every honest man who dares to reprove their wrongs, come before the people crying aloud with trembling limbs and distorted face, that 'there never was a time when we needed every vote in the Republican party as badly as at this election.' 'Stick to the party just this time.' 'Your anti-secret movement is too soon, the people are not ready to go with you,' etc., etc. But when the election is over the Masonic officers get together and congratulate each other on the success of their schemes, and the ease of keeping the anti-secret element in the shell till it will die for want of sunlight. O my brethren, have you not yet learned the villainy of this secret sum of all villainies. Come success or defeat, come weal or woe, come prosperity or adversity, come life or death, I will vote no more with oath-bound deceivers; I will compromise no more between two evils, by attempting to decide which is the least, but will vote for men who acknowledge God as the ruler of the universe; who recognize the common brotherhood of man, and strive to obey the Golden Rule of doing by others as they would be done by."

Isaac Marlow, Kennonsburg, O., writes:

"You can count twelve votes for Walker and Kirkpatrick in this township (Wayne), also seven in Seneca and thirteen in Marion township. That is as far as I have heard yet. Many more would have voted the American ticket but were afraid that Tilden would be elected. It seems that our voters have all formerly been Republicans. Tilden lost no vote in this township by the American ticket being in the field. I think that against four more years passes by we will leave Peter Cooper as far behind as he did us this time."

If we expect to distance the Peter Cooper party at the next Presidential election we must work in our local elections.

E. J. Chalfant, York, Pa., writes:

"The official returns of York county, Pa., gave only one vote for the American party. The returns stated that this one vote was in Hellam township. Now the Cynosure has already reported another vote in Franklintown, York Co., which makes two, and by an election officer of the ninth ward of York, I am told that his ward gave us one vote. I have good reasons for believing that the American vote of York county was much larger than I now report it. The official returns of Pennsylvania gave the American party 83 votes. Now it is well known that the State returns did not give the American vote in many of the counties. Luzerne county, one of our strong-holds, is left out of the returns entirely."

We have one vote reported from Luzerne county.

J. S. Gard, Jefferson Center, Ind., writes:

"We had two votes at Jefferson Center, Huntington county, Ind., for the American party ticket. Some of us are beginning to vote as we pray, that God may overthrow that giant evil, secrecy, both in church and state."

R. E. Adams, College Springs, Ia., writes:

"I have not seen any notice of the American party votes cast here in this place. There were five only. There would have been more had the tickets come in time, but they came the day after election. One man told me since then he had felt guilty ever since for voting the Republican ticket. I am very much pleased with the way Moody answered the question on secret societies. I think myself that every Christian should cry 'separation! separation!' until the churches stop crying, 'O, you are riding a hobby.' I tell you I am sick of that cry. I am glad that the election is so close, so our government will see how near the precipice of ruin it has come. * * * Brother Phillips gave us a lecture on secret societies. It was a masterpiece. Every one said it was the best they had ever heard. Our enemies could find no fault with it."

Jonas Brown, Highgate, Vt., writes:

"I received six or eight American tickets for President, and I used one, the only one I could get into the box. They appeared to be a new thing here, but few knew of them. It is the second Anti-masonic ticket I have had the pleasure to cast for President of the United States. I go back to Wm. Wirt. I left the lodge in 1829, and have been on the field of battle ever since. I am almost seventy-seven years old, and very lame and cannot leave home much without the help of some friend. In 1859 we got a reprint of the report of an Anti-masonic committee of the legislature of Vermont, in 1833, and I never thought I should live to see the principle move as it does now. May the Lord speed it on."

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE.

The Friday noon meeting has for weeks been given to the subject of temperance, and on account of the universal sympathy for men who are honestly struggling to be rid of intemperance, and no less because of the measure of success that has attended the efforts in this direction during the revival meetings, this meeting has come to be one of the best attended of the week, the great Tabernacle being filled at each occasion. At one of these meetings Mr. Moody said in his opening remarks:

There is just one thought in the Scripture to which I wish to call your attention. Every man who is regenerated by the Holy Spirit and has a new nature given him will thereby have power to overcome the appetite for strong drink. This power is what men want; but they will not get it unless they get new hearts. It is not the work of the Gospel to make men better, but to make them over new by bringing them to Christ, and having this nature put into them. In the sixth chapter of Genesis, at the fifth verse, we are told, "God saw that the wickedness of man was great on the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." In the fourteenth Psalm, the same doctrine is preached: "The Lord looked down upon the children of men to see if there were any that did understand and seek God; they were all gone aside; they are altogether become filthy; there is none that doeth good; no, not one." "That which is born of the flesh is flesh;" and it always remains flesh; it never can become anything else; that which is spirit is from the Spirit.

The great trouble with these intemperate men is that they are trying to reform in their own strength. The thing for them to do is to stop trying, and come to God and ask him to give them new hearts. These men whom Christ has saved from their sins will tell you that they don't have to stop drinking, they have no desire for strong drink; they have put off the old man, with its appetites and lusts. I asked one of them the other night, "Are you a Christian?" and he answered, "Yes; six months ago I found that God could take better care of me than I could of myself, and since that time I have let him do it."

It may be mortifying to us to admit that we need a keeper, but it is true all the same. Who is there that can say his own heart never deceived him? Why, my friends, you have been deceived in yourselves more times than you have hairs on your heads.

In the 17th chapter of Jeremiah, at the 9th verse, are these words: "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it!" The Gospel says Christ knew what was in the heart of man, and needed not that any should tell him; and he said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." Paul tells us in the eighth of Romans the carnal mind is enmity against God; not at enmity, it is enmity itself. What we want is a new creation, so that we may look and talk and act like new men. Some man says, "I have not strength to resist my appetite." Of course you haven't; but the Scripture says it was just while we were without strength Christ died for the ungodly. God will not mend you, but he will make you over new. This old carnal nature cannot be mended or improved. What we want is to take the Lord Jesus Christ as our righteousness; not to put the patch on the old garment, or new wine into old bottles.

If you read your Bibles carefully you will find that God does not expect anything good from the flesh; and if he does not, surely we need not. Give it all up, and let Christ be all and in all. There is not a poor drunkard reeling through the streets of Chicago to-day, but might be saved if he would stop trusting in himself and come to Christ. There are many who have come here to-day who are saying, "Oh that I might have power over my appetites and lusts." Well, just take Christ and you will have it. Get the new incorruptible nature, and you will hate strong drink with a perfect hatred.

Man has three mighty enemies that are too strong for him: the world, the flesh, and the devil. But he has three mightier friends: the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Our expectation is from God and not from ourselves.

At the same meeting a Mr. Latimer, a very intelligent man and former officer in the Union army was called on for his experience. He said:

"It is not pleasant to think of the past — thank God it is past. I have been a drunkard for sixteen years; I never was a moderate drinker, but from the day when I drank my first bottle of ale in the back room of a country store, sixteen years ago, till the time of my conversion, a few weeks ago, the strongest passion of my life was the love of strong drink. I used to laugh at the temptation at first and despise those whom I found in the gutter, thinking I could control my appetite as I pleased. The temperance societies and all such means organized to save the drunkard I held as useless and foolish, for I had confidence in my power of will and thought others should be strong as I. I have heard the bullets of the enemy whistling about me without blanching; I have looked into the muzzle of a loaded weapon pointed in my face without the feeling of fear, but I never felt such a sinking in my heart as I felt that day when I first came to realize that my appetite was my master. I came to this city drunk. I had no hope. I fully expected to go down to a drunkard's grave. I sometimes took thirty or forty drinks a day, and was soaked full of liquor, like a sponge. I used to sit up all night and drink and play cards. I was full all the time, so that however much I drank it produced no effect upon me; and while in that condition I came to the Tabernacle, out of curiosity, without one thought that I should ever be anything else than a miserable drunkard. I sat up there in the gallery, and looked over the happy faces of the congregation, and it only made my heart harder.

"By and by Mr. Sankey sung that hymn, 'What shall the Harvest be?' and when he came to the third verse

> Sowing the seed of a lingering pain,
> Sowing the seed of a maddened brain,
> Sowing the seed of a tarnished name,
> Sowing the seed of eternal shame,
> O, what shall the harvest be!—

the words went through me like an arrow. I leaned my head forward on a pillar. My memory went back to my boyhood and its happy days; then I thought of myself lated. when a boy of eighteen I enterer the army and was commissioned as an officer. I thought of all the high hopes of those days blasted. I thought of my wife and family made miserable by my sin, and then last came the recollection of my old mother, who did not know whether I was alive or dead, but who I felt sure was still praying for me. I could not stand it, and hurried out to fill myself with liquor, and drown my convictions in beastly intoxication. But in my dreams I kept hearing the words, 'What shall the harvest be?' When I woke in the morning those words were written on the walls of my room. Everywhere I went they were staring at me. I felt myself driven to the inquiry-room, though I could not believe that even the power of Almighty God could save a man like me. But after a while I began to pray: 'Jesus, thou canst save me — no one else can.' And he answered my poor prayer, and saved me, body and soul. Now, my friends, if the Lord could give me a new heart and take that appetite away from me, he surely can do it for every one of you; and I pray that the Spirit of God may come and save you and take away your appetite and lusts, and make you over into new men in Christ."

During the narration of this wonderful experience, which was given in clear and graphic language and with intense feeling, the vast audience seemed moved as one man by a mighty sympathy, and there seemed not a dry eye among the thousands in the Tabernacle, and sobbing was audible in many parts of the crowd. This gentleman has been sent out to speak at other places and to tell of his wonderful redemption from strong drink. His story will always have attentive listeners.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M.E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending Jnly 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratnitonsly sent ont, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but fnnds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literatnre if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosnre Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited nnmber of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the pnblic over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Before another issue of the Cynosure reaches you the old year will have passed away with its record.

This week clubs of five for a year have been received from Rev. J. P. Stoddard. James Matthews, Jordan's Grove, Ill., and Benj. Ulsh, Silver Lake, Ind.; eight for three months and nine for a year from Peter Minton, Millville, O.; six for three months each and one for a year from Thos. Gibbs, Dora, Ind.; four for a year from John Lazenby, Jacksonville, Ill.; Abner Orr, Cainsville, Mo., three for a year and one for six months from M. R. Britten.

The Cynosure debt reported in the Cynosure March 1st, 1876 was $1,054.87 has been increasing all through the intervening months and now stands at $3,148.07. If all our readers who are able to do so would go to work resolutely for new subscriptions we believe that this debt would be cancelled next month. "Owe no man anything, but to love one another" is a rule we wish to observe, how shall we do it in this case?

First send in your renewal promptly; second, send all the renewals and new subscriptions that you can possibly secure. Devote a day to work for the Cynosure whenever practicable.

Among the exhibitors at the Centennial Exhibition may be mentioned the well-known Organ manufacturers of Brattleboro, Vt., Messrs J. Estey & Co. The "prominent absence" of such a firm from the "list of awards" has doubtless occasioned many questions as to the reason. The explanation is simple indeed. They did not compete. They simply exhibited their instruments on their own intrinsic merits, with no efforts to obtain recognition except from the public.

We cannot too highly commend such a course, as compared with some exhibitors whose sole aim seemed to be not to give the public pleasure in examining their wares, but to obtain the bronze medal.

Enquiry elicits the fact that Estey & Co. are the largest manufacturers and the heaviest exporters of their class, one-half of the entire amount of organs shipped to European markets being from this house.

RICHARD WAGNER, of whose ability to judge there can be no doubt, writes, "The tone of the Estey Organ is very beautiful and noble and gives me the greatest pleasure. My great friend Franz Liszt is also charmed and delighted with them."

MME. ESSIPOFF says, "I can play with exquisite enjoyment for hours on these beautiful instruments."

OLE BULL,—"Excel in fine, powerful tone."

MME. LUCCA,—"I am surprised at their full, noble and organ-like tone."

RUBENSTEIN,—"Tone full, noble and exceedingly animating."

There is no doubt about the meaning of such expressions as these from the leading musicians of the age, and Estey & Co., may well claim to lead the world.

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK,

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

TIN ROOFS

BRICK WALLS.

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

A TOWN LOT ABSOLUTELY GIVEN AWAY!

Worth $100.

WE OFFER FOR THIRTY DAYS, A TOWN LOT IN MINERAL CITY, GRAYSON COUNTY TEXAS, FREE EVERY LOT GIVEN AWAY UNCONDITIONALLY.

NO SETTLEMENT OR IMPROVEMENT REQUIRED.

YOUNG MEN, SECURE A HOME IN THE FINEST PORTION OF THE UNITED STATES, FOR NOTHING.

FACTS AND STATISTICS.

Grayson county, Texas, is in the finest portion of the State, and is traversed by THREE railroads, and enjoys the advantages of the Red River navigation. Has been settled for THIRTY years. SUMMER THE YEAR ROUND. From the United States statistics of 1870, Grayson county, Texas, produces a variety of production unrivaled in the country. COTTON, TOBACCO, CORN, WHEAT, POTATOES, and all the FRUITS of the SUNNY SOUTH, as well as the growths of hardier climates, making this country truly a paradise.

MINERAL CITY is located on a beautiful plat of high, rolling prairie, interspersed with fine timber, in Grayson county, on Big Mineral creek, an unfailing stream of pure water, and on the Gainsville branch of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, twelve miles west of the intersection of the M. K. & T. and Texas Central Railroads. The location is beautiful and healthy, and in all respects desirable, having natural parks, good drainage, and abundance of pure water at all seasons of the year.

WHY WE GIVE LOTS AWAY.

The Ohio, Kentucky and Texas Land Company have LARGE TRACTS of the best agricultural and mineral land in Northern Texas. And the time seems to be favorable to throw some of our lands on the market, at prices ranging from $5 to $10 per acre for unimproved, and $20 to $30 for improved lands. We have platted in the midst of our lands the town of MINERAL CITY and to encourage emigration there, we give to any one sending their names to us, a WARRANTY DEED in fee simple for one or more lots in MINERAL CITY, the only charge being the sum of ONE DOLLAR to pay the Notary Public for acknowledging the deed, and actual expenses. WE DO NOT GIVE EVERY LOT AWAY, but every alternate one. We do not expect that every one who takes a lot in Mineral City will go there, but WE DO THINK A GREAT MANY WILL, and they will induce their friends to follow, and it will be but a short time until we have a FLOURISHING CITY. And as we own every other lot it is obvious to all how we are to make money. We make out the deeds UNCONDITIONALLY, not requiring you to settle or improve. Our limit to any one person taking advantage of our liberal offer is five lots.

INSTRUCTIONS.—We will send, by return mail, to any one who will send us, within thirty days from date of this paper, one dollar with their names written plainly in FULL, a clear WARRANTY DEED to a 25X100 FT. town lot in MINERAL CITY, Grayson county, Texas, CLEAR OF ALL TAXES TO JANUARY 1, 1878. Your application for a town lot must in all cases be accompanied by ONE DOLLAR, to pay cost of drawing, and acknowledging deed, and registry fee, and mailing, and postage. Your lot can then be sold or transferred at pleasure. LET ALL IMPROVE THE CHANCE TO SECURE A HOME. Deeds sent to any part of the UNITED STATES AND CANADAS. Address all communications to the

In his Bible reading in Farwell Hall, Chicago, Dec. 14th, Mr. Moody took for his theme, "Walking with God." As one of the conditions of this state he mentioned separation from the ungodly, quoting Paul, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." These words, he said, must mean something, and he made three distinct applications of them: as forbidding business partnerships with unbelievers, entering the marriage relation with an unbeliever, and joining secret lodges. On the last topic he said: I expect I will be treading on some one's toes, perhaps some in the audience, and perhaps some of these ministers; but out with it. I do not see how any Christian, most of all a Christian minister can go into these secret lodges with unbelievers. They say they can have more influence for good, but I say they can have more influence for good by staying out of them, and then reproving their evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than Lot had. If twenty-five Christians go into a secret lodge with fifty who are not Christians, the fifty can vote anything they please, and the twenty-five will be partakers of their sins. They are unequally yoked together with unbelievers. "But," says some one, "what do you say about these secret temperance orders?" I say the same thing. Do no evil that good may come. You never can reform anything by unequally yoking yourself with ungodly men. True reformers separate themselves from the world. "But," you say, "you had one of them in your church." So I did, but when I found out what it was I cleaned it out like a cage of unclean birds. They drew in a lot of young men of the church in the name of temperance, and then they got up a dance and kept them out till after twelve at night. I was a partaker of their sins because I let them get into the sins because I let them get into the church; but they were cleaned out, and they never came back. This idea of promoting temperance by yoking oneself up in that way with ungodly men is abominable. The most abominable meeting I ever attended was a temperance meeting in England. It was full of secret societies and there was no Christianity about it. I felt as though I had got into Sodom and got out as soon as I could. A man rescued from intemperance by a society not working on Gospel principles gets filled with pride and boasts about reforming himself. Such a man is harder to save than a drunkard. "But, Mr. Moody," some say, "if you talk that way you will drive all the members of secret societies out of your meetings and out of your churches." But what if I do? Better men will take their places. Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who are separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up.

Topics of the Time

The Chicago daily press were a year or so since condemning with the utmost severity a man named McDonald, the leading gambler of the city and a great local politician, for his activity in these respects. The police have curtailed his faro bank, and respectable voters cut off his political wing with its ballot box stuffers, and he now covers his old business with a stylish liquor house. In his new role he finds the papers ready to print full columns of praise for him as if he had condoned for the abuses of the past. The position of the Chicago papers generally is singularly inconsistant. They would drive the low, dirty groggeries out of existence, but lend a hand to the high-priced gilded palaces of the pit and encourage the use of so-called lighter drinks like beer.

The hopelessness of promoting temperance by such means as these is beyond a question. Some startling facts on the use of malt liquor have lately been published by Dr. Walden of Cincinnati. He says:

"The beer consumed annually in the United States contains 23,850,000 gallons of alcohol. Ten pints of lager-beer or seven pints of ale contain the same quantity of alcohol as one pint of old Bourbon. Two glasses of lager-beer contain as much alcohol as half a gill of Bourbon. The United States breweries produce one half as much alcohol as the distilleries. In England, Wellington's beer-house act was passed to diminish intemperance. But a committee of the British parliament reported that the beer house act had done more than all other agencies to increase drunkenness and prostitution, and to brutalize the English laborers."

The great Exposition has not satisfied the popular appetite for celebrating the events of the Revolution. On Tuesday, the 26th ult., the one-hundredth anniversary of the surrender of the Hessians and the battle of Trenton was celebrated in that old New Jersey town. Unlike the more peaceful arrangements at Concord and Lexington with which these celebrations begun, it was intended that this should represent every possible detail of the battle and the occurrences immediately preceding it. The crossing of the Delaware in flatboats lacked, however, the danger of crushing icefloes, and the bleeding feet and freezing limbs were left out of the programme. This period of the Revolution has been considered as one of the most gloomy for the patriot cause: but this blow and the next quickly following in the battle of Princeton, revived the valor of his countrymen, and compelled even his enemies to acknowledge Washington as one of the greatest commanders of his age.

One of the difficulties attending the investigation of Southern elections on the part of Congressional committees and much more of the poor witnesses is told by the Tribune of Friday last. The incident stands for itself and needs no explanations:

"Senator McDonald yesterday met more than his match in a colored witness before the Senate Committee sitting in New Orleans, who, after having reluctantly given the names of several leaders of the bull-dozing organizations, manifested some nervousness as to the consequences of the exposure to himself upon returning home, and asked what protection the Committee could furnish in case he were molested. 'Report the parties to the Committee and they shall be punished," was the prompt reply of the Democratic Senator from Indiana. "But," insisted the witness, "If I go home and get killed, I can't report to the Committee!" There was no answering this. The all-powerful Committee of the Senate of the United States could compel this luckless negro to testify against his persecutors, but could not lift a finger to save him from the deadly vengeance that he feared."

In the late summer of 1870 word reached Chicago of the sudden death of Mr. C. M. Wyman, who had greatly endeared himself to the Christian workers of this city by his songs and singing. In the noon prayer meeting Mr. Moody referred touchingly to the friend taken in the vigor of a strong manhood and asked Prof. Bliss to sing Wyman's beautiful "Immanuel's Land." Mr. Bliss complied with a tender and touching pathos never to be forgotten. The incident is most vividly recalled by the telegram received here Saturday afternoon that P. P Bliss and his wife had gone down to death in the awful Ashtabula disaster. To thousands to whom the splendid physique, the thrilling voice, the gentle heart were familiar the loss was like that of a brother. Major Whittle, to whom the soul of the dead was knit like that of David to Jonathan, started immediately with Hon. J. V. Farwell to search for the remains. Their efforts up to Monday afternoon were unsuccessful and Mr. Farwell returned leaving the other still at the hopeless task. Mr. Moody has raised $10,000 for the support and education of the two boys of Mr. Bliss, and large collections have been taken up for a monument.

The following figure, said to have been used by Dr. Murray, the noted "Kirwan," is a forcible illustration of a great truth worthy of the consideration of American Protestants: "We have in this country a great mill; the lower stone of it is our common-school system, the upper stone the Bible. We pour into the hopper the heterogeneous immigration from all lands, and it comes out an enlightened and Christianized Protestanism. I venture to assert that if it is to do its work well, the two stones of this mill must be kept close together."

Revival Hymn.

BY REV. J. L. BARLOW.

Moved by the Spirit, now abroad,
The people crowd the house of God
Where law Divine exposes sin
And wakes a bitter strife within;
The while, there's One, the soul can ease
Jesus of Nazareth—none but He

Convicted by his Spirit, now
Let stubborn will be made to bow;
A costly ransom Christ has paid;
A broken law for us obeyed,—
One effort, soul, and thou art free,
Jesus of Nazareth died for thee!

While he who reigns above the skies
Gives life eternal, as a prize,
The wage that sin doth offer thee
Is death, to all eternity:
Why will thou slight such love, and die?
Jesus of Nazareth asks you, "Why?"

See! one by one thy friends are saved,
Be then no more by sin enslaved,
Nor harden still thy sin-sick heart,
Nor from the way of life depart:
Around thee cast thine eyes and see,
Jesus of Nazareth calleth thee!

There's Christly work for all to do,
And rich reward for service true,
The offered prize, then make thine own,
And render praise for mercy shown:
Then with the saved, thy song shall be,
"Jesus of Nazareth saveth me!"

Ancient Prophets and Modern Episcopal Bishops.

The prophet Habakkuk, in the first chapter, sixteenth verse, speaks of treacherous, wicked men who "sacrifice unto their net and burn incense unto their drag, because by them their portion is fat and their meat plenteous."

And we are told that even at this day it is customary for the handicraft men of Hindoostan to bring their tools together once a year and worship them. No one can doubt the paganish character of this worship; and there are but a few real Christians, one would suppose, who could doubt the paganish use which our modern Freemasons make of their tools, the square and compass, level, gavel, etc. The compass we know they associate with the Holy Bible, as one of the lights of Masonry, its points being mysteriously placed at certain prophetic words in that book, etc., etc.

It would seem very difficult for a man of education, good sense and sound religious principle, to see anything but jugglery in the mystifications practiced by Freemasons. Do we not all know that there is no more moral value in a kit of workman's tools than there is in a brazen image of Jove, Bacchus or Diana? Do we not know that the worship of Ephesus, where St. Paul fought against wild beasts and Polycarp was murdered, was the worship of handicraft men? Do we not know that the greatest mystification temple since the days of Ephesus, that of Philadelphia, is the work of handicraft men "whose portion is fat and their meat plenteous," because of their craft?

And now we are told by a modern bishop, not exactly a St. Paul or a Polycarp, but one "of good and regular standing" in the lodge, that there is something behind all this tool-worship that is really worth knowing. It is true, a pair of compasses is a pair of compasses; but behind it lies a moral virtue, if we could only see it. And in order to see it, we must go blindfolded and forsworn into the lodge and learn its traditions from some Albert Pike, who has miraculously received wisdom from an oriental despot with a thousand wives, and thus learned to establish land-marks for the American republic!

Such is the Jesuitry of Freemasonry. A kit of tools and the Bible may seem to be very plain, intelligible things to cowans and Protestants; but behind their apparent plain uses, there is a hidden meaning of the greatest importance, which Masonic priests and Jesuit priests can alone understand or explain.

AMERICUS.

Dr. G. C. Vincent to the Western Pennsylvania Convention.

At the late Convention at Sandy Lake, Mercer Co., Pa., the following letter from Dr. Vincent, editor of the Citizen, Brookville, Pa., was read:

To the Anti-masonic Convention, meeting at Sandy Lake.

BRETHREN:—It is not practicable for me to attend your Convention, and I have concluded that I should at least greet you with a word of cheer.

It rejoices me to see publicly advertised, a convention to be held for opposing "Freemasonry."

It seems strange that such an institution as Masonry could take root and grow to such magnitude in a country where the Lord's Prayer is recited, and where there are pulpits of Protestant Christian churches, almost in hearing of each other, ringing with vaunting professions of reform.

But so it is; Freemasonry has been established, has grown, and perpetuated itself in the orthodox centers of western Pennsylvania, till it is in its influence, overshadowing; a snare to our young men, who deliberately conclude that it is unsafe to be without the protection, or patronage of some oath-bound order. It is especially regarded a reckless presumption to speak against such orders. "He that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey."

The order, in the clandestine way which they well understand, will assail and persecute their opposers. While the Christian people, whose principles are all at war with these works of darkness, look on, as they would at a hippodrome, or circus, and in their culpable simplicity even approve the "slaying of the innocent."

The claims of Freemasonry should be thoroughly examined, and its iniquity exposed. The churches will not do it. Politicians will not do it. They are involved by direct obligation or indirect complications, so that they are paralyzed. None but bold, independent reformers are equal to the occasion. But such, the Lord be praised, are not wanting when the occasion calls them. Your call for a convention is at once proof and illustration of this needed reform.

Of minor evils, in disturbing the republican equipoise of society in all business matters, I make no mention, for "no man may buy or sell, save he that has the mark of the breast in his forehead or in his hand," i. e., no man who cannot display the badge of his order on his breast, or by a canonized grip of the hand, can buy or sell to advantage. This is one of the minor evils, inseparable from all such orders.

But they have invaded the sanctuary of justice, and seated themselves there with amazing security and complacency. I do do not profess to be comprehensively acquainted with our public functionaries, but if there is a presiding judge in any of our courts, whether primary or supreme, who is not a Freemason, I do not know who it is. Not only are judges thus involved but attorneys and jurors and witnesses. So that in many, perhaps most of the cases litigated, the result of the trial is as well known before a jury is impanneled or any testimony given, as it is after the verdict is rendered. It is nicely arranged to work out a certain result. Whether this be realized in every case or not, is not important to our argument. This is the manifest tendency of the whole conspiracy. Secretism has thoroughly corrupted our judicial administrations.

Nor is this all. To talk about "civil service reform" is silly; under the present regime it is impossible. The President of the United States or other functionary having the appointing power, may think he will act honestly in his selections, but let a man make application for office who can show testimonials of ability, honesty and fitness, but nothing more. Let another display the badge, or impress the grip of Masonry, and what can the dispensor of favors do? By one oath he "swears or affirms" so and so. By the other he binds himself to go "the length of his cable tow" to show partial favor to the fellow craft, by an oath which specifies "cutting the throat from ear to ear, tearing out his tongue by the roots, cutting out his heart from his breast," &c. Need I ask which oath will control the official? Civil service, meaning promotion on the score of merit, is simple mockery in the hands of such men. These are elements of knowledge with Anti-masonic reformers. Let the people have them and our work is done.

I would take the liberty of suggesting farther that some measures be taken to obtain specifically the number of offices held by Masons or other secret orders. It would be very desirable to know them all: President, Vice-president, Cabinet officers, Senators, Representatives in Congress. Then of the judiciary, the Supreme Court of the United States, of our own State. Also in our counties, judges, justices, attorneys, and other officers. In our cities how many of the municipal officers, aldermen, policemen, etc., are members of secret orders and of what one. A showing up of this kind would be of material service to our cause. Can it not be done?

In view of the iniquity practiced under cover of oath-bound secrecy, may we not hope to see the day when the man who will display his badge in our temples of justice, which, when plainly rendered, means a purpose to pervert justice, be he judge, or juror, or attorney, or witness, will be arrested as in conspiracy against the sacred rights of his fellow citizens.

May God bless and direct you in your deliberations. In cordial sympathy I am yours for the truth and right. G. C. VINCENT.

Masonic Claims to Morality and Religion.

FROM STANDARD WORKS OF A. G. MACKEY, WITH COMMENTS BY J. W. RAYNOR.

Mackey's Ritualist, p. 30, "Speculative Freemasonry is the application and sanctification of the working tools and implements, the rules and principles of operative Masonry to the veneration of God and the purification of the heart." Again, on same page, "The Speculative Mason is engaged in the construction of a spiritual temple in his heart, pure and spotless, fit for the dwelling place of Him who is the author of purity."

Reverence for God and heart purity or sanctification, I have believed to be fruits of the Holy Spirit's work, applying Divine truth to this end, but speculative Masonry claims other agencies than those God has appointed, for, while in the second quotation above, the Mason's work is declared to be the rearing of a pure and spotless spiritual temple in his heart, etc., this work is done not by any reference to or dependence upon the atoning work of Christ, but by a ritualistic use of material working tools; for Mackey further says on same page,

"The common gavel is an instrument made use of by operative Masons to break off the corners of rough stones, the better to fit them for the builder's use: but we, as Free and Accepted Masons, are taught to make use of it for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting our hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting our minds as living stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Mackey in his Lexicon, p. 161, and Webb in his Monitor, p. 21, have "fitting our bodies," and Sickel's Monitor, p. 35, has "minds." Speculative Masonry must surely be a profound science that can teach its disciples to fit their bodies and minds for heaven with so unpretending a tool as a stone dressing hammer.

Mackey's Jurisprudence, p. 96, "Speculative Masonry is but the application of Operative Masonry to moral and intellectual purposes. Our predecessors wrought according to the traditions of the order at the construction of a material temple, while we are engaged in the erection of a spiritual edifice, the temple of the mind. They employed their implements for merely mechanical purposes; we use them symbolically, with a more exalted design. Thus it is that in all our emblems, our language and our rites, there is a beautiful exemplification and application of the rules of operative Masonry to a spiritual purpose."

Again, in Mackey's Lexicon, p. 520—Art., Woman, "Free and Speculative Masonry is but an application of the art of operative Masonry to moral and intellectual purposes. Our ancestors worked at the construction of the Temple of Jerusalem; while we are engaged in the erection of a more immortal edifice—the temple of the mind. They employed their implements for merely mechanical purposes; we use them symbolically, with more exalted designs." Thus, in all our emblems. our language and our rites, there is a beautiful exemplification and application of the rules of operative Masonry, as it was exercised at the building of the temple. And as King Solomon employed in the construction of that edifice only hale and hearty men and cunning workmen, so our lodges, in imitation of that great exemplar, demand as the indispensable requisite to admission that the candidate shall be free-born, of lawful age, and in the possession of all his limbs and members, that he may be capable of performing such work as the Master shall assign to him. Hence it must be apparent that the admission of women into our order would be attended with a singular anomaly, because in the very organization of Masonry, man alone can fulfill the duties it inculcates or perform the labors it enjoins."

Jurisprudence, p. 97, "This is, therefore, the origin of the landmark which prohibits the initiation of females."

If speculative Masonry is pursuing "moral and intellectual purposes," if it is building "a spiritual and immortal edifice," "the temple of the mind," it may be asked, is not woman capable of such pursuits? Is not woman's aid desirable, yea, indispensable in the spiritual improvement of the race? Is it necessary or wise to exclude one-half of the working force of society from any properly organized moral or religious effort? Women are not excluded from participation in Christian and church work, nor from the benevolent and reformatory enterprises of the age. In the divinely constituted order of society, in view of its relations, dependence, duties and interests, woman's heart, and mind, and sympathies, and labor, and prayers and influence are just as essential to human welfare and elevation as man's work. Hence I affirm that any moral organization that excludes women from all knowledge of its methods and all participation in its labors, is itself an anomaly, an excrescence, a moral abomination, an ill-shaped, uncalled-for institution that ought never to have existed, that ought now to go into speedy oblivion.

Who Helped Him to Preach?

Many years ago Pardon Cook and I. H. Miller traveled the New Philadelphia circuit in Tuscarawas Co., Ohio.

Pardon Cook was a Mason, and true to his Masonic teachings, he openly persecuted those of his members who would not bow the knee to Baal. I. H. Miller was not a Mason, but not clearly discerning what manner of spirit this handmaid was, suffered himself to be largely influenced by Cook, in his opposition to brethren strongly opposed to the craft—prominent among the latter class was Judge L. and Edgar S. Miller, under the mistaken idea that it was duty to aid Cook, in attempting to put down these two outspoken opponents of the lodge, took occasion, in one of his discourses, to administer a severe castigation to these brethren. He dwelt with much severity, and in unchristian spirit, upon their opposition to Cook as a minister, and appeared to enjoy unusual liberty, so much so that he was clearly of the opinion that the Lord had wonderfully aided him, and owned his labors. He rode home, feeling great satisfaction, and as he supposed, in the full enjoyment of the favor of his Divine master, quite elated with his day's labor. On reaching home, he had no sooner entered the house than he related to his wife with great self-approbation how he had applied the scorpion lash to the judge, and again stating that the Lord must have helped him. His wife, who was deeply pious, calm and judicious in her judgment, heard him through, and after a prayerful pause, remarked, "It was not the Lord that helped you preach that sermon, it was the devil." This simple, but most emphatic language, struck him dumb; all night long it rang in his ears, and, like a barbed arrow, it had pierced his heart. "It was the devil that helped me preach that sermon." Early next morning, deeply penitent for the great wrong he had done two worthy brethren, he mounted his horse, rode back to the residence of Judge L. and 'Squire S., related to each what had taken place between him and his wife, acknowledged the wrong he had done, and humbly begged their forgiveness, and ever afterward treated them in the spirit of Christian love. —Selected.

How I was Affected by the Initiation.

I repeat, with care as to the strong nature of the expression, when taking the first degree of Masonry, my confidence in both men and ministers received the severest shock that it ever did, one from which I have never been able as yet fully to recover. And, by parity of reasoning, I then felt, and still believe it, that I had lowered myself in the eyes of Masons. And I believe this the more, as I know that the next minister who joined the lodge, did, by that act lessen himself in the esteem of some of the members of the order—one in particular mentioned the fact to me who is still a member of the same lodge as then, and is a man of intelligence and candor.

I wish to say more at this point. I have good reason to believe that, whatever ministers may say of Masonry as good, &c., there is not one that joins the order without losing moral power over Masons to a certain degree. And those who speak the highest in praise of Masonry lose the most. I once heard a minister lecture; it was called "A Masonic Lecture;" but let me say, such a lecture is never given in public. A true Masonic lecture given in public would ruin Masonry, as far as it should go. But to return, this man's lecture was pronounced grand. Men praised it, and women praised it, and some said, "Why, I had no idea that Masonry was such a good thing." But Masons—well, this same Mason above referred to told me this: "I could but feel sorry to hear brother—— say some things that he did. I thought that the outside could not fail to see that Masonry was not what he called it," &c. And as the man said this and more to me, I saw that the lecturer, though he got twenty-five dollars for his lecture, and Masons paid it, yet he lost, and it was his unwarranted assumptions of Masonry that caused it.

Yes, Masons may say of me, "I would not believe him under oath," &c. Yet there is not one of them who knows me but what has more confidence in my integrity now than before I left the order. It is not for Masons to decide whether they will believe me, under oath or not under oath; but it is for me to say how that shall be. We cannot disbelieve a fact which is known to us. Masons cannot do it. Therefore so long as Masons know what I state to be true, they have no power to disbelieve it, and, hence I hold the case in my own hands While I state facts about Masonry, I compel Masons to believe me; but if I state a falsehood, then I place it in their power to disbelieve me.

I know that Masons claim that I have violated a "solemn oath or obligation." I have more to say upon this oath question than I will now say, but here simply state, that to keep the oath is to act, if not to speak the lie; for Masonry is revealed to the world and Masons know it. Now, either to speak or act in a way calculated to make men believe that Masonry is a secret is to practice falsehood—is to lie. He that keeps such an oath must be a perpetual liar. I dislike to write the foregoing statements, but to put Masonry in its true character demands this and much more which I will give, the Lord willing, by and by, but now will simply state, let Masons say or think of this as they may, I know that I stand upon the solid truth now, but when in the lodge I stood upon a false foundation, and was reckoned in with a system, the very existence of which depends upon falsehood, or the practice of deception.

Now mark, in stating this I am giving deductions from my own experience in Masonry. It may not appear so to another, but may be to some all of the sublime, &c., that is claimed for it. But I fail to see it in that light. Call it aberration, mental weakness, or what you please, to my mind Masonry has every phase of the ridiculous, without so much as a single principle of what is either mysterious, sublime, or good. Excepting as to mystery, it is strange that a system so perfectly void of all that it claims to be, should obtain so largely among intelligent men—should gain such an influence over so many outside its pale, and should so effect moral sentiment as to cause men in its support to violate and utterly repudiate all law whether human or divine, standing opposed to its principles. It was this want of agreement between the high claims of Masonry and what I saw in the lodge—in its ceremonies, teachings, and oral work, that at the very first filled my mind with the most extreme disgust, and it now appears to me that there can scarcely be a shade of either disgust or contempt, that I have not experienced, when witnessing the ceremonies of Masonry, whether open or private.

Step by step I passed on, hearing signal and response, question and answer; receiving the "shock of entrance," and the benefit of Masonic prayer, making the trio circuit, "Traveling East," being placed in position for receiving the obligation, hearing the pledge that this oath or obligation would not interfere with either civil, moral, or religious duties, repeating the oath, and receiving the "Shock of Enlightenment," and so on from entrance to exit. So did my feelings pass on from point to point; first misgivings, then shame, then astonishment, now a sense of the ridiculous, and now disgust not only at all around me, but with myself also, and finally, as sentence by sentence I repeated the awful oath, and bound myself under its terrible death-penalty, shocked, not only at the language used, but more especially by the conviction that then fastened upon my mind, —"Morgan is a murdered man,— it was done according to Masonic law, and no doubt by Masonic hands." All of this is a faint outline of my feelings and experience when taking the first degree of Masonry.—Rev. E. W. Wheeler in the Wesleyan.

We find in the American Missionary items showing the relative cost of peace and war with the Indians. Under a peace policy our government is paying, in round numbers $5,000,000 per year to and for the Indians. War in Florida cost 1,500 lives and $50,000,000, or the life of one white man and $33,000 for each warrior engaged. The Sioux war of 1856–57, cost several hundred lives and $40,000,000. The Oregon Indian war of 1851–'55 cost $10,000,000. In the Cheyenne war of 1864–'65, some fifteen or twenty Indians were killed at a cost of $1,500,000 per man, aggregating in this war $35,000,000, besides the loss of life and property on the frontier settlements. The war of 1866 with the Sioux cost over $10,000,000. The war in 1867 with the Cheyennes cost $40,000,000. The cost of caring for the Indians of New Mexico, by the army, according to Sherman, was from 1846 to 1866, $100,000,000. For the past forty years military operations against Indians have averaged $12,000,000 per annum. The 60,000 civilized Cherokees, Creeks, etc., in the Indian Territory, do not cost a cent, while to restrain 10,000 Apaches, the government pays the army yearly $2,000,000.—The Inquirer.

Suffering seasons are sifting seasons, in which the Christian loses his chaff and the hypocrite his corn.

There are no fragments so precious as those of time, and none are so heedlessly lost by people who cannot make a moment, and yet can waste years.

To Anti-masons in Cincinnati.

Gentlemen:—Do you not think it advisable that we should now form a local political association and take steps to bring out a full ticket to be voted at our next charter election; also to get a room and hold monthly meetings, where we can discuss the Masonic and kindred societies, and invite the public in to learn the dark and hidden beauties of these institutions? This is the course that has been pursued by our friends at Albion, Iowa, with the best of results. They now control a majority of the votes there and elect none but Anti-masons to office. This is as it should be, and is an eminently fit course to be pursued by the friends of our cause everywhere. Now is the auspicious time—the acceptable hour. Let the readers of the Cynosure in this city speak out. I am ready and willing to do all in my power. Will the spirit move?

Seceder's Convention.

Algona, Ia., Dec. 27, 1876.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I like the idea of Mr. Ronayne very much. Now as Iowa lies near enough to the centre of the continent to make it as easy of access as any other State to all. I further suggest that some place in this State, say Dubuque or Davenport, on the Mississippi be the place of meeting. And among other interesting duties and items of that meeting let each seceding Mason bring or cause to be sent, a brief account of his Anti-masonic experience, embodying some of the most interesting items of his persecutions in this nineteenth century. Also that a committee and reporter be appointed to collect these experiences and publish them in book form. And if the convention think best, form a general Anti-masonic church, for our good (as we are without the camp), and the future good of our children and the world. For who are to administer in future the elements of the body and blood of Christ to our children and the world except the hands of those who are loaded with the filthy oaths and heathen rites of Masonry unless such churches are formed?

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, and who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity or sworn deceitfully," &c. I would like to make other suggestions, but perhaps this is all that you can find room for in the excellent Cynosure.

OBITUARY.

A life-long opponent of the encroachments of the Masonic lodge has recently deceased in the person of Mr. Luther Weld, of Brattleboro, Vermont, whose death took place on the 26th of December, 1876, in the eightieth year of his age.

Mr. Weld was born in Guildford, Vermont, where his family were among the early settlers. He himself had witnessed the operation of opening the forests and subduing the lands of the State by the early occupants, who came from the older States of New England. He grew up together with the State; and his character may be regarded as a favorable type of that of the Vermonter of former days. He was a rugged, devoted advocate of popular liberty, in opposition to everything of a narrow, exclusive nature, and hence his opposition to the lodge.

During the time when the people rose, almost like one man, to expel that underhanded, intriguing power from the State he took an active interest in the movement, and remained true to his convictions to the last; although he lived to see the people forget their early principles and fall under the control of an unrepublican power which they had once so decisively rejected. He preserved some of the documents as well as the memories of that opposition to the lodge; and when the Windham County Anti-masonic Society was formed, in 1871, he was present to give it the effective aid of his purse, his advice, and personal services; and he continued one of its most active members. He was a constant subscriber to the Cynosure from the first; and one of his last acts was to cast his vote for the Anti-masonic presidential ticket, Walker and Kirkpatrick. A more determined adversary to the lodge as the foe of republican government cannot be found on the list of our members. His representation of Vermont in her better days, on this subject, has left an example which the young men who knew him will probably follow.

Though Mr. Weld was born on a farm and was fond of agricultural pursuits, yet he possessed and exercised no small degree of mechanical ability. If the reader should ever come upon one of his rifle barrels, though made with very primitive tools, or one of his planing machines, he may rely upon finding a good and thorough piece of workmanship.

Leaving Guildford some forty years ago, he established himself as farmer and mechanic about a mile north of the village of Brattleboro, on the right bank of West river, near where it empties into the Connecticut. He had an eye to the picturesque, and there amid the beautiful scenery of hills, meadows and streams, surrounding himself with a vineyard, choice fruit, and all the comforts of a well-tilled farm, and after an active, useful life he has closed his days. There are few such specimens of thorough American manhood now left among us. Com.

The identical "arguments" used some centuries ago against the introduction of the Arabic in place of the Roman numerals used in England are to-day brought forward against the International Decimal weights and measures,—the Metric System. England, was 400 years behind the continent in adopting our present arithmetic. Can it it be possible that such a conservatism is to be repeated in regard to our weights and measures?

Religious Intelligence.

—The special services at the Tabernacle will close about January 15th. It was originally arranged that Mr. Moody should open in Boston upon the 1st of January, but owing to delay in the construction of the Boston Tabernacle, and sickness in his family his stay in Chicago has been prolonged. Next week there will be a change in the programme, and on Sunday, Jan. 7, the evangelists will begin their last week here. The sermons will be some of those already delivered here, and will be especially directed to non-church-goers. Upon the evening of that day he will preach in the Tabernacle, his subject being "Where art thou?" On Tuesday evening "The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost;" Wednesday, "Excuses;" Thursday, "The Precious Blood;" Friday, "Heaven," and on Sunday evening the evangelist will discourse upon "Tekel." Upon the following Tuesday evening the young converts will meet for the farewell meeting, for which tickets will be issued.—Interocean.

—A layman's convention for the United Brethren churches in Ohio is called to meet in the College Chapel at Westerville, Jan. 17th inst., to discuss questions of great importance to the church on account of the approaching General Conference. The call reads: "Therefore let as many of our brethren as have at heart the edification, harmony, and progress of Christ's kingdom meet with us, and we will spend a day or two together in prayer and consultation, and in preparing a petition to the General Conference on the subjects of lay delegation, pro rata representation, our secrecy law, and other questions of interest to our church."

—Rev. Dr. McGibbon, an Australian who has been traveling in this country, says that Rev. Dr. Hall's Fifth Avenue Church, with "its gorgeous exterior, its massive steeple, its elaborate windows, its luxurious pews, its richly-carpeted and upholstered stairs and seats, its skylight, its polished wood, and its unique everything, costing $2,000,000," ought to be condemned as a sinful waste.

—During the week of prayer, Jan. 7 to 14, there will be a union meeting every week-day afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, in the Madison Square Presbyterian Church, New York, conducted by ministers of several denominations.

—The corresponding secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, in a recent notice, states that the first five months of the fiscal year of that association shows a deficit of $10,000 as compared with the corresponding period of the preceding year. He says should the same rate of diminution prevail during the remainder of the year, it will involve the Union in a disastrous debt.

—Baltimore is the city of "Methodism." It has seventy-four Methodist churches, of which forty-seven are of the Northern Methodist Episcopal.

—A new church building built by the United Brethren in the city of Hopkins, on Hopkins Circuit, Missouri Conference, was dedicated to the service of God, December 5th, 187 , President E. B. Kephart, of Western College officiating.

The Baptist Evangelist Graves, and Prof. H. C. Leland closed a two weeks' series of union meetings in Muscatine, Ia., Dec. 20. It is thought that nearly two hundred gave evidence of conversion. Other union meetings have been held lately in Milton, and Elkhorn, Wis. Prof. Leland was a week since in Cone, Iowa, where a very powerful work is going on, reaching out into the country for miles around.

Reform News.

The Pittsburgh Exposition.

I have at length escaped the smoky streets of the "Iron City" and breathe easier in the free air of the country. A word respecting the work in Pittsburgh may be of interest to our readers.

Leaving Boston on the evening of the 11th I reached Pittsburgh on the morning of the 13th, via. New York and Philadelphia, and began my part of the work of getting ready for Mr. Ronayne, who was to exhibit the three degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry on the 19th, 20th and 21st. Brethren Hanna, Floyd and others had the work well under way. The Academy of Music had been secured, 10,000 bills obtained from E. A. Cook & Co., and part of the funds necessary for meeting the expenses raised. Arrangments were made for the distribution of bills on the principal streets in the city, notices inserted in the papers, and sent to the pastors of the city and surrounding churches, and some interest awakened by personal conference with leading men.

On the morning of the 19th I visited the Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary in Allegheny, and through the courtesy of Dr. Sloane and Prof. Wilson presented our reform and needs very briefly to the students, and requested seven of the young men to act as officers in working the first degree. After consultation among themselves, the following named gentlemen volunteered and occupied the chairs on the first evening: R. M. McKinney, W. S. Fulton, A. D. Crowe, F. M. Foster, W. J. Coleman and W. C. McKinney. The evening services were opened with prayer by Rev. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., and although the Hall was very uncomfortably cold, Mr. R. made it warm for Masonry in Pittsburgh and for the few members of the craft present.

On the day following I visited the United Presbyterian Seminary in Allegheny and meeting Drs. Scott, Cooper, Kerr and Young, was kindly permitted a few words with the students and obtained the requisite number to open the lodge on the second degree. The following young men were promptly on hand and repaired to their several stations precisely at 7:30: R. A. Jamieson, S. M. Bailey, H. S. Boyd, S. R. Frasier, A. J. Shannon, R. A. Gilfillan and D. R. Miller. Rev. S. Collins lead in prayer after which the second degree was presented in a most masterly and convincing manner. The audience was larger and the Hall far more comfortable than on the previous evening. One leading pastor on his way home from the lecture fell in with four Masons, who had not been present, and in conversation remarked that it was impossible that any man of sense should be guilty of such foolishness; to which one of the Masonic party replied, "It is more solemn than you suppose." This was enough, and removed the last doubt from the mind of that pastor as to the substantial correctness of the expose.

The third was the great evening and the "sublime degree." The officers for this degree were from the Presbyterian Seminary in Allegheny, and were secured by the consent and with the co-operation of Dr. Hodge, who takes a lively interest in our work. I had no opportunity of seeing the young men of this Seminary together, as at the other two, but visiting them at their rooms I obtained the names of J. C. Eely, S. W. Prindal, A. F. Irwin, J. D. White, J. M. McJunkin, J. H. Pollock, and Edgar Robinson, who supported the official dignity of the "Ancient and honorable" order for the evening.

The Hall was comfortable and an audience of from 800 to 1,000 seemed deeply interested and many of them thoroughly disgusted with the "sublime humbug" of the Master's degree.

I am persuaded that very much has been accomplished in Pittsburgh through these meetings and that although the daily press of the city was silent, an influence will go forth to different and distant parts of the country which will be felt for years to come. I think that that there are seven young men at least in each of the three Theological Seminaries in Allegheny who understand and detest the craft as never before, and who can tell what God may yet accomplish through these twenty-one consecrated young men, who are soon to enter the ministry. Doubtless their influence over others in the Seminaries and after they enter the active work of the ministry will reach down through the ages.

Several incidents occurred worthy of note, but I will mention but one. I was told that members of the craft were present in disguise. One or two of the gentlemen business men of Pittsburgh were dressed like coal heavers, with woolen shirts and slouched hats, lest, I suppose, they should be seen in such company. Masonry must exert a most fearful and debasing influence upon its own members to induce them to resort to such miserable subterfuges to hide their shame. Mr. Ronayne offered to discuss the merits of their order with any one they would choose, and even to pay the expense of the Hall if they would bring forward their man. But no, instead of acting the manly part some came sneaking in in disguise, which to say the least, betokened no good purpose or intent by their presence. It however had the effect of thoroughly disgusting some who saw them with an institution that could so degrade its members. J. P. Stoddard.

Word from Connecticut.

Thompson, Conn., Dec. 23, '76.

Editor Cynosure:—On the 5th I spoke on the Government of Freemasonry at Morse's Hall, in Putnam; and I have heard of two young men who say they did intend to join the Masons, but now they will do no such thing. I think that what we want to do in all our villages, is to get the people together and talk on what Masonry is and what it is doing against the church of Christ, and our government; and in this way we shall get the people ready and willing to pay brother Ronayne to come here and work the degrees. The trouble is the people do not know what Masonry is, and the most of them are afraid of it. I think we should not despise the day of small things: and if we cannot have a great lecturer, or large audience to begin with, let us go to work and get the people to thinking, and then they will be ready for the rest. If brother Conant can do no better in our State, if he or any one else will make arrangements and pay traveling expenses, I will go to any part of the State and do the best I can to show the old handmaid in her true light, and by her own books. For the war.

Well Begun all Around in Lawrence Co., Ind.

Leesville, Dec. 26, 1876.

Editor Cynosure:

We have started the Anti-masonic movement in this county. I delivered lectures on Freemasonry at Fairview Chapel, near Leesville, on Friday and Saturday evenings, December 22d and 23d, 1876. These were the first lectures opposed to Masonry ever delivered in the county. Ample notice had been given by printed posters and a notice in one of the county papers.

On the first evening a good crowd was out, every seat being full. I spoke upon the character and claims of Masonry. After I was through, Bro. H. Jackson of Jackson county, endorsed what I had said and added some sharp, cutting remarks. Good order prevailed. At the close of the meeting I told the people to come out the next evening and we would show them the "elephant."

On the next evening a still larger crowd was out, so much so that a number of seats were brought from the school-house near by to accommodate the people. After singing "Hold the Fort" and "Broad is the road," I read the 8th chapter of Ezekiel; then Bro. Jackson offered up a fervent prayer for the overthrow of the "unfruitful works of darkness." I asked the question, How are we to know what Masonry is? and then proceeded to produce the testimony of renouncing Masons. I read a letter addressed to me from Rev. T. B. McCormick of Princeton, Ind., who had once been a Mason. I then gave the people a glimpse of the inner workings of the lodge. Quite a number of adhering Masons were present. It seemed that they made it a point to get as near me as possible, for I could scarcely keep from treading on some of their toes while I was speaking. I spoke two hours and a half. The people seemed much interested. At the close of the meeting each evening I distributed a number of tracts. I think we shall soon be able to organize a county association. This is my first experience in the lecture business. I expect to attend the State meeting.

Yours for the conflict,

J. T. Hobson.

Western College, Ia., Visited.

Last week, Rev. J. H. Vandever, editor of the Iowa Freeman, on a lecture tour, stopped at Western, and on Tuesday evening delivered a lecture on Masonry and secretism in general. The audience was good for so short a notice, largely composed of students, which made the lecture the more important; for, to pour light upon a subject of such vital importance into the minds of the young men of our country who are seeking an education at our colleges, should be the object of all who are connected with, and have the control of, the schools of the land.

Bro. Vandever's lecture was very good and forcible. He faithfully uncovered the secret abominations of the dark order, and showed most clearly from their own writings, their usurpation of power in our country, and the dangerous control exercised by them (unobserved by the common people), both in church and state Justice is defeated; iniquity is covered up; piety is brought to a low ebb; Christ is expelled from the heart, and the god of this world is set up in his place. Surely it is high time that the people shake off the prevailing indifference, and pay serious attention to a matter that involves their best interests before they may be irrecoverably lost.

He was listened to with serious attention, and a good impression, no doubt, was made upon the hearers. A club of ten was made up for the Iowa Freeman, an anti-secrecy paper published weekly at Mason City, Iowa, not in opposition to the Cynosure, but as an auxiliary to it. The cause is gaining ground and we think it demands such a paper in our State. By the way, Bro. Vandever as an editor, has already proven himself the right man in the right place, for he makes of the Freeman a live, sensible, edifying paper, well calculated to disseminate light and truth, and greatly strengthen the anti-secrecy cause in the north-west. Other leading questions of reform also receive due attention, such as catholicism, temperance, the keeping of the Sabbath, and Christian holiness of heart and life, and we heartily wish it Godspeed, that it may become a grand success.

Correspondence

How the Temple of the Mock God is Used.

Ed. Cynosure:—I copy the following from the Cincinnati Daily Enquirer of Dec. 24th out of a special to that paper from St. Louis, under date of Dec. 23d. The hire of the temple of the mock God in that city to such people and for such purposes as the dispatch discloses, shows what kind of morality pervades the Masonic institution, and also what kind of a handmaid this leprous thing is to Christianity. Let those wooden horses in Troy, i. e., the Masons in the ministry, defend this transaction on the part of their St. Louis brethren, if they can.

"On Wednesday night (Dec. 20th) the third annual Charity Ball, under the direct management of the police department, was given, and although the sum of $8,000 and over was realized, the means by which this result was brought about are denounced on all sides. Masonic Hall, the largest in the city, was the scene of the carnival. It was crowded to suffocation and by the very worst characters in the city. Respectable women, on noticing the surroundings, fled as from a pestilence. The frail sisterhood were out en masse from the gilded palaces on the avenues and aristocratic assignation houses, and from the dens on the Levee and Almond and Green streets. The majority of them were escorted by thieves and gamblers. The language heard on all sides was of the most scurrilous and obscene character, and the conduct of the half drunken mob was perfectly disgraceful. Innumerable fights occurred, women as well as men indulging in fistic encounters. It is not difficult to account for this state of affairs. The sale of tickets was intrusted principally to police officers (brethren of the mystic tie), and a petty system of black mail was inaugurated. Bagnio-keepers were mulcted according to their means, as many as twenty tickets being forced on some of them. They were of course promised protection and used the ball as men do the newspapers, for the purpose of advertising their stock in trade. The Charity Ball was fathered by some of the most respectable citizens (brethren of the mystic tie probably, and more than likely a portion of them wooden horses in Troy at that), who will doubtless be very careful (?) in future not to lend their names to a similar scheme for the benefit of the needy."

The parentheses in the above I have added for the information of the reader as well as a slight elucidation of some points of the subject. The readers of the Cynosure might call the attention of all "wooden horses" in their respective neighborhoods to the above dispatch and ask them about the godliness there is in Masonry. It is perhaps well to state that the Cincinnati Enquirer is owned and controlled by Masons, so the dispatch need not be discredited, as any invention of the enemy. It reads very much like the scenes of the Eleusinian mysteries, from which Masonry has been in a great degree copied and made up. It is in strict keeping with pagan and Masonic morality concerning which there is no appreciable difference. All the pagan temples were gigantic houses of prostitution, and Masonry studying their character could not fail to imbibe their morality, and this St. Louis affair is clear proof of that fact. This is probably not the last disgraceful scene on a public scale that will be enacted in Masonic Hall in St. Louis. God burned up a church in Arkansas, but a few days since for providing room in it for the holding of a Masonic lodge. It will be no matter of surprise if Masonic Hall in St. Louis should have the mark of Divine displeasure made manifest against it, at almost any time. The Masons were probably well aware of what the character of the ball would be long before any tickets were sold. They probably desired to feast their eyes upon the orgies of the Eleusinian mysteries and the bacchanals of Rome. They have been gratified to the horror of all decent people. "O, Lord, yet how long?"

Yours for God and the right,

J. H. H. Woodward.

What Ailed the Courts?

Perrysburg, N. Y., Dec. 16, '76.

Dear Cynosure:—It has been my intention to indulge in some reminiscences of facts that should never be forgotten, when renewing my subscription, but owing to press of duties inseperable from my position, I must content myself with a brief reference to my very worthy sire.

From about 1820 to 1830, or more, he was acting as justice of the peace. As such he met with many perplexing and surprising incidents. Many of the plainest cases were taken from him and referred to juries; lawyers were employed, and whole days, and even nights, were wasted in senseless quibbles over issues that he would decide within from one to five minutes, after testimony was concluded; and then the verdicts were rendered directly contrary to law and testimony, justice and reason. These evidences of preconcerted fraud puzzled my father greatly, until after the murder of Morgan. But in the very beginning of the agitation consequent upon that murder, and the revelations which were the occasion of that murder, encouraged by the noisy "Jack-masons," real Masons crawled out of their holes, and it became known who they were. Then a reference to the docket, revealed to my father, the mystery of the mysterious wrongs recorded there, in the shape of judgments rendered contrary to law and testimony. It was then found that the favored parties were Masons; their lawyers were Masons; the constables that summoned the juries were Masons, and a controling majority of the jurors were Masons!

In conclusion it is useless to say that my father lived, and at the age of 84 died, an Anti-mason. God bless you. Rev. Wm. Hall.

Moody and the "Minister's" Letter.

Dear Cynosure:—I shall not here give any critique on the language of each of these persons. I merely desire to express delight that the great evangelist has recognized the true character of the lodge as an organization with which it would be entirely out of place for him or other Christians to be connected, and that this arrow of truth has piereed even to the sensitiveness of this minister. I am not surprised that lodgemen should feel greatly annoyed at Mr. Moody's free utterances, but I am sure that many of them will regret that any secretist minister should have revealed this soreness. Doubtless it would be more in accordance with Masonic principles and practices to nurse their wrath and vent their revenge in the dark, or possibly to institute and carry out systematically a scheme of detraction, misrepresentation and slander, anything, in fact, to counteract the influence which Mr. Moody has acquired, and possibly hereafter to give the Judas kiss in order to betray him.

This may seem uncharitable to some of your readers, nor do I accuse every Mason of such motives, but my attention has been specially directed to this subject for some time past, and I have had opportunities of the most favorable character which enables me to form my judgment, and to write these remarks with full conviction of their correctness when applied to Masonry as an organization.

It was very lamentable to find, as I did, that ministers would often defend Masonry rather than Christianity, where their claims came into competition. For example, if the Scriptures were quoted against any act or principle of Masonry, these members would show anxiety not to refer to Scriptures to defend them, but at once assume the case as a lawyer would for his client, and defend Masonry or explain away the force of the Bible with all the zeal and talent they possessed.

The extent of the influence of secretism is amazing. It influences social life, religious life and political life. The business of many corporations is in its service, and it invades the halls of justice. Men, in thousands have become members from selfish motives, and yet they had to say they were not so influenced. It destroys true manhood, and renders every member a sworn brother to other members, regardless of his personal judgment or preferences.

If it were possible, I would warn Mr. Moody not to put himself unnecessarily in their power. Masonic ministers, and in many cases members of churches too, treat Masonry as more important than Christianity and would leave their church rather than the lodge. Now what is this secretism as in Masonry, Odd-fellowship, etc.? We reply, It is organized and maintained on principles the opposite of Christianity, and, although Masons may and will deny this statement, they cannot truthfully do so, as we may easily see, for the best blessings of Christianity are openly proclaimed. The best blessings (?) of Masonry are carefully concealed. God commands the Gospel as a gift to all who will accept it, "without money and without price." Masonry teaches its secrets under oath, and membership must be paid for in money. A Mason must "conceal and never reveal" Masonic secrets. A Christian is commanded to openly confess his faith in Christ. Masonry has a membership of men only. Christianity has a membership of both sexes. Mr. Moody may have a good deal yet to learn of this anti-Christ. He did not attempt to dissect its character. but contented himself with depicting it. He might have shown that its very beginning is a violation of the revealed will of God. Can one wonder that its author should try to conceal this fact from men? For it is expressly written that "whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath and it be hid from him—when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty." This law is now as much in force as when enacted, although the one sacrifice for sin has done away with the Levitical offerings. To say that that sin is not now a sin is as absurd as to say that to murder a man is not now a sin. Christ but enforces the principles of the Divine Law more clearly.

Yes, Mr. Moody, Masonry is a brotherhood of heterogeneous characters—Christian ministers (save the mark) and saloon keepers; believers in Christ and unbelievers in him; men who will say they believe, but only that such a man once lived—but who deny Christ in all that appertains to his character as the Saviour, the sacrifice, and the Mediator between God and man.

Meantime, it is a cause of gratitude to God that this distinguished and honored evangelist should have had the courage to speak out plainly on this most extraordinary modern development of the "deceiveableness of unrighteousness," which, in this age, has raised its hydra heads throughout our churches, and caused a cloud of dread which paralyzes the freedom of our country.

All Right.

Editor Cynosure:

Dear Bro.:—I have just received your issue containing my communication. It is said that "guesswork is just as good as any if you only guess right," and I am glad that you have shown yourself so good at this work. I was greatly surprised to learn from your note that I had inadvertently omitted to send you my name with my communication, but I have the opportunity to set the matter all right. I have no occasion to write anonymously. So conscientious am I in this proceeding that it is a privilege to speak and write in my own proper name; had I not thoroughly and deliberately counted the cost, it might be otherwise with me. As it is I have no reservation to make in the matter. I discard then the writing over an anonymous or fictitious signature. Besides, it would look badly, for it would at least indicate timidity if not actual shame. Thank God I have neither. A man has no occasion for misgiving when he knows that he is right. I am satisfied that there are many in the order who stand precisely where I did for years. They have no faith in the institution but they do not quite dare to say so. But the leaven is working. The advocating an unpopular reform is always in the outset an uphill business, but their advocates can well afford to be sneered at. "The right will prevail." Some of us have not forgotten the days of the anti-slavery contest, when it cost something to be an Abolitionist. There will be enough to advocate this cause ere long.

A. PALMER.

OUR MAIL.

A friend in Farmington, Illinois, writes:

"I regret that I am not able to send money for the Cynosure to be sent to the Young Men's Christian Association. I should love to have one of your papers go to their reading room weekly.

A. C. Eno, Clay Center, Clay county, Kansas, writes:

"There is a deep undercurrent which only needs stirring a little to immediately manifest itself among the people. If it were possible for some of our lecturers to reach this section they might do the cause much good."

Andrew Erickson, Brooklyn, New York, writes:

"The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness teaching those who oppose themselves, if God peradventure will give them repentance to acknowledging the truth, and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will. * * I am heartily in your work against secret societies, which are bringing coming generations back to the dark ages, so as to exclude the Sun of Righteousness."

Mrs. A. E. Jenks, Cheshire, Massachusetts, writes:

"What a great responsibility there is resting on churches to take a decided stand for the pure Gospel. I do think it is a very great honor to all of those churches that have taken the noble stand. They have done just what God will own and bless."

John Lazenby, Jacksonville, Illinois, writes:

"Jacksonville is full of secretism. I know of but two business places in the city that are not governed by the lodge. One man told me that he had taken the thirty-third degree and the Knight Templar degrees. He had paid into the lodge $1,500, $700 for thirty degrees. He admitted all I said about the institution to be true, and wanted all your books. I instructed him how to get them."

M. H. Haywood, Lawrenceville, Pennsylvania, writes:

"I was glad to see that Mr. Moody came out as he did on the subject of secret societies."

Geo. Goodell, Staffordville, Connecticut, writes:

"I heartily believe in the inconsistency of the lodge and church, and pray God speed the noble work of reform that the friends of the Cynosure are engaged in. It is a work which the church and state are alike much in need of. I wish to say that the Cynosure is the best paper I ever read, considering its fitness to the times."

J. P. Richards, Bowensburgh, Hancock county, Illinois, writes:

"I am ready to engage in the lecture work — waiting for calls, and in the meantime am doing something in that work near home; and I trust with success."

Notice Mr. Richards' address as given above.

Josiah Shaw, Fall River, Wisconsin, writes:

"We have but few secret men here and but little opposition to secrecy. A man told me he did not think a little paper like the Cynosure would do much in doing away with the lodge. I told him it was the barley loaf among the Midianites and the Lord's hosts were using it for the annihilation of all secretism."

Jno. Macauley, Pittsfield, Illinois, writes:

"The Cynosure is getting better and better."

Geo. S. Neel, Webster City, Iowa, writes:

"I heartily endorse the cause, and hope for a more thorough organization before another fall. I think we need a few good lectures in this county to start the ball rolling."

W. H. Figg, Reno, Indiana, writes:

"I am laboring to increase the circulation of the Cynosure, as I think it is destined to play the most important part in this Anti masonic reform. I have been thinking the articles 'Freemasonry and Romanism Compared and Examined,' ought to be published in pamphlet form."

Rev. John Smith, Baldwin, Pennsylvania, writes that his wife has recently died.

Elijah Gibbs, College Springs, Iowa, writes:

"These secret societies are the product of those unclean spirits that John saw on the pouring out of the sixth vial. They originated with the pagan, papal and Mohammedan religions, i. e., from the Dragon, the Beast and false prophet. We are now under the sixth vial."

Theo. Osgood, Bedford, Calhoun county, Michigan, writes:

"The majority are opposed to secrecy in this township. We have elected a clean Anti-masonic ticket for the last three years."

Davis H. Seamans, Factoryville, Pennsylvania, writes:

"We have many conflicts with the lodge men and always worst them in argument; so much so that the Masons and grangers are nearly played out."

John Comphor, Smyrna, Ohio, writes:

"I have been bereaved of my dear companion, who was an earnest reader of the Cynosure and hated and abhorred all secret organizations, and avowed that she would never give a cent of her money to support a preacher who belonged to the Masons or Odd-fellows; but would send her money to the Christian Cynosure for the purpose of helping on this glorious reformation. But it is all over with her now: she has gone home to her blessed Savior. My loss is her gain. I submit and say, Blessed be the name of the Lord forever and forevermore * * I intend to do something for the Publishing House. * * I would not be without the Cynosure for four times its cost.

N. R. Corning, Lanark, Illinois, writes:

"I have made a great many enemies since I have been working in the reform, but I console myself with the fact that I have been instrumental in keeping many young men from joining the lodges. I care not for the ill will of the fraternity and will do them all the good that I can. They have threatened to tar and feather me, and one offered twenty five dollars to any one who would mash my head. I have been trying to get the editor of our local paper to print E Bonayne's affidavit as to the correctness of the revelation of Freemasonry, but have failed thus far. The editor told me that his bread and butter was procured by his paper, and that if he should allow that to go in his paper he would have to quit the business and go hungry."

T. R. Cole, Freeland, Illinois, writes:

"I have enlisted to fight the Anti-masonic cause through, or while life lasts."

B. Williams, Warren, Illinois, writes:

"Prayer is the lever that moves the moral universe. It is in answer to prayer that we must look for the breaking of the powers of darkness, and of removing the determined and wilful ignorance in reference to the character of secretism. Their language is, I don't know nor you don't know except you belong to them, and I don't want to know; so professed Christians and jacks talk. It is hard for the blind to see or the deaf to hear."

We hope that all who work for the overthrow of the lodge will also work for the building up of Christ's kingdom, the conversion of sinners and the purification of saints.

R. B. Dewitt, Elyria, Ohio, writes:

"My grandfather, Mr. A. Birchard of Fayetteville, Vermont, sent your paper to me. I like the principles of the Cynosure and it has been the means of creating in me an opposition to all secret societies. Its mission has been accomplished. I need no farther conversion. I am now opposed to secret societies and shall avoid them. I shall give my influence against them."

C. C Cousins, Ravenna, Mo., writes:

"I am living in a community with Odd-fellows, Masons and grangers. I cannot do without your paper."

L. H. Ames, Decatur, Mich., writes:

"We send our papers to all who will read them."

H. G. McAdams, Sandford, Ind., writes:

"I am sixty-nine years old. I lived in the days of Morgan's abduction. My father was a Mason. When the excitement was so high I heard my father and mother talk about it. My mother said the Masons had murdered Morgan, and father said he had gone to Europe. There was great excitement among the people. I was so opposed to Masons that I looked on them all as murderers. The Masons and Catholics are thick around here. One said to me the other day that I had better look out I told him I was in a free country and intended to talk as I thought best."

We hope God will open the eyes of your neighbors so that they will see that you are not an enemy but a friend in trying to expose the evils of Freemasonry.

Lowell Mann, Norfolk, Mass., writes:

"There is need of some lectures here."

S. A. Reynolds, Waverly, Luzerne Co., Pa., writes:

"I am still praying that the light of Jesus may enlighten the minds of men and women professing to be Christians."

D. A. Bailey, Bunker Hill, Ind., writes:

"My house caught fire Dec. 8, 1876, and burned to the ground, consuming all I possessed."

The Sabbath School.

LESSON II.—JAN. 14, 1877.—THE SIN OF JEROBOAM.

SCRIPTURE.—1 K. xii. 25 33. Commit 26-31; Primary verse 30.

25 Then Jeroboam built Shechem in Mount Ephraim, and dwelt therein; and went out from thence and built Penuel.

26 And Jeroboam said in his heart, Now shall the kingdom return to the house of David

27 If this people go up to do sacrifice in the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, then shall the heart of this people turn again unto their lord, even unto Rehoboam, king of Judah, and they shall kill me, and go again to Rehoboam, king of Judah.

28 Whereupon the king took counsel, and made two calves of gold, and said unto them, It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

29 And he set the one in Bethel, and the other put he in Dan.

30 And this thing became a sin: for the people went to worship before the one, even unto Dan.

31 And he made a house of high places, and made priests of the lowest of the people, which were not the sons of Levi.

32 And Jeroboam ordained a feast in the eighth month on the fifteenth day of the month, like unto the feast that is in Judah, and he offered upon the altar. So did he in Bethel, sacrificing unto the calves that he had made: and he placed in Bethel the priests of the high places which he had made.

33 So he offered upon the altar which he had made in Bethel the fifteenth day of the eighth month, even in the month which he had devised in his heart; and ordained a feast unto the children of Israel: and he offered upon the altar, and burnt incense.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"And he shall give Israel up because of the sins of Jeroboam, who did sin and who made Israel to sin." —1 K. xiv. 16.

The Christian Cynosure

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JAN. 4, 1877.

"WE WISH YOU A HAPPY NEW YEAR."

First as Christians. Christian happiness is a paradox. Paul was a perfect sanctificationist, if language means anything: for he said he was dead and Christ was living in him, which is sanctification; yet, come to describe his experience, he says sorrowful yet always rejoicing: "Now our wish is that all our readers may know the experience of Paul when "the law of the spirit of life, in Christ Jesus, had made him free from the law of sin which was in his members." Every child of God knows or has known the misery of a "body of death." We wish every one of our readers complete deliverance from exactly what Paul meant by that "body of death;" and that they may know, also, what he means by walking "after," or "in the spirit;" so that "the righteousness of the law," (i. e. supreme love to God and equal love to man) may be "fulfilled" in them. And for your encouragement, we add our testimony to Paul's that "there is no condemnation," to such while they "walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit." And as the Spirit is an "eternal Spirit," his peace is eternal peace begun. So, for the coming year, we wish all our readers the calm of eternity settling in their breasts, here amid the activities of time.

Again, we wish you a happy new year as citizens. The political heavens are portentous. It is said that barking dogs do not bite, nor howling politicians fight. That is a mistake. Cowards may swagger till they fight duels rather than back down. This is our danger. Men calling themselves Republicans but who, like Robert G. Ingersoll, heap coarse ridicule on the faith of Christians and the miracles of Christ, have no authority to appeal to but force; for, God aside, there is none. If there is nothing but men, no God, nor angels, nor hereafter, nor retribution for conduct, killing men is a mere question of convenience, like killing other animals.

Now we wish our readers a happy new year, a year made happy by "the brightness of Christ's coming;" which is the prevalence of truth, for Christ, as he told Pilate, is the truth. Our land, it is true, is defiled by blood. A government which hangs Wirz, and Mrs. Surratt, and spares Jeff. Davis, whose crimes, as by human and divine law, excelled theirs as the head bandit his tools, such a government must be both loathsome and contemptible to God and good men and angels. It is a doctrine both of Scripture and reason, that unavenged blood defiles a land, and calls for blood again. Such is history. Sowe found the unavenged blood of slaves murdered by hecatombs.

But the blood of Christ may cleanse nations as well as men. Ten righteous on this principle would have saved Sodom. And the popular upheaval following the labors of Moody and his evangelists; the increasing testimony every where against that modern Sodom, "the lodge;" the running of many to and fro, so that the knowledge of Christ is being everywhere increased; these give us hope, and ground for hope, that the angel "having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand," whatever that angel photograph of events may mean, is on his way, and that devils, human and Satanic, may be so "bound" that our land and world may have a respite from vice and crime, and misery and blood before the sun-set of time.

Let us rejoice! Readers, let us rejoice together and be happy; for Christ has all the power in heaven and earth, and in whose hands could we be safer or better, than in his who loved us, died for us. "O come, let us sing unto the Lord. For he is good, and his righteousness endureth forever."

I am just at home after an absence in the State. I have been made happy whenever I have met readers of our paper. Mr. Holcomb of Knoxville, blind and led by the hand, had just completed and sent on a club of eight. Dr. Marsh of Elmwood, was completing a club of fifty, and their faces were all bright. Little children, especially the doctor's little son, made me glad. "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings, God is ordaining strength." Happy, O a happy New Year to each and to all!

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

WENONA, Ill., Dec. 26, 1876.

I preached on Sabbath in the First Congregational church, Aurora (Rev. Mr. Prentiss), to a good house full of earnest and intelligent people, to whom I said: "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper, whether he conceals those sins by an oath of secrecy or otherwise." There were Freemasons in the congregation, and one or two apparently declined to hear me preach, but the people generally seemed satisfied, and several came around me and gave me their cordial God speed. O that ministers but knew the satisfaction of speaking "God's word faithfully" as the prophet requires, or rather God by his prophet!

In this First Church of Aurora there is one aged deacon who has been in years past full brother in the lodge and only half brother in the church. When the New England Church on the West Side was being started, opposed to secret societies, that deacon went into the lodge and conspired with the infidels, Christians and rowdies who composed it, and consulted for the destruction of that young church. The lodge never rested until they got the testimony against lodge idolatry expunged from their records. And even now I am told, this aged deacon stoutly defends the organized deism of the lodge, where men meet and swear to conceal each other's crimes!

Deacon Alexander Small, who under the name of deacon has the duties and responsibilities of eldership assigned him by vote of the church, and who is a clear thinking, able and faithful officer, assures me that there must and will be some testimony to keep adhering lodgemen out of that interesting mother church of the surrounding region. Their pastor has stood manfully by the Bible against the infidel attacks of his neighbor, the Rev. Dr. Thomas.

In this same city of Aurora the principal of the high school, and also the superintendent of the city schools have both drunk wine out of a dead man's skull, invoking double damnation on their souls if they violate their oaths of fealty to the "god of this world" who is worshiped by Freemasons. It is simply horrible that the thousands of bright and beautiful children of Aurora should be under the training of such men, led not by the Spirit of the Father and of Christ, but by the "god" and "prince of this world."

On the cars I met an influential teacher on his way to the State Teachers' Association which meets at Champlain this week. He informed me that both Powell and Clark, of Aurora (the men above alluded to), would, so far as he could judge, go for excluding the Bible from the schools of Illinois.

Of course I find Mr. Ronayne's labors here in Wenona have done great good, and that good people here are anxious for his sound conversion to Christ.

The aged presiding elder here, Rev. Richard Haney, is assuring the people that he "never was in a lodge in his life." This is astounding, as Elder Haney, in the speech of people, has passed for a Mason for the last twenty years or so. If we have been mistaken we have done Elder Haney great injustice. Will Dr. H. Marsh, of Elmwood, or some one else ascertain the facts and send them to the Cynosure that justice may be done to this aged disciple. I write in haste and am yours in Christ. J. B.

MR. HEWITT'S CHARGE.

Congressman Hewitt has distinguished himself by making a charge against the post-office of tampering with his letters. But the idea which he advances seems to be this: He, Mr. Hewitt, is a distinguished Democrat, and a Republican post-office therefore seeks to know what is in his letters which he sends by the mail.

This partisan view of things is about as far as politicians ever go. The post-office is bad because it is under the management of the Republicans; but would it be any better if under the management of the Democrats? This is a question which Mr. Hewitt does not answer; but it is precisely the question that the people ought to know, and which all good Anti-masons desire to know. Politicians are very superficial, being satisfied if they can prove that the opposite party is as bad as themselves; but this is not what the country needs. The country wants to know whether sound moral principles are observed by all parties.

Now we hold that the observance of sound principles is impossible where political men derive their education from the lodge, deeming it "ancient and honorable." We hold, and have ever held, that the management of the post-office is not trustworthy or reliable where the lodge appoints the post-masters. We believe that the lodge tampers with the post-office as far as it dares to, in favor of Freemasonry; and think it must do so from the very nature of Freemasonry itself, the chief characteristics of which are slyness, subtlety, craft, cunning, inquisitiveness, underhanded, unfair dealing, etc., just the qualities to lead men to open letters and abstract the contents. This danger has been pointed out time and again, as one which threatens, not a party merely, but the whole republican government, and is as objectionable in the army and navy, and among the clerks of the Departments, as it is in the post-office and among politicians.

But Mr. Hewitt is not alone in this shallowness that looks only to party issues. We find the same objections raised against the church that Mr. Hewitt raises against the Republican party. The church is censured for the corruptions and abuses which Freemasonry has brought into it. Much of the blame that is charged upon the church, as well as upon the Republican party, is due, we believe, to the vicious education given to the American people by the Masonic lodge.

What the American people need is to get rid of the Masonic lodge, and all such abettors of it as Mr. Hewitt, whose "stop thief!" is not directed to the right quarter. There is a party coming up that will set him right on that point, we think.

—Dr. B. P. Aydelott, of Cincinnati, a well known Presbyterian minister and a seceder from Freemasonry, is now in his eighty-third year, and though weakened by age and suffering from disease, is full of spiritual strength.

—We begin the publication in this number of a very thorough discussion of the question of Masonic oaths by Rev. A. L. Post, D. D., of Pennsylvania. It will be reproduced in tract form.

—Past Master Ronayne was with the Illinois agent, Hinman attending the Indiana State meeting last week. With the preparation for it by the friends we hope to hear of a great success at this convention.

—The International faction, defunct in this country, has rooted vigorously in Russia, and having grown awhile in secret pushes out into public view, and finds the hand of the Czar heavy. It is reported that a large number of prisoners connected with a "socialist" conspiracy are to be tried this month in Moscow. The London Times correspondent writes that a widespread association whose motto is "Federation and Liberty," has been discovered at Moscow, the aim of which was to make Russia a Federal Republic divided into five States, to depose the dynasty, to abolish the aristocracy, and to establish communism. There may be some exaggeration in these reports, but every one, including members of the Government, has been long convinced that the whole ground is deeply undermined by the Socialist agitation.

—The French Minister of the Interior lately refused the government permit to a pamphlet against secret societies by a Catholic writer of some repute, and the work cannot therefore be legally sold in the book stalls. It is intimated that the refusal, if not from personal reasons, was made through fear of the Radical party. The extremists of this party are probably Freemasons, since it was that class of French politicians that attempted to plant their Masonic banner on the walls of Paris to call out the aid of the German lodges represented in Emperor William's army. The authorities of the Centennial Exposition had a more selfish reason for preventing the sale of books from the Cynosure stand in the Main Building. When pressed for a reason for the prohibition they replied that they could not allow any sales that were not for the benefit of the Exposition.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES publishes a "Scholar's Quarterly" containing the International lessons for three months with notes, questions, hints and helps of various kinds, which is sure to prove most useful to all the scholars above the infant classes. Superintendents and teachers will do well to examine it. Price 7 cents, published at 610 Chestnut St., Pa.

The Sunday Magazine is a new monthly with many popular features issued by Frank Leslie, New York, Dr. Deems editor; price $2.50. The January number is fully illustrated and contains much that is entertaining and useful, if not that which is spiritual. It would be well if the publisher should drop some of his sensational and dangerous publications in taking up this, else he may be understood as merely trading upon the religious sentiment of the country.

IN all my travels I feel one thing most deeply, and that is that unless the Cynosure has a much larger circulation our labor is almost in vain. I have more confidence in the Cynosure as a means of enlightening the public mind in regard to the evils of Masonry, both in church and state, than I have in all our lecturing or even in public exhibitions; and I feel it very keenly when I am unable to stay in a place long enough to canvass for its list. I urge upon all friends the great necessity of renewed efforts in obtaining more subscribers for this paper. We ought to have at least 20,000 by the first of May next.—Past Master E. Ronayne.

News of the Week.

—About 7:30 P. M. on Friday evening Dec. 29th as the Pacific express, westward bound on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railroad, with two engines and eleven cars, was passing over the iron bridge near Ashtabula, O., the structure gave way and precipitated the whole train upon the ice below a distance of about seventy feet. The leading engine only got across. After the terrible crash the whole mass took fire and was wholly consumed with scores of wounded and dead. A severe snow storm was raging at the time and the cold was intense. Of the 170 to 200 passengers on board scarcely one escaped unhurt and only about seventy were saved. Among the lost were Prof. P. P. Bliss and wife of this city. Prof. Bliss was on his way here to take charge of the revival meetings with Major Whittle. The remains of a large proportion of the burned were unrecognizable, so complete was the work of death. The cause of the disaster is unknown as the bridge was thought to be a strong one.

—On Saturday another horror occurred in the wreck of the ship Circassian off the Long Island coast in which twenty-eight men of the coast Wrecking Co., perished in sight of their friends and families.

—It is estimated that one hundred and fifty vessels and 250 lives were lost in the recent severe gale on the English and Scotch coasts.

—There are yet hopes that peace will be secured in the East by the Conference. The armistice has been extended to March. There are dispatches, however, of an ominous character which say that the Porte will not yield to the demands for reform.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 18 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Notices.

Mr. Ronayne expects to be at South Argyle, N. Y., Worcester, Mass., and other points East during the month of January. He will be in Chicago from the 1st to the 13th of January and would like to arrange for meetings in other cities in the Eastern States. Friends will please address him at once at this office.

TO ALL SECEDING MASONS.

BRETHREN.—I propose that we, who have been members of the Masonic order, meet in general convention in some centrally located city as early as practicable; that we hold our convention six successive days; that we work a degree of Masonry each day or evening, and that we issue from that convention an address to the American people. All I feel will see at once the propriety of this movement and I have no doubt will do everything in their power to make it a glorious success. Think the whole matter over, brethren, and communicate your views through the Cynosure. Now let us all work and work quickly else we may not have time to work at all

Though not through grips, still fraternally yours. EDMOND RONAYNE.

THE KANSAS STATE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,

Opposed to Secret Societies, will hold its next semi-annual meeting at North Cedar, Jackson county, Kansas, in the Reformed Presbyterian Church, on Tuesday, Jan. 23, 1877, at two P. M., and will continue in session about two days. Several public addresses will be delivered by popular speakers, and important business is to be attended to. The friends of the cause are urged to be present and the public generally are invited to attend. Free entertainment will be furnished to all who may attend from a distance.

J. DODDS, Secretary.

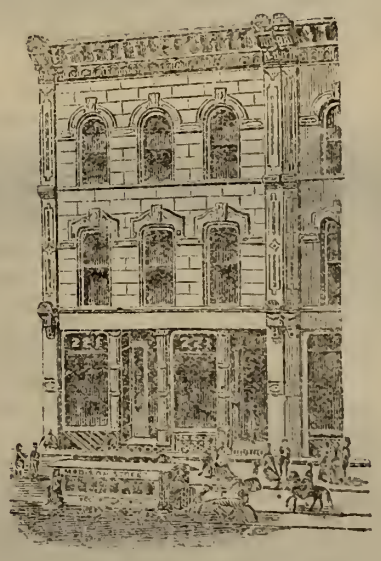
North Cedar is eight miles southeast of Holton, Jackson county and twenty-five miles due north of Topeka.



FRONT VIEW of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 18 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The Home Circle.

The New Year.

A light in the east is shining;
The hilltops are all aglow;
And the golden beams are dancing
All over the crisp white snow;
The bells are merrily ringing
From the church spires, far and near;
'Tis the dawn, the glorious dawning
Of the merry, glad New Year.

He comes with his wealth of blessings,
All fresh from their homes above;
He comes with his joys unnumbered,
The gifts of a Father's love:
No cloud on his brow is mantled—
No tear in his laughing eye,
He looks like the thing that he is—
An angel down the sky.

Old Winter has wrapped the beauty
In a great white robe of snow;
But under his chilly mantle
The babe is with smiles aglow;
He kicks and crows, with a vigor
That tells how his young blood flows;
And on every side his treasures
With dimpled hands he throws.

All hail to the laughing cherub!
All hail to the glad new year!
With a trust in God abiding,
We'll enter without a fear.
Join all in the mighty chorus
The angels on earth began;
"Glory to God on the highest!
Peace and good-will to man!"

"The First Month of the Year."

Exodus xii. 2.

The Jewish nation had two modes of reckoning the time – the civil year, commencing with the month Tisri, coinciding with parts of September and October; and the religious year, which commenced with the month of Nisan, corresponding to parts of March and April, and which marked and commemorated the commencement of their religious history; for it was on the fourteenth day of this month that Israel was delivered from the Egyptian captivity, and went forth to be a nation sacred to the Lord.

On the evening of that day the passover lamb was slain, the blood sprinkled upon the lintels and posts of the doors, and the families of Israel gathered within, to keep the passover of the Lord.

The work done was an individual work. Every family kept the passover at home,—it was a family ordinance. Not in places of public resort, but in the humble dwellings of the children of Israel, was this feast observed. And this may teach us the duty of home religion, the importance of the church in the house, and the responsibility of parents for the care and salvation of their children. Outside was death. Riding through the darkness, as on the wings of the wind, the death-angel visited the homes of the Egyptians. The mother shrieked with anguish as her babe writhed, and gasped, and stiffened in her arms; the father cried out in horror as the stalwart first-born son fell beneath the awful curse, and gasped his life away; and from the throne of Pharaoh to the mud-walled hut of the poorest slave, there was not one Egyptian house but held a corpse, —the corpse of the slain first-born.

But Israel were safe. Not because they were righteous, not because they were faultless,—for the angel did not go behind the door to investigate their lives, or learn their history; one thing alone he noticed, the crimson sign of death upon the door-posts, telling that death had already been there, and that Israel were hidden there beneath the shelter of the blood already shed for them.

No righteous acts would supply the place of that Blood. A catalogue of virtues possessed, duties done, or sins avoided, posted upon the door would have been no protection—nothing but the blood was Israel's shelter then.

In Egypt's homes there was wailing, but in Israel's dwellings there was light and peace. No doubt there were doubts and fears. Many a Jewish mother may have shuddered as she heard the death-wail on the right hand and on the left, and as she thought of her many faults and many sins, she might have feared that judgment would fall next within her home. But no; the blood gave safety, and trusting in that they had peace.

But how awful the hour. And how was Israel occupied while the destruction wasted their foes? They stood with girded loins, and shodden feet, in the attitude of pilgrims ready for the journey; and they ate their meal in haste, all ready to go forth at the Lord's command.

The family must all abide within the house. No one must go out until the morning broke. No matter what business or pleasure might invite them abroad, they must not go; but young and old must remain behind the shelter of the blood.

They ate the Paschal Lamb, the type of a slain Redeemer, whose flesh is given for the life of the world. They ate the unleavened bread, prefiguring the sincerity, and purity, and truth, that becometh the redeemed, and an emblem of that broken body of Him, who though doomed to die, yet saw no corruption. And when the feast was over they went forth to follow the guiding of the Most High, and seek the land of promise and of rest.

This was the beginning of their year—it began with blood-shedding, with redemption, with protection, with deliverance; and all through the ages since, the sons of Israel have commemorated that wondrous hour. The year of business and of care might begin where it would, but the year of their religious life began when they kept the passover, and took shelter beneath the protecting blood.

Reader, do you know the beginning of such a year as this? Have you learned that Christ, our passover, is sacrificed for us? Have you kept the passover that he ordained? Has the blood of the Paschal Victim marked your door? Have you gathered your household within, to eat the solemn feast? Are you there to-day? Do you keep the passover, not with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth? Are you standing with girded loins and shodden feet, ready to go forth at the Master's call, yet waiting beneath the protection of the blood?

If not, make no delay. Now is the time of mercy. The day of danger and desolation draws near, but there is safety for you now. Come to the shelter of the blood; hide in the Rock of Ages cleft to take you in.

Let this month be to you the beginning of months, the first month of the year of your redemption. Let the new year begin to-day. Let your better life begin from this hour, and let your sinful soul, redeemed from merited wrath, taste the fullness of unmerited love, that has provided for you a sacrifice, a shelter, a Saviour, and a great salvation. – The Christian.

Why am I not a Christian?

1. Is it because I am afraid of ridicule, and what others may say of me?

"Whosoever shall be ashamed of me, and of my words; of him shall the Son of man be ashamed."

2. Is it because of the inconsistencies of professing Christians?

"Every man shall give an account of himself to God."

3. Is it because I am not willing to give up all for Christ?

"What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

4. Is it because I shall not be accepted?

"Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out."

5. Is it because I fear I am a great sinner?

"The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin."

6. Is it because I am afraid I shall not hold out?

"He that hath begun a good work in you will perfect it unto the day of Christ Jesus."

7. Is it because I am thinking that I will do as well as I can, and that God ought to be satisfied?

"Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."

8. Is it because I am postponing the matter without any definite reason?

"Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth."

"Choose ye this day whom you will serve for this a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

A Lost Man.

"Perhaps thou hast never heard the perfectly authentic account of the brother of the celebrated George Whitefield, a poor man for whose conversion many prayers had been offered, but who had sunk into a settled melancholy, under the impression that he had sinned so long and so grievously as to be altogether beyond the reach of the Lord's pardoning mercy in Christ, so that for him there was no hope. This man was drinking tea one evening at Lady Huntingdon's, when she took the opportunity of telling him of the boundless love of God in Christ Jesus for poor sinners. 'My lady,' replied her guest, 'I know what you say is true; but ah! there is no mercy for me. I am a wretch entirely lost.' 'I am glad to hear it,' said Lady Huntingdon; 'I am glad at my heart that you are a lost man.' He looked at her in great surprise. 'What! my lady: glad at your heart that I am a lost man?' 'Yes, truly glad; for it is written, 'The Son of Man is come to save that which is lost.' The text was carried home with power. 'Blessed be God for that,' exclaimed he; 'glory be to God for that word! Oh! what power I feel attending it! Jesus Christ came to save the lost.' It was light with him at evening time. He was soon after seized with sudden illness, and within an hour was in eternity.—Memoir of Robert Charleton.

The Signers of the Declaration of Independence.

Rev. Charles A. Goodrich, in the preface of his biography of the lives of the signers of the Declaration says:

"While writing the biographical notices of the signers to the Declaration, the author has been struck with their longevity, as a body of men. They were fifty-six in number; and the average length of their lives was about sixty-five years. Four of the number attained to the age of ninety years and upwards; fourteen exceeded eighty years; and twenty-three, or one in two and a half, reached three score years and ten. The longevity of the New England delegation, was still more remarkable. Their number was fourteen, the average of whose lives was seventy-five years.

Who will affirm that the unusual age to which the signers, as a body, attained, was not a reward bestowed upon them for their fidelity to their country, and the trust which they in general reposed in the overruling providence of God. Who can doubt the kindness of that Providence to the American people, in thus prolonging the lives of these men, till the principles for which they had contended, through a long series of years had been acknowledged, and a government had been founded upon them?

Of this venerable body, not a single one survives. They are now no more. They are no more, as in 1776, bold and fearless advocates of independence. They are dead. But how little is there of the great and good which can die! To their country they yet live, and live forever. They live in all that perpetuates the remembrance of men on earth, in the recorded proofs of their own great actions, in the offspring of their intellect, in the deep ingraved lines of public gratitude, and in the respect and homage of mankind. They live in their example; and they live emphatically, and will live, in the influence which their lives and efforts, their principles and opinions, now exercise, and will continue to exercise on the affairs of men, not only in our own country but throughout the civilized world. It remains to us to cherish their memory, and emulate their virtues, by perpetuating and extending the blessings which they have bequeathed. So long as we preserve our country, their fame cannot die, for it is reflected from the surface of everything that is beautiful and valuable in our land. We cannot recur too often, nor dwell too long, upon the lives and characters of such men; for our own will take something of their form and impression from those on which they rest. If we inhale the moral atmosphere in which they moved, we must feel its purifying and invigorating influence. If we raise our thoughts to their elevation, our minds will be expanded and ennobled, in beholding the immeasurable distance beneath and around us. 'Can we breath the pure mountain air and not be refreshed, can we walk abroad amidst the beautiful and the grand of the works of creation, and feel no kindling of devotion?'"

Circumstantial Evidence.

Rev. Mr. Christopher once called on an aged class-leader and after having prayer with the family, said-

"Brother, how is it you have been a church-member so long and yet are not a converted man?"

"Are you my judge?"

"I know you by your fruits. You have no family worship."

"Do you know that I have no family worship?"

"Yes, I know it."

"Well; it is true, but I would like to know who told you."

"No one told me, but I know that had you been in the habit of having family worship, that cat would not have jumped out of the window, frightened, as it did, when we knelt to pray."

The test was true in that case. The brother confessed that he had omitted family worship, because he did not wish to hinder his workmen. He was touched with the reproof, and immediately set up an altar, and years afterward testified that he had found it profitable, even financially, to acknowledge God in the house. Since he had made his religion real in his daily life, his workmen had been more industrious and faithful.

So we come back to the truth of the old statement, "Prayer and provender hinder no man's journey." —Selected.

A New Year.

This number opens the work of a new year. The old year came to us a while ago, mantled in its garb of frost and snow. It has chilled and cheered us; it has affrighted and charmed us. It gave us many friendships, and again it has broken from us many of life's endearments. It offered many opportunities of doing good. Some of these have been improved. Alas! how many have been neglected. Many have been won to Christ during the year gone by, and many have passed beyond the path of mercy into the lone land of sorrowing night. On many the sun of celestial day has shone in its full heavenly splendor, and upon others the nightfall has settled down in shadows that shall never be lifted up. Grace and peace have triumphed over many hearts, and sin and death have done their fearful work in the year now gone.

The new year waits with its hands filled with good to those who love the good. The year comes like an angel of eternity, to bear time's rich gifts to a world of sorrow. It bends before us, laden with the gatherings of peace. Such it seems at the first view.

To many the new year comes to gather the harvest sown by years that have passed. It is an angel-reaper, gathering for men the strewings of the past. It can only bring that which has been sown. It will bring to the garner that which other years have scattered in the field—to some the fruit of Christian toil, peace, happiness, and heaven; to others the fruit of sin, sorrow, shame, and overwhelming ruin.

To many it comes to introduce the beginning of that which is to follow in the wake of ages. It will kindle sparks of light which shall increase in brightness until all nations shall gather around the sparkling suns to celebrate the year on which they first arose. This new year will commence the characters of those who shall shine as beacon-lights, inviting the world to deeds of glory. Many a humble soul will begin to love and trust in God, whose thoughts in following times shall wander back to this year now before us with joy to find the birthplace of their higher life. Ours it will be to say what tendencies this year shall give to the deathless destinies before us. Shall it lift to a higher plane of faith in God and usefulness in his work? Another time to answer will come to many of us, but, alas! not to all.—Missionary Visitor.

Rough and Smooth.

There are some people who are always scratching you by their short answers and impatient ways if things go at all wrong with them. They are like a rough, unplained board; if you don't handle it with the grain, you are very certain to be annoyed with the splinters.

A gentleman at an eating house asked the person next to him if he would please pass the mustard.

"Sir," said the man, "do you mistake me for a waiter?"

"No," was the reply, "I mistook you for a gentleman."

That man, the moment you touched his pride, threw out his sharp words as the porcupine does his quills.

Kind words cost nothing, and they save a world of worry and fretful feeling. They have a wonderful knack of smoothing over the rough places in our play and work.

When I was a boy, said a friend of ours, I and a number of playmates had rambled through the wood, until, quite forgetting the fading light, we found ourselves far from home. Indeed, we had lost our way. By the edge of a field we saw a man coming along, and we ran to ask him our road. Whether he was in trouble or not, I do not know, but he gave us some very sharp answers.

Just then came along another man, a near neighbor, with a smile on his face. "Jim," said he to the sharp talker, "a man's tongue is like that of a cat. It is either a piece of velvet or a piece of sandpaper. Try the velvet, man! Try the velvet principle."—Little Crumbs.

A Light in the Window.

Off the coast of one of the Orkney Islands, and right opposite the harbor, stood a lonely rock, against which, in stormy nights, the boats of returning fishermen often struck and were lost.

Fifty years ago there lived on this island a young girl in a cottage with her father; and they loved each other very tenderly. One stormy night the father was away on the sea in his fisherman's boat, and though his daughter watched for him in much fear and trouble, he did not come home. Sad to tell, in the morning his dead body was found washed upon the beach. His boat, as he sought the harbor, had struck against the "Lonely Rock" and gone down.

In her deep sorrow, this fisherman's orphan did not think of herself alone. She was scarcely more than a child, humble, poor and weak; but she said in her heart, that while she lived, no more boats should be lost on the "Lonely Rock," if a light shining through her window would guide them safely into the harbor. And so, after watching by the body of her father according to the custom of her people, until it was buried, she laid down and slept through the day; but when night fell arose and lighting a candle, placed it in the window of her cottage, so that it might be seen by any fisherman coming in from sea, and guide him safely into the harbor. She sat by the candle all night, and trimmed it, and spun; but when the day dawned, she went to bed and slept.

As many hanks as she had spun before for her daily bread, she spun still, and one over, to buy her nightly candle; and from that time to this, for fifty years, through youth, maturity and old age, she has turned night into day, and in the snow-storms of winter, through driving mists, deceptive moonlight and solemn darkness, that northern harbor has never once been without the light of her candle.

How many lives she saved by this candle, and how many meals she won by it for the starving families of the boatmen, it is impossible to say. How many dark nights the fishermen, depending on it, have gone forth, cannot now be told. There it stood, regular as a light-house, steadily as constant care could make it. Always brighter when daylight waned, the fishermen had only to keep it constantly in view and they were safe; there was but one thing to intercept it, and that was the Rock. However far they might have gone out to sea, they had only to bear down for that lighted window, and they were sure of a safe entrance to the harbor.

But what do the boatmen and boatmen's wives think of this? Do they pay the woman? No, they are very poor; but poor or rich, they know better than that. Do they thank her? No. Perhaps they think that thanks of theirs would be inadequate to express their gratitude; or perhaps long years have made the lighted casement so familiar, that they look upon it as a matter of course, and forget for the time the patient watcher within.—Jean Ingelow.

Enigma.

I am composed of eleven letters.

My 1, 8 and 11 is the cause of all misery.

My 9 and 4 is a personal pronoun.

My 5, 10 and 4 is the name of something to wear.

My 2, 7, 4 and 5 is a troublesome insect.

My 4, 5, 7, 2, 6, 7 and 8 is the name of a Democratic politician of Ohio.

My whole is the name of a useful society, just the opposite to the Masonic.

Eye-sight.

Milton's blindness was the result of overwork and dyspepsia.

One of the most eminent American divines having, for some time, been compelled to forego the pleasure of reading, has spent thousands of dollars in value, and lost years of time, in consequence of getting up several hours before day, and studying by artificial light. His eyes never got well.

Multitudes of men or women have made their eyes weak for life by the too free use of the eye-sight, reading small print, and doing fine sewing. In view of these things, it is well to observe the following rules in the use of the eyes:

Avoid all sudden changes between light and darkness.

Never begin to read, or write, or sew, for several minutes after coming from darkness to a bright light.

Never read by twilight, or of a very cloudy day.

Never read or sew directly in front of the light, or window or door.

It is best to have the light fall from above, obliquely over the left shoulder.

Never sleep, so that on first waking, the eyes shall open on the light of a window.

Do not use the eye-sight by light so scant that it requires an effort to discriminate.

Too much light creates a glare, and pains the sight. The moment you are sensible of an effort to distinguish, that moment cease, and take a walk or ride.

As the sky is blue and the earth green, it would seem that the ceiling should be a blush tinge, and the carpet green, and the walls of some mellow tint.

The moment you are prompted to rub the eyes, that moment cease using them.—Dr. Hall.

Keep a Slate.

Where farmers keep hired men, and stormy days abound, they are frequently at a loss to know how to put them to work profitably. It is a good plan to have a slate at the tool house, or barn, or workshop, and to note down during pleasant weather what work can be done in rainy weather. There are scores of little jobs that suggest themselves which ought to be done, and can be done as well in rainy weather as in fair weather.

Such a slate would have upon it something like the following: "Clean out the cellars; oil the harness; grease all the wagons; repair the horse stalls; file the saws; grind the tools; assort the apples; make kindling wood; repair the implements; paint the implements; shell corn."

A hundred other like jobs could be suggested. Have it understood that when a rainy day comes, whether you are at home or not, the slate is to be referred to, and the work done as there suggested.—Prairie Farmer.

House Building.—We intend to publish from time to time valuable hints on the construction of dwellings derived from our own experience and that of correspondents. We are convinced that the plan suggested by Mr. Thos. Filer of Fullersburg, Du Page Co., Ill., in the Cynosure last winter is a practical one worth adopting universally, not alone for the saving of fuel, but also of life and the conducing materially to the comfort of our dwellings, especially in those parts exposed to prairie winds. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are wasted in the effort to warm cold houses. Mr. Filer introduced his plan after many experiments, some ten years ago. It has been tried by his neighbors and others in Du Page Co., and in this city, and is very satisfactory to all who have experienced its benefits. The following from the Wheaton Illinoian is a testimony:

Allow me to inform your numerous readers that I have fixed up my house in accordance with the advice of my neighbor, Mr. Thomas Filer, and that I am fully satisfied with the experiment. The improvement has cost about $50; and I would not part with it for twenty times that sum. I would advise every one who has a house, or who intends to build one, to become acquainted with Mr. Filer's theory of thermal architecture, and and act accordingly.

THE GOSPEL MEETINGS.

AHAB.

On Friday evening last Mr. Moody spoke upon the character and history of Ahab. The following report is from the Interocean:

I take for my text to-night a man, and that man was Ahab, whom I've been reading about, the man who sold himself. We used to think during our days of slavery that it was pretty hard for a man to be sold and bought. In the Northern States we used to have orators come to us and picture the horrors of slavery, and tell us how terrible it was, and they used to stir our blood. But there was no slave in the Southern States that ever was sold into such slavery as that into which Ahab sold himself, and Ahab is a type of hundreds and thousands of men to-day in our city. These Bible characters are all representatives of people living in our time. There is an old saying that "Every man has his price," and there is a good deal of truth in it. Judas had his price, and it was thirty pieces of silver. Esau had his price, and it was a mess of pottage. Herod had his price too, and Ahab had his. Ahab, we find, sold himself for a garden of herbs, and bitter herbs they were to him. He sold himself very cheaply. As we read about him and see the small price for which he sold himself let us ask ourselves the question, What are we doing? Are there not many men in Chicago to-day guilty of selling themselves for a good deal less than Ahab? As we condemn him ask yourselves what is the darling sin that keeps you bound to the world. Is it the pleasure of the world? Is it ambition? What is the besetting sin which you are not willing to give up? Remember how Ahab sold himself. He had had warning after warning. God sent to him one of the purest men that ever walked this earth to warn him. One would have thought he had had warning enough on Mount Carmel, but he was one of those vacillating characters, one of those men who thought it would be better for him to go with the current, although deep down in his heart he knew the truth. No doubt when Elijah stood before him Ahab looked upon him as a bigot—as belonging to the school of the Puritans, one of those men who believed in the Mosaic law which was given to the people in the wilderness. But the people had got beyond that kind of thing; they were living in a time of culture and enlightenment, and were not going to be bound by that law. Bear in mind that Ahab was a religious man. There is no man in Chicago who keeps four hundred and fifty prophets. Yet Ahab did so. He did a good deal to keep up religion; he kept up churches, and had all those prophets at his table. But for all that he had no religion. So with men to-day. They do a good deal to keep up churches and ministers, but they haven't got Christ. They are living on form, which doesn't give them any comfort. A good many are religious, yet they are very far from God. They have never been born of God; they've got religion, but there's no Christ in it.

The first great mistake this man made was his marriage with Jezebel, the daughter of one of the Hebrew kings. She was a wicked, bad woman. Ahab was bad enough himself, but his wife was worse a hundred times. It seems as if after the marriage Ahab was merely an instrument in her hands. No doubt the marriage was made to increase his power and enlarge his kingdom, and the very thing she did was to ruin his kingdom. Instead of relying upon the God of Israel, he looked for human aid to help him, and his downfall came. Many a man has been ruined by marrying a wicked woman, and many a woman by marrying a wicked man. We find that no king had a better subject than Elijah; no one ever had better advice than Elijah could give, because he was a messenger sent by God. If he had taken Elijah's advice, and not his wicked wife's, his kingdom would have been saved. Look at men now. How many young men have praying mothers who are giving them good advice, and these young men say: "Oh, she is narrow-minded, bigoted; she don't know anything about the life of to-day." They think she cannot enter into sympathy with them, and therefore her advice is not taken. How many men look down upon the ministers because they tell them they are going to destruction. When they are spoken to about their sins they cry out, as Ahab did, "Hast thou found me out, O mine enemy?" They think because we preach righteousness and repentance we bring trouble. The Gospel brings peace, not trouble. If Ahab had taken Elijah's advice he would have saved his kingdom, his throne, and his life. He would not have come to the miserable end that he did. There are a great many people who, if they are spoken to about their danger, think that he who warns them is their enemy. What would you think of a mother who, if she saw her child putting its hand in the fire, wouldn't warn it. If she didn't she wouldn't have motherly instincts. And if ministers of the Gospel didn't warn men of their danger they wouldn't be true disciples of Christ. Suppose I saw a man going down Clark street; the bridge has been swung, and he is about to walk over. Would that man look upon me as his enemy if I warned him of his danger? If these ministers, these praying mothers, warn you, know that they are the best friends you have got. A great many men hate that Bible because it tells them of their sins and warns them of their future.

Look at Ahab going into Samaria. He goes back like a little child who has had a "miff." He goes up into Samaria in a gloomy, sulky spirit and throws himself on his bed. The servants bring him food, and he refuses to eat it. The servants go to the queen, "Something's gone wrong with the King, he won't eat anything." So the Queen goes to him and says: "What's the matter? Sick?" "No, he replies, "I'm not sick, but there's a man down at Jezreel who's got a vineyard near the palace, and I've tried to get it for its herbs, but he won't let me have it. I've offered to get him another better than it, and give him money, but it's no use" I suppose he was one of those men who went by the law of Moses. And then the Queen says: "Don't you rule your own country? I'll get it, and won't have to pay for it either." And she went off and got a decree in the name of King Ahab and sent it to the noblemen and elders. She told them to set two sons of Belial before the door of Naboth, and then let them come and say that he had blasphemed God and the King, and take him out and stone him to death. And those men bowed to that wretched woman. The farce was enacted. What a hypocritical thing this was. The two sons of Belial were put in front of Naboth's house and then testified against him, and he was put to death. The news was sent to Samaria that Naboth was dead, and Ahab took possession of the vineyard; but it cost him his throne, his life, and his kingdom; it was the means of crushing his power and rolling the whole royal family into the pit of hell. He had sold himself to the devil and then exercised his right as master. When a man forges and thinks he will be happy in the possession of the money he is likely to find he is mistaken; he is selling himself to the devil; when a man has been successful in his efforts to ruin the virtue of some poor woman, and thinks he has merely ruined her, he is mistaken; he has ruined himself. Bear in mind that God from his throne sees you.

Ahab's journey to Jezreel was then described by Mr. Moody, and his entering into possession of his ill-gotten gains. The meeting of Elijah and Ahab after the murder of Naboth, and the prophecy of the man of God, relative to the destruction of Ahab's house and the death of Jezebel were gone over. The speaker dwelt upon the folly of sacrificing the happiness of time and eternity for the gratification of a brief hour of pleasure as exemplified in the case Ahab. The necessity of parents encouraging children to accept salvation was taken up, and he illustrated the point as follows: I remember a few years ago hearing of a young lady who had been brought under deep conviction of sin. She seemed just about accepting Christ, and the father and mother did all they could to hinder her. The Spirit of God was striving within her, and in order to get her mind from the subject of conversion they thought of getting up a very expensive party, and they bought for the occasion a very expensive dress for her. The evening came, and she had the most gorgeous dress at that party. She was the belle of the evening. Their object was accomplished. Three weeks after that the daughter was on her dying bed, and she said, "Bring me my dress." It was brought to her, and she looked at it, and, pointing with her finger, said: "That is the price of my soul," and in a few hours she was dead. It is terrible to think that intelligent young ladies and intelligent men should stand weighing this question and saying to themselves, "I can't give up the pleasures of the world for the kingdom of God." Ah, my friends, the time is coming when you would give worlds to have settled this question in the other way. Don't be like Ahab. My friends, if you take the pleasures of the world instead of him, it will cost you all you have got. You will die a miserable death and have a miserable eternity. May the God of Elijah fill your hearts with his love to-night, may he open your eyes to your own salvation, and may there be a rush into the inquiry-room, and a cry go up to-night from the heart of every unconverted man and woman here. Let us pray that God may find out every sinner in this hall to-night.

The Lord has many fine farms from which he receives but little rent.

MASONIC OATHS.

QUESTIONS: 1st. By what authority does the Masonic lodge administer its oaths and ceremonies to the candidate received?"

"2d. Is there any validity or binding force in those oaths considering the circumstances under which they are taken?"

The above questions propounded by my old Free mission friend, C. G. Coffin, and at his suggestion turned over to me for an answer, have been carefully considered and are answered as follows:

Masonic lodges have neither moral nor legal authority for the administration of their oaths; and, therefore, those they do administer are invalid, and without binding force, let the circumstances be what they may—much less the circumstances being what they are.

In making good this answer it is deemed in place to consider at some length: What oaths are; where the authority to administer and enforce them rests; and their validity, or when they are or are not binding.

WHAT OATHS ARE.

The following authorities must settle this:

Webster defines "Oath" as follows: "A solemn affirmation or declaration made with appeal to God for the truth of what is affirmed. The appeal to God in an oath implies that the person imprecates his vengeance and renounces his favor if the declaration is false; or if the declaration is a promise the person invokes the vengeance of God if he should fail to fulfill it. A false oath is called perjury."

Bailey in the second American edition of his Moral Philosophy, page 115, writes as follows: "But whatever be the form of the oath the signification is the same. It is calling upon God to witness, i. e., to take notice of what we say. And it is invoking his vengeance or renouncing his favor, if what we say be false, or what we promise be not performed.

Francis Wayland. in his Moral Science (2nd edition, page 217-218) says: "In taking an oath, besides incurring the ordinary penalties incident to perjury, he who swears, calls upon God to witness the truth of his assertions, and also, either expressly or by implication, invokes upon himself the judgments of God if he speaks falsely."

Oaths as thus defined are of two kinds, (as further discussed by Wayland in his Moral Science, quoted, pages 321-2), "Those which respect the past, assertatory; and those which respect the future, promissory."

"1. The oath respecting the past is definite. A transaction either took place or did not take place, and we have or have not a knowledge respecting it. It is therefore in our power to tell what we know, or to tell what and in how much we do not know. This is the proper occasion for an oath."

"2d. The oath respecting the future is of necessity indefinite, as when we promise upon oath to discharge to the best of our ability a particular office. Thus the parties may have very different views of what is meant by discharging an office according to the best of our ability, or this obligation may conflict with others, such as domestic or personal obligations; and the incumbent may not know even with the best intentions which obligation ought to take the precedence, that is, what is the best of his ability. Such being the case, who that is aware of the frailty of human nature will dare to peril his eternal salvation upon the performance, to the best of his ability, of any official duty? And if these allowances be understood by both parties, how are they to be limited, and if they be not limited what is the value of an oath? Such being the case, it is at best doubtful whether promissory oaths of office ought ever to be required. * * * Such an oath of office upon reflection without such mental reservation as must immediately convince him that the requirement is nugatory; and if so that it must be injurious."

Wayland says further (p. 321) in relation to the "Interpretation of Oaths," that "As oaths are imposed for the safety of the party administering them, they are to be interpreted as he understands them. The person under oath has no right to make mental reservation but to declare the truth, precisely in the manner that the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth is expected of him. On no other principle would we ever know what to believe or to expect from a witness."

In order to get the full force of the meaning of oaths the definition of perjury is added. This, as given by Sir Edward Coke, in Blackstone, on Public Wrongs, is: "A crime committed when a lawful oath is administered in some judicial proceeding to a person who swears wilfully, absolutely, and falsely in a matter material to the issue or point in question." "The law," adds Blackstone, (in lo co) "takes no notice of any perjury but such as is committed in some court of justice having power to administer an oath, or before some magistrate or proper officer invested with similar authority, in some proceedings relative to a civil suit or a criminal prosecution; for it esteems all other oaths unnecessary at least, and therefore will not punish the breach of them."

It is an easy matter to determine, from the authorities cited, that oaths can embrace at least four important, and essential things: a promise; an invocation, on the part of the persons taking them, of divine vengeance; the human penalty of perjury, in case of failure or falsity, and the right, on the part of its administrator to impose it, to inflict the penalty.

WHERE THE AUTHORITY TO ADMINISTER AND ENFORCE THE OBLIGATION OF OATHS IS VESTED.

That such authority exists, by divine appointment, somewhere in man's organic relations will be conceded, notwithstanding the weight of argument drawn by a class of wise and good men from the Saviour's "Swear not at all," to the contrary. That argument, if deemed conclusive, would abrogate all oaths, including Masonic, of course. But it is here not only admitted but also argued that the "Swear not at all," in its divine interdiction, was limited in its application to man's moral and religious, as distinguished from his civil relations. Christ in separating, as he evidently did, church and state, left the prerogative of oaths with the state where it properly belonged, even while the union, under the Old Dispensation existed.

The ground, then, is here taken that the state alone as a divine ordination, has the rightful authority to administer and enforce the obligations of oaths. It is believed that the argument fairly sustains it, notwithstanding the more general opinion of our ablest men that the church is also vested with that authority.

First in point here is the argument which would follow of right, on the part of the church, to dictate belief and conduct. Granting the right to administer and enforce the obligations of an oath, so far at least, as the oath goes, so far this right is established. The understanding of the oath—administering power, governing the interpretation, meaning and object of the oath, as it does, there is no logical avoidance of this conclusion. We have in that case, the Papal claim of church rights established as against the Protestant claim of the rights of individual conscience, and private judgment? Is the Protestant battle of a thousand years with its unnumbered martyrdoms thus to prove a failure? It must if the church has the right to require, administer, or interpret oaths and inflict penalties for the violation of oaths. Can we admit that this conclusion is just as well as a logical necessity? If not, as we surely do not, we must deny that the church has this authority vested in her. The logical necessity is the reductio ad absurdum— reduction to an absurdity, at least in the minds of Protestants. The justness of the conclusion is therefore substantially denied. The church has not the right claimed for her. Soul liberty has a reality as well as a name. Then again would follow in sustaining the ground of church rights, the argument of force; the right to arrest and execute, by the use of physical force, proper penalties upon evil doers, violators of just laws. This is an essential accompaniment of duly authorized oaths. The right to administer an oath must carry with it the right to use all necessary force to compel the taking, and punish the breaking of it.

It is clear, in the light of the New Testament, that the state, civil government, is divinely endowed with this element of power. It may enforce the right and punish the wrong, in the civil relations of men. To say the least the Saviour's life and teachings were consistent with this view. There can be no rational doubt that the Apostle Paul taught this in such passages of his epistle as "Rulers are not a terror to good works but to the evil," that civil magistrates "bear not the sword in vain," the minister of justice is "the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil," and many others that might be quoted. All human governments claim and exercise this right, and recognize it in no other organic relations of this life. Appointing administrators of oaths assumes that no others have the right to administer them. The same cannot be truly said of the church. In the light of the New Testament it cannot in truth be said that the Christian churches have this divine endowment, in the present spiritual dispensation of grace. "It," says Christ, "my kingdom, [the Spirit] reign, were of this world, [this dispensation,] then would my servants fight,"—use force, take the sword, and battle for the right. This meets the case with denial of ecclesiastical right to use the force which belongs to the governments of the world. The creation and enforcement of human or divine penalties are foreign to the Gospel dispensation, to man in his ecclesiastical relations, to his fellow, and in his spiritual relations to God. From this fact the logic of the anti-Christ evidently deduced the necessity of a church and state union. The church as a dominant or subservient power, no matter which, must have the aid of physical state force, in order to its predicted conquests. Heresy must be punished, and religion, if needs be, be propagated with the sword, This is the Jesuitism of Papacy, and the Knight Templarism of Masonry, but not Christianity during its church dispensation.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24,

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party.

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years. Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH.

Translated by Prof. A. E. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150,000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100,000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tracts addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150,000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK,

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

TIN ROOFS

BRICK WALLS.

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

We wish all our readers a happy New Year; and we will not narrowly limit our wishes to them. We wish every man, woman and child on earth a happy New Year. We intend by God's help to show the sincerity of this wish by trying, as God gives us grace, to do good as we have opportunity unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.

If any who read the above long for happiness but do not have it, we can tell you how to get and keep it.

Love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind, and your neighbor

AS YOU LOVE YOURSELF.

If you do not know how to do this study the Word of God, believe fully in Christ, pray for the Holy Spirit to make the Word plain and you cannot fail to have a happy new year.

THE WORK OF THE HOUR.

The work for friends of the cause now is canvassing for subscriptions.

A brother asked us "Have you any word to send to the friends at Byron, Illinois?" Our reply was, "Tell them to secure a club for the Cynosure." This is the message we send to all who have to work in this reform. One man writes "I have no heart to work," another "I am unable on account of my health." We hope God will give the former heart and the latter health. But until He does we do not want them to help on this work. But to all who are able physically, mentally and spiritually we say for subscribers.

HEALTH AND HEART

"THRUST IN THE SICKLE"

One man was invited to dine with some Christian friends last week. He watched for an opportunity; it came; it was improved. Two new subscribers was the result. Geo. Bohrer, of Bloomington, Illinois, eighty-four years old, sends in a club of five for a year. What this reform has!

A NOBLE VETERAN GUARD

J. A. Laird, Henry county, Iowa, sends in a club of thirteen. He writes: "The people of this community are so completely under the influence of lodge rule that no minister of the Gospel has yet dared to open his mouth against it. But as taught in the Cynosure. The reform here is in its infancy but is making rapid growth." W. H. Holcomb, Knoxville Illinois, sends eight new subscriptions and writes that the balance of the club will soon be forthcoming. Abner Orr, Akron, Missouri, sends five subscriptions. Mrs. A. E. Jenks, Cheshire, Massachusetts, sends ten subscriptions for a year. Jason Bartholomew, Ely, Linn county, Iowa, sends a club of five. John Viall, Galesburg, Illinois, sends a club of ten. James Miller, Yellow Springs, Green county, O., sends a club of ten. Richard Green, LaGrange, Indiana, sends a club of ten.

The question is frequently asked, Must all the names of the club we get have the same postoffice address? No. It makes no difference whether the papers all go to the same office or to different offices. Must all the names of the club be sent at one time? The money for the club must be sent at one time; the names may be sent at different times. If you are going to send in a club of five, you can, if you prefer, send a part of the names at one time and the rest at another, providing you forward the money for the club, $8.75, with the first names you send. If you intend to send a club of ten send the $15.00. It will be placed to your credit and as fast as you find a subscriber send on his name and it will be charged to you at $1.50 for the year. The regular way of course is to send the club and the money together. But you can send the money first if you choose. J. S. Hickman, Seemly, Illinois, writes: "If you should give out word that any one wishing to act as agent for your paper paying fifteen dollars in advance, could order out that amount of subscriptions for the Cynosure at $1.50 each for 1877, some of the friends that are able might aid you more than they do." We do so. J. H. Hanna, of Pittsburgh, did in this way last year. Send on the money.

Friends, are you determined to put the Cynosure into ten thousand families this year? Is this too much to ask of you whose eyes are opened to the fearful havoc secret societies are making with truth, honesty and Christianity?

Have you tried once, twice, or thrice without success? Is this all your duty in the matter? Christian reader will you take these questions and on your knees in prayer make anew an entire consecration of yourself to Him for time and for eternity, and then ask the Holy Spirit whether you have yet any duty in increasing the circulation of the Cynosure? If not, we do not want you to work for the paper. If you have, will you not seek wisdom from on high for this work? Will you not ask others who love Christ and their fellow men to unite with you in prayer for the increased circulation of the Cynosure? It has had its present small number of readers long enough. The phase of this reform which now demands the attention of the Christian workers is the increased circulation of the Cynosure. It is emphatically

Political.

FROM ALL ALONG THE LINE.

Rev. J. L. Grove, Worthington, Armstrong Co., Pa., writes:

"One vote for the American ticket is all I have to report from my election district, (viz. West Franklin township, Armstrong county, Pennsylvania). I have for some time been lending my influence and support to the Prohibition party, but the platform of the American party suits my views better still. When I can have a choice I cannot conscientiously vote for one allied with such an institution of the devil as Freemasonry. There is much that is noble in the Prohibition platform and I believe it is destined to do a noble work, and as there is so much in the American platform that is identical and as the existence of the two will very materially retard the other, could there not be some means devised by which to bring the two together, combining their strength and hastening into power a party that will vindicate and act upon the principles that are based upon truth and righteousness in the two platforms, and that too without sacrificing the vital point?"

Eli B. Brooks, Villisca, Iowa, asks if any American party tickets were sent to his place. There were none sent from this office to any part of Iowa.

Solomon Rapids, Kansas, writes:

"One man has been converted since election, and we will make a better showing next campaign. But one vote was cast in this county for the nominees of the American party, and no act in all my life has in the retrospect given me more pleasure."

TO ALL SECEDING MASONS.

BRETHREN:—I propose that we, who have been members of the Masonic order, meet in general convention in some centrally located city as early as practicable; that we hold our convention six successive days; that we work a degree of Masonry each day or evening, and that we issue from that convention an address to the American people. All I feel will see at once the propriety of this movement and I have no doubt will do everything in their power to make it a glorious success. Think the whole matter over, brethren, and communicate your views through the Cynosure. Now let us all work and work quickly else we may not have time to work at all.

Though not through grips, still fraternally yours. EDMOND RONAYNE.

THE KANSAS ASSOCIATION,

Opposed to Secret Societies, will hold its next semi-annual meeting at North Cedar, Jackson county, Kansas, in the Reformed Presbyterian Church, on Tuesday, Jan. 23, 1877, at two P. M., and will continue in session about two days. Several public addresses will be delivered by popular speakers, and important business is to be attended to. The friends of the cause are urged to be present, and the public generally are invited to attend. Free entertainment will be furnished to all who may attend from a distance.

J. DODDS, Secretary.

North Cedar is eight miles southeast of Holton, Jackson county and twenty-five miles due north of Topeka.

CENTRAL KANSAS ASSOCIATION.

The first regular meeting of this Association will be held in Good Will school house, two miles north of Sterling, Rice county, Kansas, February 9 10, 1877. A general invitation is extended to all friends of the cause.

G. W. KELLER, Pres.
WM L. HINSHAW, Sec'y.

A NEW YEAR'S GREETING.

To all the Cynosure readers both old and young, and especially to all friends among whom I have worked during the eventful year of 1876:

MY DEAR FRIENDS:

Availing myself of the kindness and liberality of our co-workers in the Cynosure office, I adopt this as being the most convenient mode of addressing you and of wishing you one and all a very happy New Year. Great work has been done during the year just closed—great results have been accomplished, and I confidently God's blessing has followed all our efforts against Freemasonry during 1876.

And now in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ let us begin this New Year with renewed vigor and a firmer determination to do battle against this great enemy to civil and religious liberty than ever before. The time is very short; we are getting older very fast; the night will soon come and then our day of usefulness will be gone forever: let us therefore, while yet we have an opportunity, work with all our might. And the most effective means in this as in all our warfare is prayer. Let the Lord's people pray everywhere for the furtherance of our cause. It is the cause of God. It is the cause of true religion. It is the cause of those who are bound, lo! these many years. Let us pray God that he would send his Holy Spirit to teach and guide us in all our ways and make us the humble instruments of breaking down the high places of Baal. And don't forget the Cynosure. We must have a larger subscription list. We must have 20,000 by May 1st, and this can be accomplished if each subscriber now will only try and obtain one more. And to all seceding Masons I would fraternally say, Brethren, let me hear from you in regard to our proposed convention. This is of the utmost importance and I believe, if accomplished, will be productive of the grandest results. Let us bring this about. And now once more I bid you all a very happy New Year.

Yours for the truth,
EDMOND RONAYNE.

Topics of the Time.

The Senate Committee investigating Louisiana elections finds the same old insurrectionary, murder-plotting bands that have caused most of the trouble in that State fer years re-christened and vigorous. The Ku-Klux Klan, Knights of the White Camelia, White League bands now are known as "298 societies." Witnesses refuse to disclose anything respecting the ritual or obligations of the order. What may be the developments of the next fortnight respecting the society, no one can predict, but as both political parties inaugurated their respective Governors on Monday, the anarchy sure to follow will be the best pasture for such secret clans.

The death of Commodore Vanderbilt on last Thursday caused little excitement, since it has been daily expected for months. The control of his vast railway interests has for some time been in the hands of his son William, who is said to strongly resemble his father in his business habits, and to whom the will gives the bulk of the eighty or a hundred millions of property. Vanderbilt seldom used his wealth in the promotion of religious or benevolent enterprises. His second wife who survives him had great influence over his rough independent nature and persuaded him to buy a church for Dr. Deems, his pastor, now known as the "Church of the Strangers," and also to found Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn. The following estimate of his character was made by one whose views are entitled to more than usual consideration:

"He was not a creator of anything like a Fulton or a Stephenson; he merely found a place to invest his money at a late period in life. He did have immense force of character, like an Attila or any other conqueror; but I think he was destitute of both affection and principle. The pursuit of power had made him so supremely selfish that he was jealous of his successful son. As he cared for nobody, nobody not interested, cared for him. He will pass out of memory as thoroughly as his famous excursion in the North Star."

At the Sabbath evening meeting in the great Tabernacle just after the news of the Ashtabula disaster, Mr. Moody paid the following just tribute to the memory of P. P. Bliss the singer:

This morning we took up a collection to raise a monument to our friend the late P. P. Bliss. I consider him one of the most remarkable men that has lived in our time. He had three remarkable gifts: first he wrote the hymns, then he wrote the music, and then he was one of the sweetest singers I ever heard. He heard me preach on the love of God, and the next time I met him he sung me that little hymn, "I am so glad that Jesus loves me." At another time he heard me preach on grace, and at the next lecture on that subject he sung the beautiful hymn entitled "More to Follow." He wrote me a fire hymn after the Chicago fire; he wrote the hymn, "Free from the Law, O Happy Condition," and I think it a hymn that will last as long as "Rock of Ages." "Ring the Bells of Heaven" is another of his compositions. He spent a week with me last summer and every day he brought out a hymn, music and all. He heard Major Whittle tell of that scene on Kenesaw Mountain and he went home and wrote "Hold the Fort," a hymn that is sung round the world. Thank God for such a man. Chicago don't know what kind of a man they have lost.

THE LEVEL AND THE SQUARE.

[ROB. MORRIS REVISED.]

We meet upon the Level and part upon the Square;
What words of precious meaning those words Masonic are,
Come listen all ye cowans, 'tis worthy of your thought;
In the very walls of Masonry these sentiments are wrought.

We meet upon the Level but the cripple must not come
Who lost an arm while fighting for country and for home;
With the cowan he must loiter outside the Mason's door.
Nor hope to find the least respect upon the checkered floor.

The blind, the poor, and women in darkness must abide;
The negro and the aged die the mystic gate outside
We leave the church to gather the halt, the blind and lame,
While we can feast and fatten upon far better game.

We part upon the Square for the world must have its due;
We mingle with the cowans and suck their blood 'tis true.
For the influence of our gatherings in memory is green,
And our high profession is an all—sufficient screen.

There's a world where all are equal, we are hurrying to it fast;
We shall surely find our Level when the gates of death are past.
But can we there as here exclude the hated Nazarene
By help of hireling preachers to aid the tragic scene?

Hands round, ye faithful Masons, in Hiram's name rely;
We part upon the Square below, to meet him in the sky.
O what words of precious meaning the words Masonic are,
We meet upon the Level and we part upon the Square!

MASONIC CLAIMS TO MORALITY AND RELIGION.—II.

BY J. W. RAYNOR.

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 294; Article. Masonry. "Masonry is of two kinds, operative and speculative, Operative Masonry is engaged ni the constructiou of material edifi ces by means of stone and marble; speculative Masonry is occupied in the erection of a spiritual temple by means of symbolic instruction. The latter, which is also called Freemasonry, adopts and symbolizes for its sacred purpose the implements and materials which are used in the former. Hence operative Masonry is an art, and speculative, a science; and while the objects of the one are profane and temporal, those of the other are sacred and eternal."

Note the false and preposterous claims made by that mother of secret abominations—Freemasonry:

1st, a science; 2nd, a spiritual work, rearing moral temples; 3rd, its objects are sacred and eternal; and 4th, for its sacred purpose it uses symbolically, profane and material implements. One would think God's truth better adapted for such ends, and the Christian believes the Bible sufficient. "The Bible is a light to our feet and a lamp to our path." The entrance of God's word into the soul gives light. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," If Christians and religious teachers are renewed and enlightened by faith in Christ and the operation of the Holy Spirit, so as to be "God's husbandry," "God's building," what business have they with Masonic manipulation and oaths, and secrets? Is not God's work sufficient? "Having begun in the Spirit are ye now made perfect by the flesh."

But all who will investigate and observe will not believe that speculative Masonry has such high and noble aims. The character of its membership, its methods, its manifested results do not warrant any such conclusion. Professing Christians and ministers need not go outside of the church, into organizations made up largely of unconverted men, under the leadership of worldly-minded lodge officers for spiritual light and growth in grace, and enlarged Christian usefulness. "Be ye separate." "Be ye holy." "Come out from among them." "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," are the Bible commands as to Christian duty. The cultivation of the moral virtues which Masonry professes, does not need secrecy, and oaths, and death-penalties. The claim of Masonry to afford superior advantages, and light for high moral attainment is a false claim, for it does not even require a belief in the truth of the Bible, and it is well known that many of its votaries practically and theoretically discard and disregard the Bible as an authoritative and inspired rule of life. The voice of the Saviour is, "Search the Scriptures." "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." The Christian having the Bible, the sword of the Spirit, needs no human additions of "square and compass."

Hence if it is not necessary to good Masonic standing to believe in God's Word, it follows that Masonry does not honor and respect the Bible because of its Author or its claims. It is but one among its many symbols.

Mackey's Lexicon, p. 450.—"Speculative Masonry." Freemasonry is called Speculative Masonry to distinguish it from operative masonry, which is engaged in the construction of edifices of stone. Speculative Masonry is a science, which, borrowing from the operative art its working tools and implements, sanctifies them by symbolic instruction to the holiest of purposes the veneration of God and the purification of the soul. The operative mason constructs his edifice of material substances. The Speculative Mason is taught to erect a spiritual building, pure and spotless, and fit for the residence of Him who dwell th only with the good. The operative mason works according to the designs laid down for him on the trestle-board by the architect. The speculative is guided by the great trestle-board, on which is inscribed the revealed will of God, the Supreme Architect of Leaven and earth. The operative mason tries each stone and part of the building by the square, level, and plumb. The Speculative Mason examines every action of his life by the square of morality, seeing that no presumption or vain glory has caused him to transcend the level of his allotted destiny, and no vicious propensity has led him to swerve from the plumb-line of rectitude. And lastly, as it is the business of the operative mason, when his work is done, to prove everything "true and trusty," so is it the object of the Speculative Mason, by a uniform tenor of virtuous conduct to receive when his allotted course of life has passed the inappreciable reward from his Celestial Grand Master of "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Thus Masonry that gathers around its common altars in strange worship, the Brahmin, the Mohammedan, the Jew, and the Christian, claims, by its inculcated morality to bring its motly membership to the realms of eternal bliss without any saving faith, or any regeneration by the Holy Spirit.

Correspondence of the Michigan Convention.

To Chairman and others of the Christian Association now convened at Hastings, Mich.:

Dear Friends:—It has been my intention to be with you at this meeting, but unforeseen circumstances prevent me from attending. I am in spirit with you and all good citizens who are sincere in their efforts to stop the awful tide of evil now pervading our land through the workings of secret organizations.

* * * Already since the close of the rebellion have those oath-bound secret clans killed more innocent peaceable men in the Southern States than were killed in the war of 1812 and 1814 of our army by the British; yet not a single man of those secret murderers has been punished, or can they be so long as they continue in their midnight combinations to strike down the innocent. I am an old man verging hard on to four score years. I mourn for our beloved country, as I constantly think of the gigantic evil that is fast sapping the very vitals of our liberties through these midnight societies; and when I view the means employed to deceive and entice the unsuspecting, and the abominable work of the lodge, I cannot but think of the burning words of Cadwallader D. Colden when he declared he never knew a very great Mason that was not a very great fool; but although the lodge is merely a preparation room, the place where men are duped and made to believe that the order is of holy origin; that Solomon, David and all the patriarchs of old were Masons; that God was and is the head center; and that Jesus was a Grand Master, etc. Every effort at deception in the lodge is made to cajole the simple fool that lends himself, his money, his reputation and his all to become a victim to designing men who aspire to office of profit and honor. It has and does pervade every department of our government and society. Masonry screens its members from punishment for crimes, no matter how atrocious. It is on the bench and in the jury-box. It controls the ballot-box to an alarming extent in our country. It is selfish in the extreme. It takes from the wife and the orphan. It debauches the husband and father. It has vast expenditures for flummery and temples, built simply to grandize its votaries and give prominence to ambitious men who seek promotion by deluding those they intend to victimize.

In 1818, Asa Worthington killed Andy Hamilton in Lancaster Co. Pa. He fled to Lancaster and the lodge was at once convened. He was a Royal Arch Mason. James Buchanan was Master of that lodge. Money was raised; a special coach of the "Good Intent" mail line, owned by Masons exclusively, was started for Pittsburgh with Worthington and one other Mason. He was to be put on board of a steamboat to go to the South where he would be safe from arrest. But as he at midnight stepped from the coach, the sheriff of Allegheny county arrested him, and took him back to Lancaster jail. He was tried; the proof was positive, and the in laugnage of Judge Franklin, a clearer case of willful, premeditated murder was never made out. The Judge was not a Mason; eleven of the jury were high Masons, and Worthington was acquitted; sixteen years afterwards on his deathbed he acknowledged he killed Hamilton, and that James Buchanan and Masonry saved him from the gallows. I knew personally the entire jury.

No wonder that Buchanan, as President, lent a willing ear to the dictates of his Southern Masonic brethren to destroy this government and build up a Southern secret oath-bound confederacy to perpetuate the slavery of four million blacks through their secret power.

I have hastily penned the foregoing and fear to trespass on your deliberations. I will close, assuring you, my friends, that I am with you in your heavenly work, in your efforts to put down all secret combinations of men; as these all prove that their works are evil. I repeat, I mourn for our beloved country when I see the inroads constantly being made to subvert our free form of government and build on its ruin a despotism far worse than any that has cursed the Old World.

Very truly your friend,

H. Willis.

It will be recollected that when the Virginius affair had excited to madness the portion of our people who love strife, Mr. Sumner wrote a letter to a New York war meeting, which was suppressed for the reason that it decidedly opposed any fanning of the war spirit against the Spanish republic. On the opening of the succeeding Congress, Mr. Sumner found on his desk a telegram from the deputies of the Republican majority of the Spanish Congress conveying their heartfelt salutations and felicitation on the sympathy expressed in behalf of their country, and saying that similar sentiments animated them with regard to their brothers in America, and prompted them to hope that recent differences would result in peace. How much more dignified and noble are such sentiments on both sides than those which incited so many of our citizens to demand redress by the brutal arbitrament of the sword.

A Servian Secret Society.

The London Saturday Review, in an article on the Servian secret society called the Omladina, says, "When the Omladina first began to exist is not known; but it was no doubt the offshoot of that new notion in European polities, the right and duty of nationalities to cohere, which has produced so many wonderful changes on the face of the continent. Half a century ago the United Slavonians must, as their name indicates, have had a feeling that they were to work wherever anything like a common nationality gave them a base of operations, just as the secret societies of Germany and Italy aimed at effecting something for all the divided states of their respective countries. The endeavors of the Emperor Nicholas to establish a protectorate over the Christian provinces of Turkey must also have tended to make the idea of a Slavonic nationality familiar to the Russian mind; and the encouragement given to the Literary Association for Panslavic Union under the present emperor has no doubt acted in the same direction. But the Omladina is something very different from a society for pushing on the rule of imperial Russia over new provinces. It is a republican society. It is as much opposed to the court as the United Slavonians were. It is the ally of what is known on the continent as the Revolution. It first showed its activity in the abortive insurrection got up in Herzegovina eight years ago with the aid of Italian sympathizers. Subsequently its headquarters were established at Belgrade and Bucharest, and thence it stirred up the Bosnian and Bulgarian insurrections. At Belgrade its influence was found sufficient to make Prince Milan declare war even when he was assured that he must not reckon on the active support of the czar. Like all secret societies, it works by a machinery through which orders are given step by step from a head centre to small local committees. In Bulgaria, for example, instructions were given to form local committees of ten members in the towns, and of four in the villages, it being provided that the priest and the school-master were always to be members of the village committees. The association of the priests is a point worthy of remark. The Omladina is like the Society of United Slavonians in many respects, beside that of its dependence on the tie of nationality. It is a political society, and it has its adherents in the higher, the official, and the military classes. Again, it is allied to the Nihilists so far as every movement of the European revolutionary party must, when it appeals to the poor, have much in common with socialism. But it has one feature which was wanting in those organizations. It works with the priests. It offers itself as the friend of Christians who are groaning under Mussulman oppression."

How I was Affected by the Initiation.—II.

I have said that in taking the first degree of Masonry my confidence in men and ministers received the severest blow that it ever had. This is true, and especially true as to myself. From the refined and polished Christian minister, he was transformed to a poor, weak specimen of humanity, as in imagination I saw him passing through the absurd ordeal of Masonic ceremony, and binding himself under its awful death-penalty. "Is it possible!" I mentally said, that brother——has passed through all of this? And then I began to cast blame upon him for not refusing to do so, and especially because of his influence lent to help bring me into such a place. True, I felt the force of the fact that I was passing through the same; but I have this satisfaction, that directly I never gave my influence in favor of Masonry by word to any one.

Whether justly or not, I doubt whether human character will ever appear to me again as it did before this event. I do not wonder that men outside the lodge are slow to believe the statements made of Masonry. I myself could scarcely believe my own senses; and no marvel that before this I did not believe those who had never seen the inside of a lodge. But now I would hardly be deceived in this way; for I have found that humanity is weak, and her vagaries are beyond comprehension. And I would not dare to follow a man, though he came to me as an angel of light, having all the exterior of good, simply upon his character; for I have seen what stoops even such men can make, and what, to me, ridiculous practices apparently good men may engage in.

As to this one fact, then, I confess that there is something very mysterious in Masonry. How much a system could denude, blindfold, and fetter with three terrible death-penalties myself is beyond my power to explain. Much more: how it can do the same to the tall, the strong, and the high, adding many oaths and death-penalties, with attending and increasingly ridiculous ceremonies, is inexplicable. But such is the fact; and this fact is one of the most formidable difficulties to be overcome in the work of the Anti-mason.

Masons understand well their vantage-ground here, and make much of it. Indeed, this is the bulwark behind which thousands intrench themselves to-day. Bernard has truthfully exposed Masonry. Morgan's book is substantially as I received the Masonic work. Stearns and Finney corroborate these, while those who have recently come out, every one of them, declare that these men speak the truth. But when these facts are presented, instantly there is pushed to the front a long line, many deep, of Gospel ministers, made up of the chaste and learned, and popular, who say, "We see nothing wrong in Masonry," while now and then along this line is one who with a brazen front says, "Masonry is divine—a system of the greatest grandeur and the greatest good." And when the querist, perhaps more than half inclined to believe these statements, asks for some evidence, some demonstration of the peculiar excellence of Masonry, he is told to look at the large corps of ministers who are Masons. "Surely Masonry cannot be so bad as represented, else there would not be so many good men in the order, especially ministers." And hence ministers act as a cover, not only for each other but for the thousands who stand behind them. But notwithstanding this formidable array of clerical power, with the drawn blade of truth we dare meet the issue. We cannot explain, neither will we try; but we know that it is so; ministers are Masons, and Masonry is all that Morgan, Bernard, Stearns, Finney, and others say that it is. And though to day there are but few that dare to state, yet these - and I join their tiny ranks with all my soul—lift the hand to heaven and declare by Him, "the habitation of whose throne is justice and judgment," this is the truth.

But to return. I entered the lodge, took the three degrees which constitute "Blue Lodge Masonry," repeating the oaths with their awful death-penalties. How I could do this, I make no attempt to explain. That it should appear mysterious to others, in view of my feelings during the ceremony, is not the least surprising, for it has ever been a mystery to me. And all that I can say is, I had not the moral courage to stop, but after once consenting to put myself under the direction of my guide I was led on step by step, my feelings revolting, but still consenting, until at length I had done what a half hour before I would not have believed it possible for men to compel, much less persuade me to do. And yet I did do all this, so far as to take the first degree, without so much as a single audible protest.

But after passing from "labor to refreshments," on being asked how I liked it, I answered plainly, "I think it rather a hard ceremony, and the oath especially I look upon as fearful." It was a very candid man who asked me the question, and he replied, "If I felt like that I would go no farther." But at the same time he told me that he saw nothing wrong in the ceremony, neither in the oath or penalty, for he did not consider that the language signified what the words expressed.—Rev. E. W. Wheeler in the Wesleyan.

A Chat about Freemasonry.

BY NONCONFORMIST.

Personae.—Sandy, a Freemason; Jamie, an independent citizen

Time—Monday after laying of the foundation stone of Glasgow Post Office.

Jamie—I say, Sandy, ye never tell't me ye were a Freemason. I wad ne'er hae guessed it had I no seen you last Tuesday wi' your apron and sash on like the rest o' them marchin' alang like a hero on a sma' scale. Aye an' ye're a Mason!

Sandy.—Of course I am. But ye dinna think I'm gaun to tell that to everybody. When there's ony need for't I'll tell it, for I'm no ashamed o't, but I'm no gaun to mak' an adverteesement o' the thing to let everybody ken.

Jamie—Ye adverteesed it weel eneuch last Tuesday I can tell ye, an' ony body that saw ye that day wi' your sash an' apron on, marchin' in the rain mair like a drookit craw than onything else, winna forget your Freemasonry for a while.

Sandy—But Jamie what has set you atalkin' aboot this noo? Gin I be a Freemason what's wrang? Hav'nae I a richt to be a Freemason if I like? I can tell ye it's a gran' society, and if ye were a sensible man ye wad be ane yersel'.

Jamie—Are ye in earnest? The truth is my idea o' the thing aye was that it was a haverel sort o' business. As for the secrets I aye thocht them a piece o' clamjamfry. An' as for the sash and aprons wi' noo and then a sword and cocked hat—weel I hae thocht my weans at hame at their play had noo an' then a bit o' the Freemasonry business amang themsel's.

Sandy.—Aye, I see what it is Jamie, ye ken naething aboot it, an' ye'll no ken either, unless ye jine. An' I wad advise ye to dae that. Ye wad fin' it a gran' society. Ye wad mak' a heap o' freens, freens that wad staun by ye, an' I can tell ye ye wad fin' it a great help to ye as ye jostle thro' the warl.

Jamie.—Weel man, I've often heard as much aboot it as that. But at the same time there's some things I'm no sae sure o' in the society, an' I wad like some licht afore I wad tak' sic a step. Ye ken I'm a member o' the kirk, an' I wad like to ken whether there's ony religion in the Freemasonry business, so that a Christian could connec' himsel' wi' it.

Sandy.—Religion! Man that's the very beauty o't. If it wasna a religious society I wadna hae onything to dae wi't, nor wad I advise ony ither body to jine. But it's without a doot a religious society. I'm no tellin' owre muckle oot o' the lodge when I tell ye that we tak' the Bible as oor guide, we read it at oor meetings, and we open oor meetins wi' prayer, an' teach the principles o' truth and friendship and charity; an' besides, as ye ken yersel', we hae ministers, an' noblemen, an' even princes members o' oor society, so that it's a' thro' a respectable religious society.

Jamie.—Aweel Sandy it maun be somethin' worth while to belang to sic a corporation as that, at ony rate a body's sure o' bein' in respectable company. Ministers, noblemen and princes! It's no every day a common body like me can rub claes wi' a prince. But tell me this, if it's a religious society hoo comes it that there's a guid mony folks in't that mak' nae profession o' religion whatever, hoo dae they get in? Ye ken the Masons o' Glaisca were mair than hauf disgraced last Tuesday, for a lot o' them were drunk an' rushed owre a' barriers to get near royalty, makin' use o' language that religious people dinna often use. What aboot them?

Sandy.—Oh ye ken Jamie ye'll fin' black sheep in every society, an' ye may chance noo an' again on Masons that are na muckle to brag o', but nane the less o' that the principle's guid an' it's a religious society. Man, dae ye no min' the beautifu' prayers that Dr. Gray an' Mr. Grant offered up last Tuesday? Did ye ever listen to onything nicer?

Jamie.—Weel man that's just a pint I was gaun to ask ye aboot. Were yon the raal Masonic prayers?

Sandy.—Yes. An' they were beautifu'. Did ye nae think sae yersel'?

Jamie.—Oh, I hae nae doot but they were weel worded. A. D. D. wad be ashamed to put onything oot o' his hauns or oot o' his mouth either that wisna scholarly like. But Sandy, I was jist gaun to tell ye I heard a minister in a Cameronian kirk makin' some remarks aboot thae same prayers, that raither stumbled me, and set me a thinkin'. An' after hearin' his remarks I got the prayers and read them for mysel', an' I fand that what he says was richt. He said the prayers took nae notice o' Christ oor Redeemer, they contained nae confession o' sin nor peteetion for pardon, they ne'er referred to the mercy o' God nor did they seek the glory o' the Redeemer's kingdom. The prayers were jist expressions o' thanks to God for three things, reason, the telegraph, an' the post office, wi' a peteetion that God wad bless the Glaisca post office. An' to tell the truth it seemed to me a humblin' thing to think that ministers o' the gospel should offer up sic prayers without mentionin' the Savior, it looked like as if they were ashamed of Him an' a' he did to save puir sinners like oorsel's. Na, na, Sandy, you'll no dae.

Sandy.—But Jamie, richt weel ye ken Dr. Gray's a minister o' the Auld Kirk, an' ye canna blame him wi' ony intention o' dishonorin' Christ. There maun hae been some reason for't, an' likely if we kent it, some guid reason.

Jamie.—Come noo, my freen, ye mauna shuffle. There's ne'er ony guid reason for daein' what's wrang. If the thing's wrang in itsel' a' the D. D.'s in the warl whither hame spun or brocht a' the way frae America couldna' mak' it richt. But I'll tell ye a secret, Sandy, an' I'll put it to ye as a question. Did ye ever hear a prayer in the lodge put up by the worshipfu' maister as ye ca' him, that contained an acknowledgment o' that name that's above every name. For I can tell you that at a' the public prayers o' Freemasonry put up at the layin' o' foundation stanes in the kintra for the last thirty years—for I hae been watchin' them—the name o' Christ was never yet ance introduced. Is that the religion o' Freemasonry?

Sandy.—Dae ye mean that I'm to tell a' that takes place in the lodge? No' likely, I'm thinkin'. Hooever, to be honest wi' ye, there's far mair in what ye say than I ever thocht. I never bothered my heid aboot that matter, but I'll examin't for mysel', an' if I fin' ye're richt—an' I wadna like to say ye're wrang—a' the oaths in Christendom wadna mak me stay amang them.

Jamie.—There, Sandy, ye hae jist hit upon anither thing I'm as dubious aboot as the prayers.

Sandy.—What's that? Dae ye mean to say ye're gaun to pick mair holes in the business. Be canny a wee.

Jamie.—Just listen to this, Sandy. I'll speir ye anither question. No, I'll no dae that, for ye wadna answer't. But I'll tell't to ye as a fac', for I ken fu' weel it's true. When ye jine the Masons ye tak' an oath to God, an' it's nae common oath either, that ye'll keep up to a' the rules o' the society and never tell its secrets, an' at the time ye're takin' that oath ye dinna ken what the rules an' secrets are. Ye're blin'folded mair ways than ane when ye're sweerin' that time.

Sandy.—Ye think ye hae me there, but dinna gang owre fast. I wad jist like to ken hoo a society's to be keepit secret ava' if the members are not to be bun' solemnly at the very ootset; an' besides a' that, what alters the case is this, that afore onybody is ask'd to sweer that oath he's solemnly assured that there's naething in the society inconsistent wi' the principles o' true religion.

Jamie.—That looks a' very fair, but let me tell ye, sic an argument'll no hand water. There's no an independent man in Britain if he were ask'd the morn by a judge on the bench to sweer to support or abide by a thing he kent naething aboot, even tho' that judge wad tell him it was a' richt, but wad refuse to doe't. He wadna put his conscience under even a judge's fit. Wad ye pin yer faith to onybody's coat tail an' say ye wad tak' his word for what's richt an' what's wrang, an' sweer accordin'. Na, Sandy, I ken ye wad be the last. Why, man, ye wad need to hae an infallible worshipfu' maister afore ye wad daur sweer sic a blin' oath. An' besides a' that, I could name to ye Masons mair than ane or twa wha hae said that the obligations o' Freemasonry did conflic' wi' their duties as Christians; an' the consequence was, they gaed up a' connection with the lodge, for they thocht it better to break a sinfu' oath than keep it. An' ye ken, Sandy, there's but the ae opinion aboot that.

SANDY.—It seems to me ye maun hae been thinkin' mair aboot the the thing than ye loot on. Whaur hae ye got a' that nonsense aboot oaths? Man, that's jist auld wives clatters. Ye've surely mair sense than believe a' ye hear.

JAMIE.—I ken fine what I'm talkin' aboot, never you fear. An' Sandy, I wad like to ken what authority Freemasons hae to administer oaths o' ony kind, an' especially sic oaths as they hae. An oath's an' act o' solemn worship, makin' God himsel' a pairty to the contract, an' a' its power consists in the certainty that God 'll punish the violation o't. An' ye sud ken that an oath can only be justified when it's taen in accordance wi' the divine institution. The State can administer an oath in the interests o' justice an' peace; the church can administer an oath in the same way; but what richt has ony company o' men bandin' themsel's thegither to mak' each ither swear to ane anither? Dae ye think, Sandy, speakin' seriously, that God is willin' to be a pairty to the oaths that are ta'en in a Masonic lodge?

SANDY.—To tell the truth, Jamie, I think ye maun hae been studyin' theology an' metapheesics as weel as Freemasonry, and ye hae been dippin' gaily into baith o' them.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

THE ILLINOIS TEACHERS.

BY PROF. ELLIOT WHIPPLE, WESTFIELD COLLEGE.

The twenty-third annual meeting of the Illinois State Teachers' Association was held at Champaign, Dec. 27–29. A noble band of educators gathered to take one another by the hand, exchange words of greeting and encouragement, and plan measures for the improvement of the schools of the State.

One prominent topic of discussion was the school-law. All agreed that it contained many defects, but as it is doubtful if the legislature can be induced to make the necessary improvements at present, especially where an additional outlay would be required, very few recommendations were made, and those mostly directed to verbal corrections of points in which the bungling of our legislators has left a good opportunity for misunderstanding and litigation.

One radical change suggested by the County Superintendents' Association seems so plainly necessary that it would hardly seem credible that our law-makers can fail to adopt it, had not similar recommendations made in previous years been utterly disregarded. It is that county superintendents should be required to possess suitable educational qualifications for the proper discharge of the duties of the office. Probably our astute Solons have not adopted and will not adopt this change because they foresee that it would make it impossible hereafter to use this office as a make-weight in county politics, and would also make it necessary to pay a fair compensation to the incumbents, since it would so limit the number of those eligible that nobody could be found to serve for the inadequate salary now paid in most counties.

Another recommendation was that county superintendents be required to examine the books of township treasurers, and compel a proper adjustment once a year. The reason for this is plain, if we may credit the statement that in one county where this was done by order of the supervisors, thirty-seven hundred dollars were saved to the county.

The condition of ungraded country schools received considerable attention, and it was determined that by State institutes and other means they must be improved with the hope that thereby the present tendency of the more intelligent and well-to-do citizens to concentrate in towns may be partially prevented.

Dr. Swing of Chicago failed to come to time with a lecture, and his place was ably and acceptably filled by Dr. Allyn of Carbondale. His topic was "Seed Thoughts." The speaker traced a number of beautiful and ingenious analogies between seeds and thoughts. Their production, transmission, power to reproduce, germination, persistence. Fruit good only to use; seeds not only produce fruit, but reproduce seeds in endless succession. So teachers should aim rather to plant principles than facts. Grafts finally degenerate; teachers should endeavor to make independent thinkers rather than impress their own thoughts upon the minds of their pupils.

The college and high school section discussed a proposition looking toward such an adjustment of courses of study as would make it possible for students to pass from the high school to the college: nor was it proposed that this should be done by lowering the standard for admission to college, but rather by adopting some fair and mutually satisfactory system of equivalents. The high school men present appeared anxious to sustain and strengthen the colleges as a necessary part of the system of education, but it is to be regretted that so few of the colleges of the State were enterprising enough to be represented at this meeting, and hence it is not likely that the movement will amount to much.

Westcott of Chicago presented a new method of instruction in German; it is based on the simple idea that, if you wish to learn to swim you must go into the water, and, if you wish to learn German, German words, and those only, must be used in the class room. With a volunteer class he exemplified the possibility of developing abstract ideas and the proper use of their representative terms with pupils who did not know a word of German. There can be no doubt of the excellence of his methods, but why should he mar his admirable paper by going out of his way to attack the study of the classics and by claiming for the study of the modern languages an equal linguistic culture? If the results of other courses are really equivalent to those of the classical why not be content with the appropriate degrees which are now conferred? The degree B. A. means a classical culture, and the persistent efforts in many quarters to secure this degree for those who are not classical students indicates that the advocates of German or other substitutes have not full confidence in their own arguments.

Methods of teaching natural science were discussed by three of our best teachers. Powell of Aurora, urged that pupils be led to find out characteristics and to develope classifications by a study of animals. They should study likenesses to name the group under consideration; differences to get at its subdivisions. He supported his method by theoretical considerations drawn from the nature of the mind and its natural methods of development, and explained and illustrated it by some excellent diagrams. Forbes of Normal, presented a similar method sustained by similar arguments; yet they differed in detail and illustration as two independent and original thinkers would be likely to do. Thomas of Carbondale, presented an entirely opposite view, namely, the method usually followed by our text books, and it was evident, without a vote, which method has a larger following among the teachers of the State. Both are right and both are wrong. It depends on circumstances. In a large graded system like that of Aurora, it would be possible to find time to carry out the plan advocated by the first two speakers, by commencing the study with the children about as soon as they enter school and continuing it from time to time through a large part of the course; under such circumstances this would be the only sensible plan. But when we have a class of advanced pupils who can not, or will not, devote more than one or two terms to this branch, the case is entirely changed. There would not be time enough to accomplish anything at all satisfactory under the new plan, and the best that can be done is to use the old improving it as much as possible and introducing a few sample lessons on the new method to prepare the way for the "good time coming," when, under more favorable circumstances, it may be possible for our pupils to improve upon our work.

The duty of the public school in respect to moral education was discussed by Pickard of Chicago, Edwards of Princeton and Gregory of Champaign. These three eminent men, representing by the positions they hold such diverse factors in the educational work, nevertheless agreed so exactly in their sentiments that they only differed in their manner of illustrating the same great truths. The essence of the discussion was that the moral nature comes to school along with the intellect; a moral or an immoral influence will certainly be exerted; the only question for us to settle is which we will have; culture without conscience is dangerous; does the State demand as the product of its schools a Tweed or a Washington? To accomplish the desired result we need: 1st, Conscientious, truthful teachers, living examples of the morality they are to teach; 2nd, That children should be led to practice morality so that it may become a habit, and 3d, the Bible; or at any rate its spirit and principles; it should be legislated neither into nor out of schools, but every teacher should be free to use it just so far as he finds it efficient to accomplish his purpose, always, however, respecting as far as possible, the conscientious views of others.

Suitable resolutions were adopted respecting the deceased Hanford, who, at the time of his assassination, was a member of the Executive Committee. Those who knew him best spoke in very high terms of his character as a citizen and a teacher. Superintendent Pickard gave a simple but very affecting account of his family. Subscriptions for their aid can be sent to W. H. Wells, Room No. 1, Tribune building, Chicago.

Miss Mary A. West of Galesburg, read a very interesting paper on "How to make little children truthful." She urged that more depends upon the example of the teacher than anything else. The teacher must be entirely truthful, avoid vaccillation in his announcements, forgetfulness of what has been promised, etc. Mechanical accuracy in all work helps to form a habit of exact truthfulness of statement. Lying often arises from a lack of courage, hence courage should be fostered. The imagination of children is sometimes so active that they cannot properly distinguish truth from falsehood, and this should be taken into account in dealing with such cases. We should avoid giving opportunities to profit by deception. The evils of self-reporting were clearly exposed, and in the discussion that followed no one was found to defend this pernicious custom.

The report of the Centennial Com. showed that some $4,000 was subscribed to pay the expenses of exhibiting the work of the schools of Illinois at the Centennial. Of this sum about $3,300 was used, which leaves several hundred dollars in the hands of the treasurer which will probably be used in encouraging some form of exhibit in this State. An annual exhibition in connection with the annual meetings of the Association has been proposed, and a committee appointed to work up the project. Also a committee to prepare for a representation at the next World's fair, which is to be held in Paris in 1878.

After a visit to the splendid art gallery of the Industrial University, the teachers separated, feeling encouraged and strengthened for their work.

The "Interior" and Mr. Moody.

The United Presbyterian thinks that Mr. Moody, on secret societies, was a very fair sermon on one of the distinctive principles of the United Presbyterian church. We do not think his expression on that subject was quite clear. He stated that believers should be separate from unbelievers in business partnerships and all such intimate relations, but he said nothing directly against the principle of secrecy, except that he would not be a member of a secret society. We have no doubt, however, that the "distinctive principle" of opposition to secret societies will soon become general in the evangelical churches. The secret orders are, year by year, understanding more clearly that their vitality depends upon giving satisfaction to the religious aspirations of men. As they cannot do this without divisive discord, on the basis of any existing religious system, their ritual is taking on more of mysticism, and is in fair rivalry with the impressive ceremonials of the Greek and Roman Catholic churches. The Roman Catholics were the first to take cognizance of this rivalry, and their assaults upon Masonry are fierce and furious. It was, undoubtedly, the bitter antagonism between Masonry and Catholicism which gave the former so much popularity with the Methodist people. But that is the result of very bad logic, which our Methodist brethren cannot fail to perceive as such, in due time. The Masonic Religious System can never do much in the way of proselyting from the Catholics, and we do not know that any great advantage to religion would result if it did; but it will and does draw largely from the Protestant churches—the more successfully in that it makes no claims to ecclesiastical authority. The Masonic highway to heaven is so easy and sleek that we wonder that some of the jolly "coasters" do not suspect that it is down hill all the way.

—In an editorial setting forth the reasons for special efforts against the encroachments of secretism, Prof. Tobey in the Telescope uses a forcible illustration. He says:

At this time there is daring movement in the church to remove entirely, or greatly modify, the law against connection with oath-bound lodges. This well-known attempt calls for equal activity on the part of all who are not favorable to a change. The astonishing thing is not that there is so much, but so little said and done by the advocates of the law. Many are yielding their love of the position of the church, and as they do so join the cry of those who seem astonished at a moderate defense of the law. The opposers are very active, not only to unsettle as many as possible, but to overawe every defender of the discipline. Nobody thinks it strange if a man who finds his house assailed cries for help, and tries to strengthen the doors and windows. What is to be thought of the man who assails another's house, and yet coolly asks him why he makes so much ado about fastening the doors? If there is any special defense of our secrecy law at this time, it is because it is assailed. Those who defend it ought not to be shamed into indifference by those who rest not day nor night to bring about its overthrow. When opposers of the rule become moderate, or inactive, it will be time enough for its friends to cease crying aloud.

—The Methodist of New York has the following item which is quite like a libel unless restricted to churches filled with Freemasons such as it is represents perhaps:

"A distinguished minister said in our presence recently: 'If matters go on as they have gone, decent and honest people will have to get out of the church to preserve their reputation.' We have already reached the point where church membership raises no presumptions of good moral character. It is pretty strong, but there is enough truth to frighten us into action. Let the books be purged, Reform or expel your immoral members."

Reform News.

The Indiana State Convention.

The fourth annual meeting of the Indiana State Anti-secret Christian Association met at West Newton, Ind., Dec. 27th, at 7 P. M., and was called to order by the Vice-president, Dr. S. L. Cook, and opened with devotional exercises; after which addresses were made by H. H. Hinman, State Agent for Illinois, Dr. S. L. Cook and Edmond Ronayne, when convention adjourned to meet at 9 o'clock next morning.

On Thursday morning convention met and spent nearly an hour in devotional exercises, after which committees were chosen on enrollment and on nominations. The latter reported as permanent officers:

President—Rev. W. P. McNary, Bloomington.

Treasurer—Peter Rich, Westfield.

Corresponding Secretary and Lecturer—Dr. S. L. Cook, Albion.

Recording Secretary—Rev. J. H. Teter, Westfield.

Executive Committee—Peter Rich, Rev. W. P. McNary, Rev. L. Fisher, Westfield; Rev. H. Teter, Westfield; and Rev. T. W. McCormick, Princeton. A Vice-president was chosen from each of the counties represented. Committees on Finance and on resolutions were then chosen, after which the convention listened to an able address from Rev. Geo. Richey of Ohio.

On Thursday evening a Masonic lodge was organized in due form by Past Master Edmond Ronayne and a candidate initiated, much to the surprise of the people, and the indignation of the Masons.

On Friday morning after a season of devotion the Committee on Finance reported recommending that $200 be raised by this convention for the State work, and remarks were made by brethren Hinman, Cook and McNary. A collection was taken up, after which the Committee on resolutions reported the following:

Whereas, The Gospel of Christ is the light and hope of the world; and

Whereas, The principles and practice of the secret orders, are in direct conflict with the Gospel in the following particulars:

1st. In requiring cormity to unknown obligations.

2d. In forbiding that candor and Christian simplicity enjoined by the Gospel; and

3d. In requiring the selfish concealment of what they affirm to be important truth; and

4th. In teaching that men may worship God without the intervention of the Lord Jesus Christ; therefore,

Resolved, That the great system of organized secrecy, of which Freemasonry is the fruitful parent, is in direct and deadly hostility to the dearest interests of every individual in the world.

Resolved, That the issue is fairly presented between the religion of the lodge and the religion of Christ and. we solemnly appeal to all, whether ministers or laymen, to renounce the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness nor handling the word of God deceitfully, but by the manifestation of the truth commending themselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God.

Resolved, That the purity of our government, whether in its legislative, judicial or executive departments, demands that all persons bound by an oath of partiality shall be excluded, and that in suits at law in which either party is a Mason and the other is not, it is the undoubted right of such non-Mason to challenge every Masonic juror and to demand a change of venue if the magistrate or judge is a Mason.

Resolved, That the success of this reform demands above all things the circulation of a Christian literature, which shall bear faithful testimony against organized secrecy; and we do hereby urge the extended circulation of the Christian Cynosure, and of all other papers which are faithfully warning the people of their danger.

Resolved, That we tender our sincere thanks to the Society of Friends in West Newton for the use of their house of worship and to the citizens for their generous hospitality.

The resolutions were taken up, discussed and adopted without dissent.

The convention instructed its executive committee to hold at least two meetings besides the regular annual meeting, one in the north and the other in the south part of the State.

In the evening Mr. E. Ronayne illustrated the sublime degree of Master Mason by the public initiation of a candidate in due form. It is due to Mr. Ronayne to say that these initiations are not mere expositions of Masonry, but that he faithfully points out the anti-Christian character of Masonry and urges on every one that the religion of Christ is the great object and duty of life.

The new year in Indiana commences under most favorable circumstances. The efficient agent, lecturer and secretary, Dr. S. L. Cook, is a workman who needs not to be ashamed. If the friends of the cause shall faithfully stand by him they may expect important results. The success of the convention was largely due to the faithful labors of Peter Rich, Chairman of the executive committee, and Preston Allen of West Newton.

Yours in the Lord,
H. H. Hinman.

Grand Lodge Masonry and the Reformed Episcopal Church.

In your 21st Dec. issue is an article headed "Bishop Fallows," telling of his having made a speech in favor of Masonry at Oriental Hall, Chicago. It occurred to me some time ago, when the meeting of the Reformed Episcopal church was held at Ottawa in Canada, that there might probably be a special reference thereto in having also the meeting of the Masonic Grand Lodge at same place and time, and that this great spider was trying to catch the newly winged clergymen? Could it have been the case that Fallows got the Bishopric through Masonic influence and that one of its conditions was, thus to act when required the stool pigeon into that trap by this Anti-christ? or was he previous to his elevation (or degradation as may be) an oath-bound devotee of that craft, and is he now merely showing his former zeal?

If "the deceivableness of unrighteousness or false philosophy" has any existence among men in these days one of its homes is Freemasonry, a system with no Christ in its first three degrees, and a distorted one therefore, in one or two of its branches; projected no doubt to guard its vain deceit from objections by Christians too careless or ignorant to try this spirit by the word of God. It is terrible to think of those men who shut their own eyes to the truth and blindly lead their followers into the ditch. In connection with the subject we congratulate our friends on the declarations of Moody against the lodge in the very face of Masonry on the platform. He fired arrows from the divine armory and they must prove effective, for God always accompanies his own truth. Man may not see his purpose when temporary ascendancy of error is permitted, but all shall be well even if not in "my way" nor "thy way."

Masonry is a leprosy which pervades the churches of nearly every name, and that fact assures us that such churches must either purify themselves or be exterminated as true churches of Christ, for their members cannot continue faithful to two masters. Masonry is as much an arrogant infallibility as Romanism. Both are equally despotic over the person in this country. Both equally incompatible with free government. Both equally destined to fall before the progress of true Christianity. The mental and moral blindness which pervades society on this subject had its parallel for years in the slavery which happily is no longer a disgrace to our country and our intelligence as Christians. May God strengthen such men as Moody in bearing testimony against this painted imposter who has been so successful in her seductions among the churches. Why not ask Bishop Cheney his views on this subject?

Mr. Moody's Lodge Critics.

Gardner. Ill., Dec. 30, 1876.

Editor Cynosure:—It will be a good idea for you to publish Mr. Moody's utterances against secret societies in tract form, and let them be scattered broadcast over our country. I like such utterances. I knew it was impossible for Mr. Moody to say less if he once opened his mouth on the subject. I would greatly like to thank him in the name of the Lord for speaking in this way. I read the answer of "a Minister" in the Tribune of the 18th inst., and if I have drawn a correct conclusion from the argument, it is this: He places Masonry in the same position with the Baptist, Methodist, and Presbyterian churches, as to their human organizations to spread the Gospel of Jesus Christ. If this is not his position, why does he speak of Mr Moody ignoring the peculiarities of each of the denominations, and getting them for the time being to stop trying to build up a sect, and all go to work jointly to get people converted to God. Because this is Mr. Moody's manner in reference to these denominations, this "minister" would have him act in the same way with reference to Masonry. Let me ask this "minister" if Masonry is engaged also in spreading the Christian religion, as are these denominations. It would seem that is his idea, seeing he would have the institution treated in the same way. I have always been taught that Masonry had a religion of its own, and that Jesus had nothing to do with the making of it. Will this "minister" tell me if I have been wrongly taught, and while his hand is in will he tell me and others where he gets out of the sayings of Jesus or his apostles the authority to form associations with the wicked, and where he gets his authority out of the Gospel for using oaths?

I once was with the Odd-fellows, and every step I took of advancement in the order it was with my hand on Jesus' Holy Book, and I repeated after men words that they put in my mouth, and scarcely would they get out of the lodge-room until some of them would go and fill themselves up with liquor, and others of them possessed of a thievish nature, and a large majority of them did nothing else but engage in the devil's work. I learned it to be such and got out from among them. Now, dear minister, are you not engaged in the devil's work when you form associations with wicked men, and make these associations binding with an oath. God hasten the day when we will be satisfied with the arrangements Jesus has made, and will be able to trust Jesus for protection, and not some human arrangement. I am sick of ministers who will come and preach for me to trust Jesus for my daily bread in all periods of my life while they go off and seek protection from the wicked.

B. F. Armitage.

The Right Way to enter the Lodge.

Dear Cynosure:—Can you allow a little of the personal history from the life of a man who once entered a real Masonic lodge, in a Christian and conscientious way? It was about the year 1836 when my father lived on his farm, nine miles west of Cleveland, O. That country was then new and ox teams were fashionable. A neighbor who was a Methodist minister was kindly allowed to ride by my father in his lumber wagon drawn by oxen. On their way, and just before they got to Cleveland the Masonic preacher told my father to wait patiently in the evening, for the Masons had some heavy stones to roll that night. Night came, and the lodge met; and one outsider at least was anxious to know what kind of stones they rolled; whether dead Hiram Abiff or something else. Besides, that outsider did not want to go home without the elder. So he waited one, two and three hours; but the third hour seemed very long, so oblivious of ceremony and to expedite matters, he opened the first and second doors, indifferent to Tyler and his sword, and looked for stones, or anything else to be seen. Presently the Methodist elder saw him and exclaimed, "Here is my friend Rice. Come up friend Rice and take a drink;" and they drank, perhaps wine; after which the elder hurried my father out as unceremoniously as he went in. Outside the lodge, the elder said, "There, I have saved your life." And going home that lonely night that M. E. elder urged his kind neighbor more than ever to join the Masons. In vain had the elder applied all his old arguments to win him over to the service of Baal; he had now a new reason, viz., intimidation: and the weary midnight hours were whiled away, chiefly by the elder, in applying this argument, "If you don't join the lodge, the Masons may kill you; it may be the means of saving your life." O Baal!—What an awful thing it was for an outsider, a cowan, a "profane" man, to enter a lodge without a cable-tow and a horrid oath!

But it was useless; I suppose the outsider thought he had not committed a crime worthy of death, and he could not see how he could be a better man by joining a band of cut-throats. The fate of Morgan was fresh in his mind, so fear could not move him from rectitude.

Behold the degradation of the professed minister of Christ, in league with and working for Satan; trying with such base arguments to induce an honest man to become a trickster; a conscientious man to sell his conscience; a free man to part with his freedom; and a Christian man to trade his Christ for Baal. It is not best to go into a lodge at all, but if you do, let Christ go with you. S. C. Rice.

Royal Arch Partnership.

Yates City, Ill., Dec. 19, '76.

Mr. Editor:—It is reported in Bernard's Light on Masonry that each Royal Arch Mason is obligated as follows: "And I furthermore promise and swear that should I find a companion Royal Arch Mason in difficulty I will espouse his cause and deliver him from his difficulty if in my power so to do whether he be right or wrong." Now I do not pretend to know whether Royal Arch Masons are so obligated, but I have my own opinion on the subject, and my opinion is founded on what I know of Blue Lodge Masonry, taken in connection with what I have heard from reliable sources of Royal Arch Masonry. I therefore propose to show a practical application of this principle, and leave your readers to judge whether there are any such obligations in Masonry.

Last winter there was an effort made in the circuit court of Knox county to break up the club-room system of selling intoxicating liquors as practiced in Galesburg. For that purpose the Grand Jury summoned Luther Becker, an alderman and a Royal Arch Mason, to appear before them and give evidence in regard to the unlawful selling of intoxicating liquor. He was asked if he had seen any intoxicating liquor sold during the last eighteen months contrary to law. He replied that if he had seen anything of the kind it was done by a partner of his and he was not bound to answer. The question and answer were then committed to writing, and the Grand Jury and the contumacious witness went before the court to receive a decision as to whether the witness should be compelled to answer. The question was argued by J. J. Tunnicliff, States Attorney, who is not a Mason, and James Mc Kenzie, ex-States Attorney, who is a Mason, and who acted as attorney for the contumacious witness. The court decided that as Mr. Becker was probably a member of some club he was not bound to answer, and the Grand Jury must procure their evidence from outside of said club.

Now it appears to me that under that kind of a decision, if a man commits an unlawful act it is only necessary for him to have some kind of a partnership arrangement with the person or persons who may happen to witness the unlawful act. It is not necessary that they should be partners in the commission of the unlawful act, but may be partners in any other business; for instance, they may be bound in a secret covenant to extricate each other from every difficulty, "right or wrong," and they would be partners and could avail themselves of that rule. Yours truly,

W. H. Robinson.

Our Mail.

Rev. A. L. Post, Montrose, Pa., writes: "I am engaged in a precious revival work some six miles from home."

E. R. Robinson, Mt. Palatine, Illinois, writes:

"We have a debate here on the 'Consistency of Freemasonry with a republican form of government.' The question is pushed upon us by the Masons."

We wish such a discussion could be held in every town in our country.

A friend in South Hadley, Mass., writes: "Both our Congregational ministers are active Masons, and so far as their influence is felt at all, it is for the lodge."

Rev. A. Pattison, Birmingham, writes: "I lived at the time of Morgan's abduction in the east part of Ohio, where his abduction and all the circumstances connected with it were spread all over the country and the lodges all abandoned. I believe that Freemasonry is one of the most corrupting institutions upon the face of the earth. It is even more so if possible than Roman Catholicism. True there is a similarity in many respects, but Freemasonry is doing more to sap the foundation of both church and state than even Catholicism, because more secret. The murderous, blasphemous oaths that they take binding their consciences as with fetters of iron, lead them to esteem their obligations to Masonry above all other obligations or laws enacted by either God or man. And when such is the case, and we know it, what confidence can be placed in such an institution? Let a man once become a Mason, and fall in love with it, and he is at once prepared to take advantage of his neighbor who is not a Mason. May the Lord hasten the downfall of such a wicked institution.

They sing songs in honor of Masonry, calling it Masonry divine. The titles that they give to some of their officers I consider blasphemy in the highest degree. Such for instance as Most Excellent Grand Worshipful Master; higher than the Savior of sinners claims to himself. Men who will receive such titles and delight to be called by such names, must be more blind, stupid and debauched in their minds than anything that I can possibly describe. Now I think you will be able to judge something of what I think of Masonry, and whether or not I appreciate the reading of the Cynosure. I am trying to get up a club of ten and think I will probably succeed."

Josiah Divoll, Topsham, Vt., writes:

"I am now about three score and ten, so that the grasshopper becomes a burden. I have been an anti-mason ever since Morgan's time. The Cynosure is doing a great and good work and the cause it advocates will triumph over all the works of darkness until the light of the glorious Gospel of the Son of God shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, and then all nations will submit themselves unto Him who is the Prince of the kings of the earth, and Governor among the nations, who said nothing in secret."

Asa Haskins, Irwin, Iowa, writes:

"I can only raise a club of one. I am living in a new settlement and the people are generally poor as well as myself; which is the reason I cannot get subscribers to the Cynosure. We have some good Anti-masons here and I give my Cynosures away after I read them and lend my books to my neighbors and try to scatter what light I can against the dark orders of secrecy."

Rev. Z. T. Petty, Oramel, N. Y., writes:

"I do not spare the secret orders in the pulpit. I am an Anti-mason of Morgan stamp My first vote was Anti masonic, and it may be the last. I am now sixty-eight years old and mean to die on the battle-field defending the right."

J. E. Wisman, Fairland, Ind., writes:

"I admire the Cynosure and distribute all the numbers as soon as read."

Amos Forlow, Hicksville, Ohio, writes:

"May the God of all mercy strengthen the hearts of all those brave men who are exposing their lives for Jesus and his cause."

Stephen Wright, Glen Falls, N. Y., writes:

"I hope Mr. Ronayne's life may be precious before God, and that he may live long to expose this foul conspiracy against God and man. I am glad Mr. Moody has uttered himself so fully again and before so large a convention. May God use him in our reform."

Rev. Sam'l Palmer, Woodstock, Conn., writes;

"I think through personal influence and that of the Cynosure one of my neighbors, Dea. Henry Hibbard, has seceded from Masonry after taking three degrees. Geo. Williams sent his name, and my brother Eld. Anthony Palmer, after taking fourteen degrees renounced Masonry. I recently visited Wm Lloyd Garrison at his home at Boston Highlands, and speaking of the Cynosure as a reform journal he said he had not seen it. I sent him a number as soon as I came home, with Woodward's late pamphlet. I think as we have so very few reformers of any backbone that a man who braved the slave power alone ought to be gratefully remembered. I found him as I expected opposed to all secret societies."

Daniel Varney, Fond du Lac, Wis., writes:

"I know of but one seceding Mason in this city and that is Elder Collins, of the United Brethren church. He has taken three degrees. Although it is substantially evident that the great Father is smiling on our cause, at the same time the times look dark The political as well as the spiritual elements have lost their equilibrium. The moral element is weak and stagnant. I had my schooling in the Society of Friends, but I never could get it out of my head that blood should be the price of blood. 'He that sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed,' and to deviate from this rule has the tendency to produce the greater amount of bloodshed. * * Masonry divine! a power behind the throne greater than the throne, it sets itself up as an angel of light and to it the throne has to bow. Alas! poor America; her shadow is draped in black; her fountains issue streams of running blood. It makes me sick at heart to see the foreshadowing of the signs of the times"

A. Calhoun, Constantine, Mich., writes:

"Freemasonry rules everything here. I am almost discouraged."

We say to this brother and all others who see wickedness in great power: "Be strong and of good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest."

Mrs. Mary R. J. Borden, West Unity, O., writes that her youngest son has learned the secret workings of the grange, Odd-fellowship and Masonry, from books so correctly that he has been asked by members of the craft how far he has been; they thus unintentionally admitting the books to be true. She adds:

"I am sixty-two years old; was once an Episcopalian, and once a Methodist Episcopal, and now a Quaker, and I think there are trees in each of these churches that profess to follow Christ that need digging around."

Azel Backus, Pittsford, Mich., writes:

"There are many professed Anti-masons in this community, but the fear of the old handmaid is so potent that the great majority dare hardly wink."

Philip Kribs, Lamartine, Pa., writes:

"Mr. Ronayne delivered three lectures here and worked the three first degrees in Masonry, which have astonished many of the people and given them much to talk about. May God speed him."

Perley Mitchell, Terre Haute, Indiana, writes:

"One Methodist minister here said to me that some of his church members were Masons, and taking the Cynosure would interfere with his bread and butter. This city is dreadfully filled up with secret societies and it will take some person who has more influence than I have to make any impression here. My age was eighty four years last October."

Friends of this cause who are not permitted to work in other ways can do much at the Throne of Grace. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

Zeba Smith, Montpelier, Vt., writes:

"There are many about here who appear to be glad to read the books and papers we lend them and say 'Thank you,' which is better than nothing."

We rejoice to have the Cynosure read. The more good it does the better.

Rev. Abner Orr, Cainsville, Mo., sends nine subscriptions and writes:

"My prospects are fair for twenty. * * I preached last night in the M. E Church on the evils of Masonry, and will deliver two lectures this week against those anti-Christian institutions How does that do for a pastor of the M E Church in Missouri? The reform is moving here with power."

Well done, dear brother. May God add his blessing by giving great increase to your labors.

Dr. T. C. Patterson, Spring Grove, Ill., writes:

"'Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?' Isaiah xxix. 15 To the last interrogation I answer, Edmond Ronayne for one, and I am happy to see that Mr Moody whose proclamations reach throughout the land has a pretty good idea of the works of darkness. I rejoice to know that there is a wonderful waking up on this subject in the minds and hearts of God's children. The leaven is at work. The Spirit often works silently Pray, brethren, for those self-sacrificing men engaged in this work."

Seth Davis, West Newton, Massachusetts, writes:

"I take a daily and seven weekly papers, but endeavor to find time to read yours. The shibboleth of King Hiram is the main passport to office in Newton."

The Sabbath School

LESSON III.—JAN. 21, 1877.—OMRI AND AHAB.

SCRIPTURE.—1 K. xvi 23 34. Commit 30-33; Primary Verse, 33.

23 In the thirty and first year of Asa, king of Judah, began Omri to reign over Israel, twelve years: six years reigned he in Tirzah.

24 And he bought the hill Samaria of Shemer for two talents of silver, and built on the hill, and called the name of the city which he built after the name of Shemer, owner of the hill, Samaria.

25 But Omri wrought evil in the eyes of the Lord, and did worse than all that were before him.

26 For he walked in all the way of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, and in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin to provoke the Lord God of Israel to anger with their vanities

27 Now the rest of the acts of Omri which he did, and his might that he showed, are they not written in the book of Chronicles of the kings of Israel?

28 So Omri slept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria: and Ahab, his son, reigned in his stead.

29 And in the thirty and eighth year of Asa king of Judah, began Ahab the son of Omri to reign over Israel in Samaria twenty and two years.

30 And Ahab, the son of Omri, did evil in the sight of the Lord above all that were before him.

31 And it came to pass as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, that he took to wife Jezebel, the daughter of Ethbaal, king of the Zidonians, and went and served Baal, and worshiped him.

32 And he reared up an altar for Baal in the house of Baal, which he had built in Samaria.

33 And Ahab made a grove; and Ahab did more to provoke the Lord God of Israel to anger than all the kings of Israel that were before him.

34 In his days did Hiel, the Bethelite, build Jericho: he laid the foundation thereof in Abiram, his firstborn, and set up the gates thereof in his youngest son Segub, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake by Joshua, the son of Nun.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JAN. 11, 1877.

THE PRESENT MONTH is a most important one for the Cynosure. The reason why may be seen now and from time to time in the Publisher's Department. It is a time to make some sacrifice for the reform if need be. Let no one who pretends to believe in the reform fail to do his duty by the paper.

JEROBOAM'S EXPERIMENT.

The lesson which will be studied generally next Sabbath is a continuation of the history of one of the greatest and most disastrous civil dissensions on record. The kingdom left by David had been won from his enemies until its border was at the Euphrates. It comprised a most fertile region lying in a situation of great commercial advantage, and its tribes were united by the strongest bonds of religion and national affinity. What should prevent its conquering vast territories as did Alexander and the Romans afterward. Foreign war only strengthened Israel; civil dissension began the work. "The cause was from the Lord" that Rehoboam refused the reforms demanded. It was not the Divine purpose that Israel should be politically great. The mission of the nation lay in another direction. So in visiting the house of David for Solomon's weak and wicked idolatry (1 Kings 11: 1-13) the future purposes of God for the bringing in of the Messiah were being wrought out.

Ten tribes had made the son of Nebat king, and Jeroboam, a wise politician, saw that their ground of withdrawal was insufficient to promise permanence to his reign. Something must be done to effectually draw the people away from their former allegiance. To unite their people and fix their loyalty sovereigns have made foreign war, or begun systems of internal improvement, or established museums and schools of art and science, or turned the channels of foreign trade through their borders. Jeroboam sought none of these. The Hebrew nation, though familiarized with these things by Solomon, had yet a different and more powerful object of national attraction. Their religious system, always wonderfully impressive from the lessons it taught of Divine power and holiness, had become magnificent under Solomon; and Jerusalem had become its seat. This was the great power of union among the tribes. How shall it be counteracted? How prevent the heart of the people from turning toward the loved Zion? How satisfy the sincere and pious souls, ease their consciences and answer their religious cravings? How wean the old warriors from their love of the house of David and make them forget the achievements of youth? If he can attach these classes to himself all is well, for no others will cause him trouble. "Whereupon," says the sacred history, "the King took counsel, and made two calves of gold, and said unto them, It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt."

Jeroboam would hardly have ventured to make this allusion to the history of the nation, and repeat the very words of Aaron in setting up the calf at Sinai, had not Solomon estranged the people from their God and caused them to forget his dealings with them by mixing up their religion with the abominations of Zidon, Moad and Ammon, polluting the glory of the temple itself by placing beside it the shrines of Ashtoreth, Chemosh and Milcom. Forty years of luxury and familiarity with the idolatry of their King gave Jeroboam an opportunity to unite the heart of one considerable class to a religious system which should be a counterfeit of their fathers', while it would seem to be the same worship that was paid to the powerful Being who led them through the Red Sea. The priests to administer the new rites must be men who would not scruple to become party to the fraud, and so a third class would be joined to him by giving them the posts of honor. The one place where they once brought their sacrifices was changed to two; one situated to draw the worshippers as far as possible from Jerusalem, the other on the border over against the sacred city to intercept the pious eye like a cloud before the sun.

The experiment was a success: and not even the astounding transactions about that Bethel altar could shake off the spell thrown over the consciences of the people by that false religion so closely and deceivingly framed after the true.

The sin of Jeroboam is one of the most startling chapters in a history which first clearly begins with the calf-worship of Aaron, and whose closing chapters we to-day are reading in the lodge. Neither the priest or the king ventured to set up a religion in direct visible opposition to the true. Theirs were mere human inventions set up alongside the true system and pretending to be part of it, like our modern "handmaid of religion." Jeroboam, who was a widow's son, was, moreover, a gentleman beside the "Hiram" of the lodge. His system was a stroke for political supremacy and unity. The lodge lives on a lie,—claiming to be needed because of the churches of Christ are neglecting duty. The papal innovations of the fourth and fifth centuries that brought in the Dark Ages had a better reason, for they were contrived to attract the pagan communities and join them to Christianity without conviction of sin or repentance for it.

But does the analogy stop here? Nay, but as surely as the bright-visaged man of God came down from Sinai and ground up their god for a bitter draught for the Hebrews; as that God-fearing king from the house of David, "Josiah by name," broke down the Bethel altar polluting it with the blood of its own priests and the bones of dead men; so shall this iniquity be destroyed utterly when He appeareth who shall come to be our Judge, who shall be the "swift witness against the sorcerers and against the adulterers, and against false swearers." "Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?"

"BIRDS OF A FEATHER."

Rev. O. B. Frothingham, the well known "liberal" Unitarian of New York, has furnished an instance of the working of the refined infidelity of to-day most strikingly analogous to Freemasonry. This man utterly repudiates the name of Christian, and is held to be one of the leaders in the so-called "radicalism," a name falsely given to rationalistic infidelity. Lately he conducted the exercises at the funeral of Mr. John F. Cleveland, a brother-in law of Horace Greeley, and long connected with him in the New York Tribune. During the service he read several passages fromthe Scriptures in the true Masonic style, but outraging common honesty by garbling and suppressing such allusions to Jesus Christ as were not palatable to his deistic taste. The New York Sun gives this account of it:

"It was in a murderous fashion that the Rev. O. B. Frothingham mutilated the Scriptures at the funeral to which we are referring. He left out of the selected passages every allusion to the central figure around which they are grouped. Then he read a few verses from the 15th chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians; but carefully refrained from reading a single one of the verses of the solemn chapter in which Jesus Christ is spoken of, or in any way alluded to. Still more destructive was his mutilation of that sublime portion of the Apocalypse in which the Seer of Patmos describes his vision of heaven. Thus where the multitude of the redeemed are represented as stauding before the Divine throne, and giving glory "unto the Lamb," Mr. Frothingham cast away the Lamb, without letting it be known that any Lamb was there. So again, a little further on in the same chapter, when one of the elders of heaven said unto the Apostle John, "These are they * * * * which have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," Mr. Frothingham committed the impropriety of stopping short with the word "white," leaving out the succeeding phrase, which is the characteristic portion of the heavenly elder's answer, and which contains the essential idea which the revelator desired to convey."

This is perfectly Masonic, and is another proof that the systems are both part of the religious falsehoods palmed off upon men by the "father of lies." Baal, Jupiter and the Masonic Grand Architect of the Universe are the creations of the human mind, linking the great system of lodge-worship with the licentiousness and paganism of centuries gone by. "They all shall perish, but thy word, O God, abideth forever."

THE LAST PAGE of this issue should be read by every worker.

—The whereabouts of our workers is always of interest. Secretary Stoddard has been clearing up the correspondence and office work accumulated during his two months' absence East. Last Sabbath he visited Morrison, Ill., to encourage the workers in that locality. State Agent Hinman returning from Indiana has responded to calls from Iowa. Past Master Ronayne is taking a few days needed rest while attending to correspondents. He will soon be out again. Elder Baird has been lecturing in Pennsylvania; a report will be ready for next week. Various items for our "Reform News" hold over till next issue.

—A daily prayer-meeting in the Carpenter building seems now on the eve of accomplishment. Although for months the matter has been under consideration there has seemed no way to begin. The wonderful effect of the Moody meetings on all classes in the city has stirred up some active spirits to do something for the great population of the west division of the city, and and open a meeting where many might be drawn to the Gospel from the saloons and haunts of vice. A notice was read in the noon-meeting in Farwell Hall on Saturday and a meeting held directly after to arrage for opening a daily prayer-meeting in the Carpenter building after the special meetings under Mr. Moody close. A number of earnest men have engaged to work for this object, and the work will not lag.

—Next week the remainder of the interesting conversation between our two Scotch friends will be printed. The setting forth of somewhat familiar facts in a new dress and idiom gives them a new interest.

—Letters from Prof. Sloane and Dr. McClurkiu on the position of the Reformed Presbyteriau church respecting the ballot have been received and will have attention in our next.

—Our readers will thank Prof. Whipple of Westfield for his report of the Illinois State Teachers Associatiou. That part giving the opinions of Messrs. Pickard, Edwards and Gregory on the Bible question is especially interesting and the ideas advanced eminently sensible and just.

—The Inter-Ocean (Republican) replies to the queries of a correspondent that Tilden is a Presbyterian, and is not a Freemason. "He has always been a strict temperance man from principle never indulging in the use even of wine."

Religious Intelligence.

—But for the postponement of communion service in the First Congregational church in this city one hundred and twenty would have been received on profession last Sabbath. The pastor, Dr. Goodwin, went to Rome, Pa., to preach the funeral sermon of Prof. P. P. Bliss, who was a member of the First church.

—Revival meetings are in progress at Gardner, Ill.; South Bend, Ind.; and Muscatine, Iowa.

—A great temperance revival is in progress in Pittsburgh such as has never before been witnessed there. Christ is the center of the wonderful movement and the noonday prayer meetings are eloquent with new testimonies to the power of divine grace.

—Rev. N. Wardner, general evangelist of the Wesleyan church, has been conducting a holiness convention at Hickory Corners, Mich., which was attended with "demonstration of the spirit and with power."

—The announcement of Mr. Moody's preaching daily during the week of prayer in Chicago was made last week. During the past week he has attended the noon prayer-meetings, generally leading them, and has delivered one or two sermons. On Friday afternoon he spoke on the coming of Christ. In the evening a memorial song service was held in memory of P. P. Bliss, ten or twelve thousand people attending. Many of Prof. Bliss' beautiful gospel songs were sung and the circumstances of their composition told by Mr. Moody.

—There are now in Japan about thirty Protestant missionaries, all Americans but two. The Presbyterian, Dutch Reformed, Congregational, Episcopal, Baptist, English Episcopal, and Methodist churches are represented. There are four ladies connected with the Woman's Union Missionary Society, two of whom are physicians. These are distributed in Tokio, Yokohama, Osaka, Nagasaki and Hakodati.

—Several Chicago gentlemen are considering the practicability of founding special lectureships in connection with the Baptist Theological Seminary in this city in view of the interest and value attaching to similar courses at Yale, Andover and elsewhere.

—Rev. S. K. Brobst, editor of an German evangelical Lutheran paper and other German publications, died lately at his home in Allentown, Pa. His paper took firm ground against secretism.

—As a mark of aboriginal progress truly encouraging it is reported that four Creek Indians are about to enter Wooster University, Ohio, and one Otterbein University. They are well dressed and intelligent gentlemen, expressing themselves hopefully on the condition and progress of the Creeks and other civilized Indians in the Indian Territory.

—The last Telescope notices the accession of 183 members to the churches of the United Brethren in Christ as the fruit of special religious meetings in various parts of the country.

—The Western Christian Advocate reports a brutal attack on two Methodist clergymen in South Carolina. Rev. Drs. Cooke and Webster, of the Methodist Episcopal church while on board the cars were assaulted and insulted by members of the rifle clubs. They were ordered to leave the State. Dr. Cooke's hat was taken off his head and slammed over his face, and it was by the greatest forbearance that they saved their lives.

—Rev. Nathan Callander, for some time preaching at Green Grove Luzerne Co., Pa., and a pillar of reform in northeastern Pennsylvania, has removed to Starrucca, Wayne county where he may be addressed.

—The new edition of "Gospel Songs," prepared by Bliss and Sankey, and which will be used in the meetings in Boston, will be published in a few days. It will contain many new hymns and songs by Mr. Bliss.

—Rev. R. F. Markham, the Superintendent of the schools and churches organized among the freedmen of Savannah, Ga., by the American Missionary Association spent the fall at his home in Wheaton, Ill. He has lately returned, and has begun a class in theology with prospect of great good from it.

—Germany's "ecclesiastical laws" are by no means a dead-letter yet. Bishop Brinkman and Dr. Giest have been sentenced to imprisonment, the former for one year and the latter two years, nominally for withholding public documents and embezzlement. The real offense was disobedience of the ecclesiastical laws. Two priests were also sentenced to short terms of imprisonment.

News of the Week.

—The Chicago Post Office sold $974,000 worth of stamps last year.

—The funeral of Commodore Vanderbilt took place in New York on Sunday. A large attendance and a studious avoidance of the customary funeral display were the chief characteristics of the solemnities.

—A money package containing nearly $12,000 was lost a week or more ago between the U. S. Treasury and a Chicago Bank. A clerk of the Treas. Department has been arrested for the crime.

—The transatlantic steamship Amerique, bound from Harve for New York, came ashore at Seabright, near Long Branch on the 7th. There were three cabin, fifty-one second and fourth class passengers, and 162 officers and crew on board, all of whom, with the exception of three of the crew, were saved.

—Young Bennett, proprietor of the New York Herald was cowhided in the street last week by a young man named May, whose sister he had engaged to marry. Reports of the cause of the affair are various, all springing from Bennett's drunkenness, which led him to insult the lady and, it it said, to twice fail to appear when the wedding party was ready. The result of the encounter was a duel fought in Delaware on Monday in which May was wounded.

—The new administrations of several States were inaugurated on Monday last. In Louisiana where both parties are organized for desperate work it was feared a bloody outbreak would follow. Both Packard, Republican, and Nichols, Democrat, were inaugurated by their respective partizans without any especial disturbance.

—Congregational investigation has found a tangled case in the Oregon electoral matter. A clear cause of bribery has been proved on Cronin the Democratic elector, and the funds have been traced to New York and the vicinity of Mr. Tilden.

—The Eastern question still presents many unsettled points. The position early this week was a threatening one. The Porte was understood to refuse all the reforms asked by the Conference and the Sultan was ready to lead a well organized army in person. The Russian war fever is diminishing before a severe and protracted financial stringency. It is yet uncertain whether there will be war, though hope of a peaceful settlement is yet strong.

The Home Circle.

True Wealth.

Some murmur, when the sky is clear
And wholly bright to view,
If one small speck of dark appear
In their great heaven of blue;
And some with thankful love are fill'd,
If but one streak of light—
One ray of God's good mercy—gild
The darkness of their night.

In palaces are hearts that ask,
In discontent and pride,
Why life is such a dreary task,
And all good things denied?
And hearts in poorest huts admire
How love has, in their aid—
Love that not ever seems to tire—
Such rich provision made.
—[Archbishop Trench.

Abiding in Holiness.

The lovely John Fletcher, rector of Madely, perhaps the most saintly man England has ever been privileged to cherish, tells us that five times he lost the sense of entire consecration and trust before he was "strengthened, established, settled," in that walk of unclouded communion, the mere reflections of which have cheered the hearts of Christians for generations.

We can do no otherwise than present to sinners the privilege of an instantaneous trust in the sacrifice of Christ with immediate pardon for their sins. Paul's conversion was not more sudden than theirs may be, and indeed instances of turning as quickly to God are familiar to us. And yet convicted sinners mostly are longer in finding peace in believing. So we can only present to a Christian who is walking in an experience of frequent failure and clouded communion, comparable to the wilderness journey (or "provocation," as it is repeatedly called), an immediate transfer into the Canaan land, his own by promise and gift; the land of victorious contest, of joy and of rest, where the howling wilderness is replaced by corn and wine, milk and honey, pomegranates and figs. And yet, in practice, many stumble, for a time, again and again, before they are securely settled in its borders, and in possession of its privileges.

It is true that the provisions of grace are ample, and the leader, our Joshua, One who never suffered any who put their trust in Him to be foiled in battle.

"Yet habits linger in the soul," and sometimes the long cherished habit of unbelief may assert itself now and then, and bring its inevitable results.

We say these things, not to lead any who have through grace given themselves to the Lord for a life of holy, complete, instantaneous, unvarying obedience and trust, to expect, or anticipate, or to count on failure; for the expectation is the prelude of its consummation. "Be it unto you according to your faith," is the uniform principle of the Bible, and our failures are also unto us according to any remaining unbelief of our hearts. We must and do give up any and every expectation of conscious failure, for nothing less would be faith in Him who is able to keep that which we have committed unto Him. Yet, should we in this victorious life, for a moment look at the waves, instead of at Him who rules them, the resulting failure must never make us continue to look away from, but instantly unto the conquering Lord. Instead of discouragement from failure, we should be pressed by it more closely to the heart of Jesus, sadder but wiser, and made more secure by the painful experience than ever before. Let the very same moment which brings the consciousness of trespass, bring also the sense of confession, pardon, and inward cleansing from the sin out of which the sinning sprung. (See 1 John i. 9.)

This instantaneousness of restoration is the divine method of security from repetition of failure. Look for a moment at the contrary course, as too often practiced by the Christian. He will early in the day, we will say, fall into trespass by an unguarded word or unsubdued temper. It brings a cloud between him and God. Instead of an instantaneous confession, and the immediate restoration of full communion, he remains under the cloud. Satan always has some dominion over an unhappy child of God, though he cannot conquer a rejoicing one. Soon this very consciousness of distance lays him open to a fresh failure, and by the time he comes to a season of special prayer, he is so far off that prayer is an effort, and coming to God a formal act, instead of the joyous, natural rebound of his soul. Immediate restoration from the first trespass, would have so fully brought again full communion, that no other failure would in all probability have ensued.

We should commence each day with a sense of cloudless fellowship with God, with no shade, not the faintest shadow, between our souls and the great Father of our spirits. Should any cloud intervene, its instantaneous removal will restore us to that "walk in the light," which involves uniform victory.

It was the homely saying of the most successful modern missionary on record, when asked the secret of his constant communion with God, and consequent power with men: "When I come to God to pray, I do not have to clear away a great heap of rubbish first. I never let it accumulate, and so I always live in the presence of the King."

Let no one, however, confound temptation with trespass. When a burglar breaks into my house and I turn him out, I am not a partner in his crime. When Satan injects a thought of his into my mind, which is repelled by my heart, it is not a trespass in me. We cannot be without temptations, and even the fierce, fiery darts of Satan; but they should bring no condemnation to our hearts, when we quench them "all" upon our "shield of faith."

Let it be remembered that, by the normal Christian life which we set before our readers, we do not mean to say that by faith we obtain a surplus stock or reserve of strength, victory, or holiness. It is merely that we have gained the attitude of trust, the courage of faith. We have learned to dare to trust the Lord, who has saved our souls from death, also to keep our feet from falling. We have come to expect continual victory, instead of frequent defeat. Once floating was impossible to us. Try as we would, we always sunk in the water, just as we expected to do. But the first moment in which we dared to trust the element, we were carried above its waves. Henceforth we throw ourselves on its surface with entire confidence. It is thus that we have learned to trust Christ to sustain us, and we find it easy on each fresh occasion to trust again. As a realized privilege, the principle of victory through faith may be new to us, long as we may have taught it to others. It is no wonder if, in the commencement of so new an experience, the believer should sometimes fail in the application of a divine principle so long ignored. Let us see to it that failure shall not be made continuous by want of immediate restoration, nor doubt that by exercise, "faith groweth exceedingly." Others are taught by our successes. We are taught by our own failures.—R. P. Smith.

What Does that Mean?

"What does that mean?" said a Christian disciple to an older brother, as he referred to a certain passage of Scripture. "What does it say?" was the answer. He read the passage over; "It says so and so." "Well, then, it means what it says." This first lesson in Scriptural exposition is one of the most important that can be learned. A preacher of the gospel once addressed a note to another minister, inquiring: "How do you interpret such and such passages?" The answer was about as follows:

"Dear sir: I do not interpret God's word; I believe it, and I advise you to do the same. Yours respectfully."

The first step towards the right understanding of God's word is to find out what it says. To ascertain, not merely the conventional and traditional sense of the passage to-day, but to go farther back, and ascertain by strict analysis the precise force of the language used. To do this it may be necessary to go beyond the English translation, and ascertain what is the historical sense of the inspired original words; to ascertain just how they were understood by those who delivered and those who heard them, in so far as they could then be understood. And when we have learned that, we have little to do but to believe the things spoken; and hold fast our faith, watching with all carefulness that the words thus rightly understood are correctly applied. The man who begins the work of interpreting the word of God with the disposition to insert his own meaning in it, and bend and sway passages to agree with his pre-conceptions, may as well lay down the book at once, believe what he pleases, and cease to tamper with that Word which God hath magnified above all his name. A farthing candle is of little use to see the sun's light, and the words of men, compared with the words of God, are less luminous even than that. It may be that we cannot see the fulness of God's meaning, but that is the fault of our eyes rather than of the book itself; and hence there is no prayer more appropriate than that of the Psalmist, "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." And when our eyes are thus opened, and our hearts imbued by the Holy Spirit by which those who wrote that Word were moved, then page after page grows radiant beneath our gaze, and that which before had seemed a tangled maze of darkness and obscurity, unfolds itself in light and glory, as a window into the eternal world,—a telescope through which we gaze afar to see the city of our God.

For we are to recollect that the final object of our faith is not the Scripture itself; it is he who hath spoken and is revealed in the Scripture. We do not look into a telescope expecting to see anything which is in it, but we look through it that we may see the distant glories of the skies; we look into it that we may see reflected there the celestial magnificence that beams far above us in the starry heavens. So God's word unfolds to us the future, revealing to us glories that "eye hath not seen;" prying into eternal things; opening before us the way of everlasting life; and cheering our eyes with the radiance of immortal hope. Let us believe what God says, and it will not be very difficult to understand what he means.—The Christian.

The Indian can be Christianized.

A writer in the North American Review says: "An Apache, a Comanche, or an Araphaho, neither respects nor comprehends assurances of fraternal love. The Government, whose emissaries caress but cheat them, is not likely to soothe him into ways of peace." To which I answer, the whole Indian population are not to be judged by a few desperate and wild criminals; and it is no wonder an Indian knows little of and respects less American love, since it is so much a stranger to him, and poor in quality at best. But then the policy to which such a sentiment would lead is a disgrace to Christian manhood, and a libel against the all perfect Creator. The Indian is not a beast, but a man, made out of the same materials, endowed with the same intellect and affections as his proud and erring oppressor, formed in the image of the eternal Jehovah, who "hath made of one blood all the nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." And that the sword is the only means of conquering the red man is alike contradictory of facts. Let it be borne in mind that the five following tribes have been civilized, and to a large extent have embraced Christianity, namely, the Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws and Chickasaws. These tribes have their schools, churches and newspapers, are busied in industrial pursuits, and are characterized by social influences and progressive and refined tastes. And then, exclusive of these five tribes, 25,000 church members, over 300 schools, with more than 10,000 pupils, is surely an evidence that the heart of an Indian may be touched by kindness and converted by grace. And in Christianity's train always comes a host of excellent traits, among which is that industry which tills the fields and constructs the dwelling preparatory to the enjoyment of domestic felicity. The number of acres of land under cultivation among the Indians is 367,213, and 44,000, or one-seventh of the whole population are engaged in agricultural pursuits; and to prove how quickly they yield to civilization and Christianity, and how much superior is the peace to the war policy, look at the statistics of one mission under the Society of Friends. In the central superintendency there are about 16,000 Indians, or 15 tribes; and in 1868 they only had five schools with 105 pupils, no Sabbath schools and no dwellings reported as owned and occupied. In 1875 there were 15 schools with 836 pupils, 15 Sabbath schools and 1020 dwellings owned and occupied, and in social and agricultural pursuits their advancement was equally great. The fact is that the Indian, before he has been contaminated by his white brother, is possessed of the noblest traits of our fallen humanity. He has a profound reverence for the Great Spirit, and feels the obligation to obey his laws. He is naturally an orator, and through ordinary application he comes to excel in a knowledge of letters and the arts. A recent writer, who speaks from observation, says, concerning the Indians: "Their progress in their studies was simply wonderful;" and he further adds that his soul was melted as he heard them sing the songs of Jesus.—Selected.

The mere lapse of years is not life's knowledge, truth, love, faith, goodness; alone can give vitality to the mechanism of existence.

He who would enlarge the field of human knowledge must stand upon the limits of the known before he can expect to enter the field of the unknown.

Children's Corner.

The First Snowfall.

The snow had begun in the gloaming,
And busil all the night
Had been heaping field and highway
Wit. a silence deep and white.

Every pine and fir and hemlock,
W re crml e too deep for an earl,
And the poorest twig on the elm-tree
Was ridged inch-deep with pearl.

From sheds, new-roofed with Carrara,
Came chanticleer's muffled crow;
The stiff r ils were softened to swan's down,
And still fluttered down the snow.

I stood and watched by the window
The noiseless work of the sky,
And the sudden flurry of snow-birds,
Like brown leaves whirling by.

I thought of a mound in sweet Auburn,
Where a little headstone stood—
How the flakes were fe l ing it gently,
As did robins the babes in the wood.

Up spoke our own little Mabel,
Saying: 'Father who makes it snow?"
And I told of the good All-Father,
Who cares for us all below.

Again I looked at the snowfall,
And thought of the leaden sky
That arched over our first great sorrow,
When that mound was heaped so high.

I remembered the gradual patience
That fell from that cloud like snow;
Flake by flake, healing and hiding
The scar of that deep-stabbed woe.

And again to the child I whispered,
"The snow that husheth all,
Darling, the merciful Father
Alone can make it fall"

Then with eyes that saw not I kissed her,
And she, kissing back, could not know
That my kiss was given to her sister,
Folded close under deepening snow.

Puzzle Drawer.

Albion, Ia., Jan. 1, 1877.

Mr. Editor:—I send you an answer to the enigma in the Cynosure of Dec. 28, "Independent Order of Odd-fellows;" with another for the "Children's Corner," if you think it worth publishing.

Yours respectfully,

Ruth H. Collins.

I am composed of 29 letters.
My 4, 3 nd 11 is a domestic animal.
My 1, 5 and 3 is a kind of vegetable.
My 7, 6 14 and 29 is a time of day.
My 12 9 and 21 is a cover for the head.
My 11, 18, 13, 8 and 25 is a wild animal.
My 13 24, 7, 16, 2 and 10 is a fowl.
My 22, 17 and 20 is a bird.
My 18, 14, 23 and 9 is a State in the Union.
My 19, 28, 27, 15 and 7 is a kind of fruit.
My whole is something all should have.

Alice Dickson, of Decatur, Illinois, also sends the correct answer. Ruth forgot to send the answer of her enigma. Perhaps she concludes the editor is wise enough to guess it at a glance; but it won't do to presume too much on the wisdom of editors; so always send the answer.

We want to suggest a puzzle for our little readers. In 1876 there were fifty-three Sabbaths. When will it occur again? and how many ways are there of finding out?

Origin of the Names of States.

Maine takes its name from the Province of Maine, in France, and was so called in compliment to the Queen of Charles I., Henrietta, its owner.

New Hampshire—first called Laconi—from Hampshire, England.

Vermont, from the Green mountains, (French verd mont).

Massachusetts, from the Indian language, signifying the country about the great hills.

Rhode Island, gets its name from the fancied resemblance of the island to that of Rhodes in the ancient Levant.

Connecticut's was Mohegan, spelled originally Quon-eh-ta-cut, signifying "a long river."

New York was so named as a compliment to the Duke of York, whose brother, Charles II., granted him that territory.

New Jersey was named by one of its original proprietors, Sir George Carter, after the island of Jersey in the British Channel, of which he was Governor.

Pennsylvania, as is generally known, takes its name from William Penn, and the word "Silvania," meaning woods.

Delaware derives its name from Thomas West, Lord De la Ware, Governor of Virginia.

Maryland receives its name from the Queen of Charles I., Henrietta Maria.

Virginia got its name from Queen Elizabeth, unmarried, or Virgin Queen.

The Carolinas were named in honor of Charles I., and Georgia in honor of Charles II.

Florida gets its name from Kasquas de Flores, or "Feast of the Flowers."

Alabama comes from a Greek word, signifying "the land of rest."

Louisiana was so named in honor of Louis XIV.

Mississippi derived its name from that of the great river, which is, in the Natchez tongue, "The Father of Waters."

Arkansas is derived from the Indian word Kansas, "smoky waters," with the French prefix of "ark"—a bow.

Tennessee is an Indian name, meaning "The river with the big bend."

Kentuckey also is an Indian name—"Kain-tuk-ee," signifying "at the head of the river."

Ohio is the Shawnee name for 'The beautiful river."

Michigan's name was derived from the lake, the Indian name for fish-weir, or trap, which the shape of the lake suggested.

Indiana's name came from that of the Indians.

Illinois' name is derived from the Indian word "Illini"—men—and the French affix "ois," making "Tribe of men."

Wisconsin's name is said to be the Indian name for a wild, rushing channel.

Missouri is also an Indian name for muddy, having reference to the muddiness of the Missouri river.

Kansas is an Indian word for smoky water.

Iowa signifies in the Indian language "The drowsy ones," and Minnesota "a cloudy water."

The Door was Shut.

Some time since a lady, leading two little boys, entered the Grand Central Depot, New York city, and bought tickets for a train waiting in the depot. The door leading from the waiting-room to the train was open, and passengers were hurrying through; but the lady lingered behind. At length the porter or doorkeeper, closed and locked the door and left. Seeing it closed, she hastened to it and tried to open it, but in vain. She beckoned to those standing on the platform to open it for her, but they were as unable to unlock the door as she was. Soon the train moved off, leaving her behind. Taking her little boys by the hand, she slowly sought a seat and sat down to weep. She had missed the train because she neglected to go when the door was open. Friends would be waiting to welcome her, but to be disappointed. She had told them that she was coming; she had made all preparations, but she waited until the door was shut.

Many who mean to go on a longer journey do as did this lady. They make up their minds to be Christians. They take all the steps necessary except one. They go to church; they study the Bible; they understand the plan of salvation; but when the door, Jesus Christ, is open, they do not pass through. They are all ready; only one thing more is needed—just to accept Christ; but they wait to do that one thing—Selected.

Home and Farm.

Horseshoes and Horseshoeing.—The following extracts from a recent article in Forest and Stream contain some interesting facts and useful practical suggestions: On an average, horses require shoeing once a month. The length of time a shoe will wear depends much on the kind of service a horse is doing, and on the kind of road he is daily traveling. A team horse in heavy draught does not wear out as many shoes as one used in a hack; quick motion grinds shoes down more rapidly than slow use. Some pavement is harder on shoes than an ordinary road, while the friction of a gravelly road wears them away rapidly. Wooden pavement is but a little saving to the wear and tear of shoes, for the grit and dust which become impacted in the interstices of the wooden block grind away shoes like the friction of an emery wheel. The hind shoes wear out first, and there is more strain and friction on them than on the forward shoes. It is impossible and improper for a horse to wear shoes more than six weeks, for the growth of the foot shortens the shoe, as well as changes the shape otherwise. The neglect will cause the shoe to encroach upon the soft textures of the foot and produce lameness.

There are but few practical mechanics who have sufficiently studied the foot of the horse. It is not enough to know the anatomy of the foot, and where to insert a nail not to cause pain, but the foot should be studied in the state of nature, before the mechanism of man has by artificial appliances distorted it. The shape of the hoof of the wild horse, or of one which has never been shod, should be taken as a model. The foot is then properly balanced, neither too long or too broad, but it has adjusted itself to nature, and the muscles and tendons are not strained by travel. Confinement and unskillful shoeing change the anatomical relations of the foot, and the best judgment of the mechanic is often taxed to correct the growing deformity—from unskillful shoeing. When a reasoning, skillful mechanic is found, the horse is safe in his hands, for he only preserves the normal shape of the hoof, and adjusts the shoe to protect it. The frog in the hoof of the horse is placed there for a particular purpose, and should not be cut by the shoer. If this is allowed, contraction and lameness will follow. The shape and weight of the shoe should be accommodated to the purposes for which they are designed. The track horse requires a shoe lighter and without corks, while the draught horse must have a heavy, broad shoe, with corks, to enable him to obtain foothold and travel with the least possible strain.

THE GOSPEL MEETINGS.

MR. MOODY'S SERMON ON THE RESURRECTION.

It was surprising how widely ignorant some folks are concerning the resurrection. It was only the soul or ghost of Jesus Christ they said that came out of the grave, while his body was consumed by worms. This notion was born of ignorance of God's Word, and the want of sound instruction. To Jesus his death and resurrection for sinful men were ever present. Matthew, xvi. 21, said: "From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples that he must go unto Jerusalem * * * and be killed and be raised again the third day;" again in Matthew xvii. 9, "And as they came down from the mountain Jesus charged them, saying, 'Tell the vision to no man until the Son of Man be risen again from the dead;'" again in Mark ix. 31, "He taught his disciples, and said unto them, 'The Son of Man is delivered into the hands of men and they shall kill him; and after that he is killed he shall rise the third day.'" In these passages, and all through the New Testament, the blessed doctrine of the resurrection was brought out. The apostles had two texts, the death and the resurrection of Jesus. The door hung on these two hinges; they were the chief corner-stones of our blessed religion. "The sign of the prophet Jonah" meant the resurrection. Just as Jonah had lain in the bowels of the great fish prepared by God, so the Son of Man had to be laid in the bosom of the earth for a season, only to come forth on the third day.

Did any of you ever think what gloom and darkness would settle down on this earth were it not for this sweet, comforting doctrine of the resurrection? Those men who would undermine it were like Samson; they would bring down the pillars on their own heads and be crushed in desolation and ruin. It would be the last drop of bitterness to lay away a dear companion and think that only worms and mold were his portion—that he should never rise again. But, glory to God, he should come forth again. Christ had said that death no longer had dominion. It was written in John: "I will raise him up at the last day," and again: "He that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live."

Christians should go back very, very often to that sweet scene of the riven sepulcher. Doubtless, just before, as the Lord still lay there in his cerements, Satan prowled about laughing in triumph. The Son of Man, he chuckled, could not escape him. Enoch and Elijah had managed to, but Christ was fast there in the tomb. Yes, there he lay, cold and stark in death, with a great stone sealing the tomb. But Sunday morning came. In a twinkling all was changed. Those stark limbs grew warm, those glazed eyes opened, the Son of Man burst the bars of death, and came out of the sepulcher. All earth and hell could not hold him there.

The Governor had appointed soldiers to watch the grave. A queer thing was noticeable—that Christ's enemies expected him to rise, while his own disciples had not understood his prophecies. A better thing was never done for Christianity than the posting of those sentinels before the sepulcher. Sleepless and watchful they walked up and down there for three days. As the angel rolled away the stone the soldiers trembled Christ was risen till he should and fell down as dead men and the earth shook.

Very early that morning the sun let down its rays into the sepulcher, but the Lord was not there. He had already burst forth from the jaws of death when two or three women came early to the tomb. Nicodemus had before brought a hundred pounds of spices, but these women were fetching still more spices; they loved nothing so much as to steal up and tend that dear body. But already, as they neared the spot, the stone was lying to one side; Christ their Lord, was gone. He had risen that "he might be the justifier of the ungodly." In terror they hastened from the sepulcher, and, after a few steps, coming across one walking in the early morning, they cried out in anguish that the Lord was taken away and they knew not where to find him. They thought the stranger they were talking to was the gardener, but directly he spoke the name Mary. How now the familiar voice fell on one of the women! She would have fallen again at the Master's feet and bathed them with tears and ointment if he had permitted her. But Jesus said, "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father; go, tell my disciples, and tell Peter."

The first to meet the Savior was Mary, and in all the Savior appeared eleven different times after his resurrection. The second time was when he saluted the women as they ran back to tell the disciples, and said to them: "All hail." And the third appearance was to Simon Peter. One could imagine how that first Sabbath morning Peter poured out his heart to the Lord, and sought his forgiveness, and found it.

Then the Lord appeard to the two disciples as they walked to Emmaus. They were talking about the suffering and death of Jesus as the stranger joined them, and how they listened and marveled as the stranger expounded to them the Scriptures, and how that Christ must needs die, and on the third day rise again. At the end of the journey one could see the two turn into the gate of a house and then insist that the stranger shall stop with them. Pretty soon they sat down to eat. Perhaps the stranger asked the blessing. In doing so, he used, may be, some old familiar sentence or form of words, and at once their eyes were opened—they were entertaining the Lord himself. They had entertained far better than angels unawares.

Filled with joy, they traveled back, eight miles, to Jerusalem that very night, to spread the news that Christ had indeed risen. They found the ten (Thomas being absent), and told them the whole story. And as they spake, once again, the fourth time, Jesus appeared. He rose right in their midst. They could scarcely believe their eyes. They thought it was his ghost, his spirit. He bade them look at him and touch him, and to still further reassure them, he called for a bit of fish and honey, and ate before them. It was indeed the very Christ in human form. But Thomas was not there. How many Thomases have been absent from prayer meetings where God has manifested his presence! Just the Wednesday night meeting that the Christian failed to attend might be the most glorious meeting of all and full of the blessed Spirit of power.

Thomas, when the other apostles told him, disbelieved this last appearance. He wouldn't believe that thrust his hand into the Lord's side. A good many Thomases are in the church now-a-days; they won't believe the word of God on the testimony of those who have had fellowship and communion with him. An entire week rolled by; a week of mingled doubts and expectancy, when once more, all of the eleven being gathered together, the Lord stood in their midst. He singled out the pale, quaking Thomas and told him to put forth his hand and put it in the wound from the spear. Thomas obeyed, and straightway the tears came trickling down his face, as he cried, "My Lord and my God." His doubts were all gone. That was the sixth time.

The next occasion was when the apostles had "gone fishing," and catching nothing, were accosted by the old, familiar voice on the shore. A great draught of fishes was then taken, and John said to Peter, "That is the Lord," and impetuous Peter jumped into the water to go to meet him. Then it was Christ asked Peter three times that touch-question, "Lovest thou me?" and then it was he told John to follow him. Just so Christians are to follow, not John, or any lesser leader, but "him."

The next appearance as near as could be found out, was to the five hundred disciples. After that he appeared to James. Paul says he appeared to James. Then lastly, he appeared again to the eleven disciples. He took them out of Jerusalem down the valley of Jehosaphat, over the brook Kedron, and over the Mount of Olivet, and came near Bethlehem, and there, perhaps near the cluster of olive trees, paused with them. Only his disciples were with him there. After his resurrection no uncircumcised eye saw him on earth. A man must see Christ on the cross before he can see his resurrection. And there the tenth time that he had been seen of men, he rose into heaven, where he had told them that it was expedient for them that he should go and prepare a place for them. His hands were stretched out in blessing as higher and higher he rose, till at last a cloud received him out of their sight, as, tiptoe, they stood gazing into heaven, and kept on gazing till the angelic announcement came that just so they should see this same Jesus come again from heaven. Then the apostles went back to Jerusalem and preached with joy the Lord's resurrection.

Blessed, blessed doctrine of the resurrection! Preachers deny themselves great joy in not preaching it more. The apostles had no more favorite theme than "Christ, the risen Christ, at the right hand of God." Paul knew and gloried in the glorious resurrection; as well he might, for even after the ascension the Lord appeared to him, "as one born out of due time." So now-a-days let all Christians rejoice in a risen Lord ascended to the throne of power and mercy. Angels had proclaimed his birth, and the same angels with even louder notes had proclaimed his resurrection. The song of the bursted sepulcher would be sweeter than the song of the morning stars. In just a little while all his faithful children would join in that song and be forever with their risen, ascended Lord in his glory.—Interocean.

MASONIC OATHS.

BY REV. A. L. POST.

[Concluded.]

But we are told that Protestants as well as Papists have their sacraments, which is but the Latin for oaths. Two and in many cases three of the seven sacrements claimed by Roman Catholics are also claimed by Protestant churches: Baptism, the Lord's Supper, and marriage are called sacraments. This, however, is a misnomer, in that they lack some of the most important elements of an oath. They embrace the most solemn of promises but no invocation of human or divine penalties, and no authority on the part of the churches to enforce them. The two former are simply ordinances confessing and eulogizing, very expressively, Jesus Christ as the only Lord and Saviour of men. As a civil institution marriage obligations have more the nature of oaths, and perhaps should be enforced with the penalty which the law attaches to perjury, but they are not. It follows that in the eye of the law, those obligations are not oaths.

In reply to all this it is said that the churches do exercise penal authority in the way of rebuke, suspension and expulsion. But it is denied that these are penalties. They are simply measures of discipline. Expulsion, the most doubtful of the three, may be the casting of the sinning one into the hands of "Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that he may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." Paul is good authority for this. But why, asks the objector, argue so strenuously against ecclesiastical oaths? Because, the answer is, an ignored truth requires it; and because, what may be termed special policy requires it. Surely if such oaths are allowed, Masonry will take advantage of them. What Papacy does in claiming and exercising the power of ecclesiastical oaths, her young sister, perhaps it should be said daughter, Masonry, will do when the opportune time comes. On the proper claim, that she is an organized religion, she may claim that she is a church, possessing church prerogatives. The "good enough religion" will be deemed potent enough to impose and enforce oaths, no matter how cut-throat, emboweling, or abhorent to Christianity they may be. The family quarrel between these homogeneous powers, in the policy of the Anti-Christ will be made up in time for the coming, if not already begun, Armageddon war. The example of Christ's churches should furnish them no aid. The consciences of men must be free from the trammels of all extrajudicial oaths, especially the horrible oaths of Masonry. So true policy, as well as right, calls for the argument against ecclesiastical oaths. The invalidity of church and Masonic oaths is established by the same argument.

In concluding upon the point of exclusive state right to administer and enforce oaths, let us suppose an illustrative case, based on the exercise of a church or lodge right to do the same thing:

A person has taken and violated the church or lodge oath. He has been tried, convicted of perjury, and is called upon to submit to the penalty. He refuses, and appeals to the State for protection. The State, true to itself, protects him. Its judiciary pronounces the oath to be extra-judicial, and therefore null and void. Its executive arm is raised and woe to the church or lodge that inflicts harm upon his person, property or reputation. Now how is this? Must we conclude that two divine rights are really in conflict? Certainly not. Rights never conflict. As to the church and state both being of divine ordination, they must have rights, but they may not conflict. In the case supposed, the state has exercised its legitimate right against wrong. Neither Masonry, which has neither divine origin nor rights, nor the church, which has both, may interfere with the legitimate powers of civil government. It is plain that the state, having the oath prerogative in full only, has the right to exercise it. It is enough that the things of Cæsar be rendered to Cæsar, and the things of God be rendered to God.

THE VALIDITY OF OATHS.

As to the validity of oaths, or when they are or are not binding in the general, little need be said. The commonest intellect can hardly fail to see that in order to their validity, they must be administered by persons duly authorized to administer them, and to persons competent, mentally and morally, and having the right to take them. Beyond this, what Mr. Paley in his "Moral Philosophy" says of oaths that are not binding, must suffice. He says (M. Ph. p. 83)—"Oaths are not binding when promises would not be." "A promise is not binding: 1st. Where the performance is impossible. 2nd. Where the performance is unlawful. 3rd. When they contradict a former promise. 4th. Where there is an error proceeding from the mistake or the misrepresentation of the promise." In the light of these considerations and qualifications it may not be difficult to decide as to the validity or binding force of Masonic oaths.

We will look at them briefly in their order.

1. Every Mason, who reflects, must know that, as a general thing if he gives to the oaths he is obliged to take, anything like a strict construction, the performance of its promise would be impossible. There can be no rational doubt on this point if he gives such construction in the light of the definition of promissory oaths taken from Wayland's Moral Science.

Then again, the promise to perform the oath as understood by the promisee, Masonry, instead of the promisor, the person taking the oath, must necessarily involve unnumbered impossibilities. Saying nothing, therefore, of the moral impossibilities of the case, nor of the fact that the oath is unauthorized, Masonic oaths require impossibilities, and therefore are not binding.

2 The performance of the Masonic oath is unlawful; not simply because the oath is unlawful. extrajudicial, but because it promises to inflict unlawful penalties. Every oath is of this kind. This will be seen in a few examples:

The oath of the Knight Templar requires the illustrious Knight to swear that should he ever know a companion to violate any essential part of his obligation he will use his most "decided endeavor" to bring such persons to the strict and most condign punishment agreeable to the rules and usages of our ancient fraternity; and this by pointing him out to the world as an unworthy and vicious vagabond, by opposing his interests, by deranging his business, by transferring his character after him wherever he may go, by exposing him to the contempt of the whole fraternity and the world, but of our illustrious order more especially, during his whole natural life;" all of which is unlawful as well as maliciously immoral.

The penalties attached to the oaths of the three degrees of Blue Lodge Masonry are in point, and enough to show their unlawfulness.

The Entered Apprentice swears, "Binding myself under no less a penalty than having my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by its roots, and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours."

The Fellow Craft swears, "Binding myself under no less penalty than that of having my left breast torn open, my heart plucked out and given as a prey to the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, my left breast torn open, my heart plucked out and placed on the highest pinnacle, there to be devoured by the vultures of the air."

The Master Mason swears, "Binding myself under no less penalty than that of having my body severed in twain in the midst, my bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes and the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven, so that no more trace or remembrance may be had of so vile and perjured a wretch as I should be," &c.

Masonic oaths, in their promises as to future conduct "contradict" former promises," or which is the same thing, prior obligations.

According to the passage quoted from Wayland's Moral Science on the "Interpretation of oaths," they are imposed for the safety of the party administering them, and are to be interpreted as he (the administrator) understands them. The person under oath has no right to make mental reservation, &c.

Masonic oaths are of this character as to future conduct. The neophite, or person becoming a Mason, swears to pursue a line of conduct prescribed by Masonry on the basis of Masonic knowledge and sense of right., and not on his own knowledge and sense of right. Here is a most palpable contradiction of a former obligation. It does not alter the wrong that Masonry may require him to do what is right. He must know for himself the right in his own judgment before he makes the promise. This no person becoming a Mason can know, for Masonry is sworn not to tell him.

One example of clear contradiction in the case of every Christian who is made a Mason. On becoming a Christian he made the most solemn and binding of promises to accept of Christ as his Saviour, and acknowledge him in all things, especially in divine worship. In becoming a Mason he finds himself required by an oath to kneel at a Christless altar, and to worship a Christless God. What shall he do? Shall he, hood-winked and cable-towed submit to the authority of this oath? Or shall he throw off these symbols of degradation and stand to his prior Christian promise and obligation? Which? If the Masonic oath is binding he must submit. But no, it is not. It violates or contradicts a former and really Christian promise and obligation

4. Masonic oaths are not binding by reason of the "mistakes" and misrepresentations of the promisee—Masonry, or the Masons who administer the oaths. These are to be found at every step from beginning to end of Masonry.

Take for instance the assurance that is given to all who take the oath, viz., "That there is nothing in Masonry that will in any way conflict with his politics or religion."

If he be a conscientious Christian man he will soon find that either by mistakes or misrepresentations. he has been deceived, both as to Masonic religion and Masonic politics, the one being anti-Christian, and the other being anti-Republican. Wherever he finds himself lodged, from entered Apprentice to Royal Arch degree, he finds Christ the only Saviour of lost men, dislodged. He finds at every step oath piled upon oath requiring him to prefer, in the very face of Scripture commands to do special good "to the household of faith," the infidel Mason, in his benefactions, to the Christian non-Mason. Masons first in church and state is Masonic obligation, whatever becomes of Christianity or republicanism.

Let these items of the Royal Arch oath witness to this point:

"I furthermore promise and swear that I will employ a companion Royal Arch Mason, in preference to any other person of equal qualifications."

"I furthermore promise and swear that I will assist a companion Royal Arch Mason when I see him engaged in any difficulty, and will espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same, whether he be right or wrong."

"I furthermore promise and swear that I will keep all the secrets of a companion Royal Arch Mason (when communicated to me, or I knowing them to be such) "without exceptions," in some chapters, and "murder and treason not excepted" in others.

In the oath of the sixth or "Excellent Master" degree prior to this, "Murder and treason," at the option of the oath taken, were excepted but as seen, here they are not. Masonic oaths are, therefore, invalid by reason of "mistakes" and "misrepresentations." Failing then, as the promises contained in Masonic oaths in all of the four particulars named, evidently do, when either one would invalidate them, and back of all, failing as those oaths do of valid administration to persons duly authorized to take them, the answer to the question propounded at the beginning is submitted as made good. Truly, Masonic oaths have no valid obligation or binding force, human or divine, at any Court, whether of law or morals. No conscience ought to be troubled or scrupulous about repudiating them at once and forever everywhere. On the other hand the conscience of every adhering Mason should be so oppressed with a sense of guilt that he could not rest until the oath and lodge are repudiated as inimical to Christianity and republicanism. In all kindness so the writer of this believes and expresses his convictions.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party.

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years. Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 16.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

The Work of the Hour.

TEN THOUSAND SUBSCRIBERS!

Shall we have them? Not without continued, wise and self-denying efforts on the part of the friends of this reform.

What is the prospect for such efforts? The feeling of many workers is well expressed by Wm. Oburn of Galion, O. "I would as soon almost, fall into a spell of sickness as see the Cynosure list fall back. I will do what I can to obtain more subscribers."

What results this earnest, determined feeling accomplishes is well illustrated by the following facts:

Dr. H. W. Marsh, Elmwood, Ill., sends a club of fifty-one subscriptions for a year. G. J. Shoemaker, Albion, Iowa, sends thirty-four subscriptions for a year. He writes: "It is with pleasure that I send you these subscriptions, and I only regret that I could not send you more. I think that I can swell this subscription up to forty by the first of February, and if it was not such hard times to get money I could get you sixty subscribers in this township. If all the townships, or even counties in the United States would do one-fourth as well you would soon have your twenty thousand."

Ira Green, Rossville, Ill., sends a club of thirteen for a year. Wm. S. Barnes, Farmer City, Ill., sends a club of eleven for a year. Rev. Wm. W. Blanchard, assisted by Rev. Wm. M. Richie, Paxton, Ill., a club of ten; J. M. Oxley, New Concord, O., a club of ten; Rev. J. S. Shock, Cromwell, Noble Co., Ind., a club of ten; N. Bourne, Cedar Rapids, Ia., a club of ten; E. B. Graham, Birmingham, Iowa, a club of ten, secured by Rev. A. Pattison; Wm. Worth, Starksboro, Vt., a club of ten. Nine clubs of ten or more for a year received last week! Benj. Ulsh, Silver Lake, Ind., sends the last part of the second club of ten sent by him this winter. J. C. Graham, Viola, Ill., sends a club of five for a year. Peter Howe, Wenona, Ill., cannot canvass, but pays for sending the paper to one person for a year and to eleven others for six months each.

H. W. Clark, Hebron, Ill., spent two days in this work and secured for it five dollars for the Cynosure. W. S. Barnes secured his club by one and one-half day's work and advancing the money for seven. He writes: "Times are hard and crops are short here and we have a large railroad tax to pay, or I could have got at least thirty or forty subscribers." If the circumstances are not more unfavorable in your locality will you do as well? Large clubs are not secured without effort. But you are willing to work for the overthrow of the secret orders. Can you do anything which will pay better than to put the Cynosure into one, two, five, ten or twenty different families every week for a year? Can you find a better time than the present for such work? Are not half of our readers at least able to secure a club of five or ten for the paper? One friend writes: "We are confident the picture (Signing the Declaration) will put the paper into many families that would not otherwise take it." Different people have to be reached in different ways, but they are hungering for the truth. One friend speaks of his desire to secure new subscriptions, but adds: "In consequence of the hard times, I am afraid I shall fail." Fear not. Be determined to succeed. Be very courageous and you cannot fail. Rev. Geo. Clark of Oberlin writes: "Let us not despond nor say as Israel did when their soul was discouraged because of the way. 'Why hast thou brought us up into this evil place?' The promised land is before us. The pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night lead us; and we shall enter in, or our children will, if our faith keeps step with our 'Captain of salvation.' He has called you of the Cynosure corps to be his color guard and carry his banner before the nation. He will give you courage, and patience and hope to the end."

The report of clubs made is enough to give us all joy. Let us be glad. Let us be strong in the Lord. Let us sow seed in the morning and on until evening. With patience, love and perseverance press the work of securing subscriptions—THE WORK OF THE HOUR.

We still have on hand about 8,000 of the 15,000 Cynosure Supplements of Dec. 14th. We will send these free to those who wish to use them expressly for canvassing purposes and to any one at 75 cts. per hundred, post-paid, or 50 cts. per hundred by express.

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK,

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On

TIN ROOFS

our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

BRICK WALLS.

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

TO ALL SECEDING MASONS.

BRETHREN:—I propose that we, who have been members of the Masonic order, meet in general convention in some centrally located city as early as practicable; that we hold our convention six successive days; that we work a degree of Masonry each day or evening, and that we issue from that convention an address to the American people. All I feel will see at once the propriety of this movement and I have no doubt will do everything in their power to make it a glorious success. Think the whole matter over, brethren, and communicate your views through the Cynosure. Now let us all work and work quickly else we may not have time to work at all.

Though not through grips, still fraternally yours. EDMOND RONAYNE.

THE KANSAS ASSOCIATION,

Opposed to Secret Societies, will hold its next semi-annual meeting at North Cedar, Jackson county, Kansas, in the Reformed Presbyterian Church, on Tuesday, Jan. 23, 1877, at two P. M., and will continue in session about two days. Several public addresses will be delivered by popular speakers, and important business is to be attended to. The friends of the cause are urged to be present, and the public generally are invited to attend. Free entertainment will be furnished to all who may attend from a distance.

J. DODDS, Secretary.

North Cedar is eight miles southeast of Holton, Jackson county and twenty-five miles due north of Topeka.

CENTRAL KANSAS ASSOCIATION.

The first regular meeting of this Association will be held in Good Will school house, two miles north of Sterling, Rice county, Kansas, February 9 10, 1877. A general invitation is extended to all friends of the cause.

G. W. KELLER, Pres.
WM L. HINSHAW, Sec'y.

LECTURERS:—I am on my last quarter for this conference year. I have concluded to enter the lecture field the coming year. I am ready to correspond with any corresponding committee of any State that may desire to secure a State Lecturer.

D. P. RATHBUN.

Mr. Ronayne will speak in the neighborhood of Litchfield, Michigan, on Monday evening, 23d inst. He will also work the degrees at Homer the 23d and 24th. Other friends desiring public expositions in Michigan will please write at once to C. B. Remington, Box 485, Fentonville, Michigan.

Topics of the Time.

Among the questions Congress is trying to settle is the disposition of eight million dollars surplus from the Geneva award, after all private claims have been paid. Our statesmen will hardly be bold enough to make another "salary grab" out of it. The House has been honorable enough to recommend the return of principal and interest of a fund taken unjustly from Japan several years ago.

A resolution providing for the amendment of the Constitution so as to prohibit the importation manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage anywhere within the United States and Territories, to take effect in the year 1900, has been brought before the House by Mr. Blair of New Hampshire. This is putting off the day of reform sufficiently for any good purpose truly. Before that year comes round the proposition will be a curiosity because of the delay; but in the present state of Congress and of politics generally on the temperance question, a revolution will be necessary to bring about such a reform no matter when.

The telegraph announces the death of Pres. Alexis Caswell, D. D., L. L. D., of Brown University, Providence, R. I. He graduated from that institution in 1822, and since 1828 he has held positions in the institution, occupying the chair of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy and of Astronomy, and later was chosen President in 1868, retiring voluntarily in 1872. At the Oberlin Convention in 1872 Pres. Caswell was elected Vice-President of the National Christian Association, and his unfavorable regard of the system of secret orders was well known among the Baptist churches of the country. Since his retirement from the Presidency of the University, he has lived quietly in Providence, beloved and respected by the whole city. The New York Tribune says of him:

"His erect figure, unbent by age, was one of the most familiar on the streets of the city. In every charitable movement he was foremost, with practical advice and generous aid. His genial bearing has for years been a constant benediction to a city which was crowded with his friends, but contained for him not a single enemy."

The Bennett May duel has proved as refractory to the telegraph and reporters as the Servian war. Whether from fear of arrest or from personal disgust at the upshot of it the principals have kept away from public view. The last news from them is that Bennett has sailed for Paris and May is wounded. It will be unfortunate if the courts of New York do not make an example of these reckless young men, not only for the vindication of the laws against dueling, but for public morals as well; the high social standing of the parties having thrown a coloring of heroism about their quarrel; and if such a view should become general and unshaken it would be disastrous indeed. It is likely, however, that the men will keep out of sight until the storm blows over, and nothing will be done till some other hot heads shoot in earnest and fall into the hands of an honest jndge.

An interesting account of the situation in the East and the causes underlying the Servian quarrel are given on the third page of this issue. Though of a seemingly partisan character, the argument is sustained by such men as John Bright of England whose recent speech on the Eastern question is thus commented on by the Christian Statesman:

Mr. John Bright, the well-known English Quaker, has made a remarkable statement in a speech which we have noticed in another column. Heretofore the force of his speeches against any particular war has been weakened by his well-known peace principles and his supposed hostility to all was. Now, however, he declares that although he never stands forward as the defender of such sanguinary struggles as the one imminent between Russia and Turkey, he knows not how in some cases they are to be avoided. Even arbitration is not of universal efficacy. There can be no arbitration, exclaims Mr. Bright, between such a government as that which reigns at Constantinople, and that suffering people of whom we have lately heard so much. And he avows that he has sometimes thought during the past year that Her Majesty's government, were rather too much in favor of peace; if not at any price, at least at a price which some of us would scarcely wish to pay for it. "They are willing to sacrifice the interests, the happiness and the freedom of millions of the Christian population of the Turkish Provinces, and I am afraid they would make another great sacrifice —namely, they would sacrifice the fair fame and the honor of this country in binding us in perpetual partnership with the worst and the foulest government known upon earth.

A BATTLE CRY.

Brothers! up to the breach,
For Christ's freedom and truth,
Let us act as we teach,
With the wisdom of age and the vigor of youth
Heed not their cannon balls,
Ask not who stands or falls,
Grasp the sword
Of the Lord,
And forward!

Brother! strong in faith
That "the right will come right,"
Never tremble at death,
Never think of thyself 'mid the roar of the fight.
Hark to the battle cry,
Sounding from yonder sky!
Grasp the sword
Of the Lord
And forward!

Brother! sing a loud psalm,
Our hope's not for moral!
After storm comes the calm,
After darkness and twilight breaks forth the new morn.
Let the mad foe get madder,
Never quail up the ladder!
Grasp the sword
Of the Lord,
And forward!

Brother! up to the breach,
For Christ's freedom and truth,
If we live we shall teach,
With the strong faith of age and the bright hope of Youth.
If we perish, then o'ers
Will ring the loud chorus:
Grasp the sword
Of the Lord,
And follow! —[Dr. McLeod.

[From the Glasgow Advocate for Dec.]

A CHAT ABOUT FREEMASONRY.

BY NONCONFORMIST.

Persons.—SANDY, a Freemason; JAMIE, an independent citizen.

Time—Monday after laying of the foundation stone of Glasgow Post Office.

[Concluded.]

JAMIE.—Yes, an' I've mair yet to say aboot yer oaths. They're dreadfu' oaths you Freemasons hae to tak'; for instance, to hae the throat cut across an' the tongue torn out by the roots. That's the very first an' simplest o' them a', an' only a pairt o't. Man, did ye never hear what a great statesman ance said aboot yer oaths? He said nae decent butcher wad cut up a pig in the way yer oaths provide for killin' a man for breakin' his Masonic vows. Noo, dae ye really think God is willin' to be a pairty to dae the dirty work o' men that bind themsel's thegither in sic a way?

SANDY.—I'm jist amazed listenin' to you. Whaur in a' the warl hae ye got a' that trumphery! Ye'er speakin' wonderfu' at random, an' I'm no very sure if I sud talk wi ye ony mair on the subjec'.

JAMIE.—Please yersel', Sandy, but as an honest man an' a Christian, dinna be a cooard.

SANDY.—Weel, man, ye stagger me. As for what ye've said aboot sweerin' to things ye ken naethin' aboot, I maun candidly acknowledge it's a thing that ne'er cost me a thocht, an' to tell the truth I wadna like to commit mysel' aff haun aboot ony o' the things ye hae been reierrin' to. I'll no mak' ony attempt noo to defend them, nor will I say that they can be defended.

JAMIE.—But besides what we hae been talkin' aboot, will ye tell me what richt ye hae to combine wi' ither men to form a secret society an' set your interests, as it were, again' ither people's.

SANDY.—Oh, I'm clear eneuch on that pint. The society's a freenly ane. It helps the puir an' the sick. an' I think it a gran' thing when a body gangs awa' frae hame to be able wi' a grip o' the haun to get a freen, or, it may be, save ane's life.

JAMIE.—Aye, Sandy, that's what yer Freemasonry comes to. It's a selfish thing frae first to last, an' the secrecy only helps the selfishness. Tell me, noo, wha is it that the Freemasons help? the puir an' the sick? aye, as a rule, only if they'er Freemasons, an' only then if they've paid up their dues.

SANDY.—An' what's wrang in that?

JAMIE.—A'richt, Sandy, in a society that pits furrit nae claims to be religious; but dinna ye pretend that ye are actuated by charity and brotherly love when ye gie help to the puir.

SANDY.—But ye were objectin' to the secrecy. Do ye no raither think that's a gran' thing? Jist think o't. Ye can gang to the Indies, or maybe to the Cannibal Islands, an' ye'll fin' Freemasons there, an' a grip o' the haun mak's ye a'richt.

JAMIE.—Aye, very gran', Sandy; an' as ye a' hae got a religious turn, dootless ye wad enjoy haudin a prayer meetin' wi' sic new fan' freens. But tell me noo candidly, what richt hae ye an' ithers to combine into a secret company, wi' secret oaths an' forms an' objects. It looks like as if something war wrang. It's no very like Christianity onyway. Christ said to his disciples, 'Ye are the light of the world," an' "I ever spoke openly in the synagogues, and in secret have I said nothing." Noo, there's no muckle Freemasonry there. An' I'll tell ye what it is, a' secret societies sud be put doon by every richt government. Look at Ireland, for instance, it's owrerun wi' Ribbonism, an' what's the consequence? If a Ribbonman is brocht into a coort o' justice they aften canna get a conviction again' him, the case has to tried owre an' owre again, an' at last the man gets free, jist' cause the men o' his secret society'll stan' by him to the last. It's the same wi' Freemasonry in the States o' America. Richt weel ye ken they sweer to stan' by ane anither, an' in some degrees they swecr to stan' by ane anither richt or wrang.

SANDY.—Wi' regard to that aspec' o' the thing I'm no gaun to defend it, but there's something to be said on the ither side. Ye ken as weel as I dae that individuals an' families, an' even Church coorts an' Cabinets, hae a' their secrets.

JAMIE.—Quite true a' that, but there's a tremendous difference atween them an' you. Individuals an' families hae their secrets, but then they're private affairs wi' which the general public hae nae concern whatever. But Freemasonry's a public society. It seeks public patronage, an' secrecy's sic an important pairt o't that were the secrecy taen oot o't it wadna continue to exist ava'. As for Church coorts, ye ken brawly that when they meet in secret it's because there's something wrang that's no very creditable to somebody or ither. An' as for Cabinets, the less said aboot them the better, for everybody kens what complaints hae been wi' Disraeli an' Derby up an' doon the hale kintra concernin' thae Turks, jist 'cause they keepit things to themsels an' wadna let the people ken as to whether they were managin' things richt or wrang. Ah na, Sandy, it ill becomes a Scotsman to argue in behauf o' secrecy.

SANDY.—Man, Jamie, you're turnin' the hale subject upside doon. I think if my wife heard ye, she wad think ye the maist sensible man she had met for mony a day.

JAMIE.—An' nae wunner. If I was a wife to a Freemason I wad gie him peace neither nicht nor day till I wad get him disconneckit wi't. Jist think o't, it separates husban' an' wife by a life-lang oath o' silence, and that in matters concernin' them baith, for, min' ye, the wife's concerned in payin' the "dues" as weel as the man. The man leaves his ain fireside an' gangs oot to a meetin' o' the lodge, gangs hame again after a' is owre, an' he daurna tell his wife a syllable aboot what he has been daein'. He'll tak' his wife to the kirk an' the market wi' him, to the lecture an' the concert, or gin she canna gang wi' him he can tell her what he heard an' saw when he was there, but when he gangs to the lodge he an' his wife maun pairt company. Dae ye no ken that the Bible likens the union atween Christ an' his people to marriage, but yer Freemasonry knocks the bottom oot o' a' that.

SANDY.—Weel noo, Jamie, after a' ye've said—an' I was amaist to say it was a' true—dae ye no think sic a society may dae some guid? Man, jist think o't. Young men jine it, an' it brings them acquaintances an' helps them get on in the warl; an' seein' the Bible's read, dae ye no think ye could owrelook the rest an' encourage young folks to jine.

JAMIE.—Sandy, I'll answer ye fairly, an' I say, No. As for folks gettin' on in the warl, I believe in the old sayin', "a free field an' nae favour." Gin a young man has pluck an' manliness an' common sense he'll get on, nae fear o' that, if there's fair play. I'd be sorry to see ony young freen o' mine leanin' on sic a crutch. Na, na, let oor young fellows "set a stoot heart to a stay brae," let them begin life on richt principles an' there's nae fear o' them. Ye spoke aboot the Bible readin' in the lodge, let me tell you this, Sandy, oor young folk dinna need to gang to a lodge to read their Bibles an' learn the principles of morality, or religion either, the kirk's God's institution for that. No to gang aboot the bush Sandy, I may jist tell ye, I hae been in the lodge mysel'. I could gie ye the grips an' pass-words for a' the degrees o' the lodge, for I was made a Mason lang syne, when I was a young man, an' thocht little aboot it. An' I can tell ye this, it's religion's a mockery, it's readin' o' the Bible that ye brag sae muckle aboot is jist a degradin' o' the Word o' God an'. it's morality. I think Freemasonry's a' the waur for it's pretendin' to be religious, for it actually steps in an' wad fain tak' the place o' religion. It preten's by it's ain secret mysteries to prepare Freemasons for the gran' lodge aboon, that's heaven.

SANDY.—I dinna ken very weel what to think o' ye. I wonder'd by your talk whaur ye got yer information, an' I jaloused ye had been ploughin' wi' some heifer or anither. An' ye hae been a Freemason! Dae ye think, noo, it's richt for ye to tell thae things to ithers an' break your oath?

JAMIE.—Sandy, I ken what Freemasonry is, that frae first to last it's dishonorin' to God an' ensnarin' to man, an' kennin' that, nae oath sud keep me frae warnin' ithers. Am I richt?

SANDY.—To be open wi' ye, Jamie, as ye hae been open wi' me, I maun confess that I'm no jist satisfied wi't mysel'. The mair I've seen o' the business I've liked it the less. An' the things ye hae been sayin' hae gien me a clearer view o' things. I maun confess ye seem to hae a richt haud o' the hale subject.

JAMIE.—Yes, an' tak' you hame Freemasonry an' compare it wi' the Bible, an' ye'll fin' I'm richt. If you gie up your connection wi't ye'll dootless be mark'd, an' Freemasons 'll gie the lee to everything ye say aboot the society. I've met wi' that mysel' afore noo. An' they canna harm ye. They disposed o' puir Morgan in Niagara aboot fifty years' syne, but they got a fricht in the States then that they'll no forget for a while. Besides, in oor kintra a man need never fear as lang as he tell's the truth.

SANDY.—Gi'e me yer haun'. I'll gae back nae mair to their meetin's, and there'll be naebody better pleased than my ain gudewife.

SOUTHWICK'S "SOLEMN WARNING."

EDITOR OF THE CYNOSURE:— An old work, which furnished me some amusement and instruction when a boy of fourteen, has recently fallen into my hands, and been re-read with renewed interest. It is Solomon Southwick's "SOLEMN WARNING," addresed to the young men of the United States, which made its appearance in the fall of 1827, about a year after the abduction and murder of Morgan, and when the results of investigations in regard to his fate had begun to be pretty widely known. It gives the light and counsel of one who had read much, seen much of mankind, had had large experience in public affairs, had surveyed all the heigths of political elevation and tested the extremes of prosperity and adversity, and was well qualified to act as a monitor for the young and inexperienced. The book had an immense circulation on its first appearance, and I have no doubt but that thousands of young men, admonished by Southwick's experience and warnings, as set forth its pages, were kept from the steps which allured to the lodge-room, and which led down to the gates of hell. He had taken but four degrees, and was soon disgusted with the frivolous character of the Masonic secrets and deeply shocked by their wickedness. The book shows him to have had, at that time both a perfect knowledge of the hollowness of the "old handmaid's" pretensions, and ample experience of the depth and malignity of her wiles. In his own paper, the National Observer, he had begun the war six or eight months before the issue of his book. The press, except his, in eastern New York, was dumb. He says in his preface: "Never, never, in any clime or age, has the press been so vilely, so infamously, so wickedly prostituted as it has been in this case. * * * It became the organ of falsehood, of mystery and corruption; the vile instrument of a barborous and blood-stained faction; the polluted engine of treachery, tyranny and oppression."

I have been so impressed with the value of Southwick's services to the generation in which he lived, that I have felt impelled to introduce him to the readers of the Cynosure through a few extracts from the "Solemn Warning," one of the publications that emanated from his pen. I am sure they will be pleased to read them, and am not certain but that the publication of the volume, either in a book, or in successive numbers of your paper, would be advisable. The extracts I send can be published in one number, or conveniently divided into three. Those I send are not the most "solemn" in the book. Southwick recognized ridicule as a legitimate weapon, sometimes, and he found Masonry a good subject for this. In the first extract which follows he gives the secret history of the way in which village lodges ordinarily came into existence in New England and New York, in his day. Is there any correspondence, in this regard, between the old times and the new? Wherever and whenever a village sprang up and a church was established, he adds:

"The next thing, if not in order of time the first, which though a convenience to the traveller, too often becomes a nuisance to the neighborhood is the erection of a tavern. And what next? The village does not always grow rapidly—the travelling is not always good, and there are sometimes but few travellers when it is good; in proportion, too, as the church flourishes the tavern fades. The landlord finds his custom not quite equal to his wants, much less his wishes. Something must be done—something hit upon—and our countrymen are not backward at contrivance—to increase his custom and his coffers, to diffuse in larger quantities the stimulus which fills his kegs and decanters and to pocket in return the loose change of the wayfaring man, or the fool who heeds not the warning voice of the prophet: "Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink."

Our wary landlord, therefore, if he be not a Freemason—if he has never known the mysterious sensations that seize the young and ardent "candidate," when he learns to lisp those sublime cabalistics, JACHIN and BOAZ—immediately determines to become a member of the lambskin fraternity. Full of the matter, he loses no time, in repairing to the next village or city, or wherever there is a Noodle Manufactory established, and gets himself initiated into the sublime mysteries of the ancient and honorable craft. To do justice to his head, however, he does not mean to become a Noodle himself, but to learn the art of making Noodles of others. The bright eye, the dazzling sun, the milder crescent and the seven little twinkling stars are now seen to decorate his sign-board, which almost feels amazed at finding itself the bearer of so many gilded and mysterious images, and which are held out as so many monitors to the traveller, or villager, that with them dwells a man whose heart is so generous and noble that he will feast them on the smiles of benevolence as well as the sweets of small beer, brandy and beef-steaks.

Brother Lambskin is now prepared to give the sign-manuel at the tip of his chin, and the mysterious grip; and to seduce those who are so wise as to know how to answer his signals to rise up early in the morning to buy his strong drink. But as there may not be enough of these asses or cattle in the village or vicinity to make the speculation equal to his benevolent design in joining the fraternity, he soon recollects that he has a garret entirely vacant, inhabited only now and then by a few erratic rats and mice, and perhaps a half-starved cat (watching for her prey in the upper story, as her master watches for his in the story below) not one of which has ever turned its attention to the mysteries of Masonry, but which are now in a fair way to meet on a level with the sons of light; for our ingenious publican has hit upon the expedient of turning his empty garret into a lodge-room, getting a charter from the Grand Lodge, that focus of iniquity and corruption, and himself, with two or three of his sly associates, constituted Master Wardens and Treasurer, and the last, not the least important object, but rather one of "the chief keys of the concern." He now begins to realize the fruition of his golden dreams in joining the order. He goes to work, in good earnest, at making Freemasons, as well as retailing julips—and every "blind candidate" that he leads to the altar, adds one to his julip customers!

Thus the young and heedless villager is first lured to the door, whose steps lead down to the gates of hell. Industrious mechanics are seduced from their workshops—the farmer in the vicinity is taught to think more of prying into the secrets of the lodge than of ploughing his land—wives are deserted by their husbands at a time when their society is most expected at the domestic fireside—and children are left to go ragged and without sustenance or education, that our Grand Village Necromancer, our wholesale and retail dealer in mystery, moonshine and mixed liquors may revel this and wax fat and flourish upon all folly and wickedness of his own creation. And thus, when compared with the truly useful and indispensable village church, the old saw is completely realized:—

"Wherever God erects a house of prayer,
The devil comes, and builds a temple there."

Our hero is now in the full tide of successful experiment; and the sun, moon and twinkling stars on his sign-board are but faint emblems of his aspiring hopes. With a troop of noodles at his heels, he emerges from the bar-room to the bench, as a justice of the peace, or a county judge; or leaps over the head of many a better man into the halls of legislation, as a law-giver to the people!" Wolves in Sheep's Clothing.

BY REV. H. W. HAMPE.

Christ says, "Beware of false prophets which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves; ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles"? Matt. vii. 15-16. That Christ lays down here a plain rule for his church under the gospel dispensation by which false teachers are to be known from true ones is evident.

Benson in his comment on these passages says, "Who in their preaching describe a broad way to heaven. * * All are false prophets who teach any other way than that which our Lord hath here marked out; who come to you in sheep's clothing with a form of godliness and fair professions of love, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Not feeding but destroying souls; feeding themselves by the destruction of the flock."

Doddrige says, "A wolf in sheep's clothing is grown into a proverb, for a wicked man that makes a great profession of religion, yet cannot dissemble so well as not to be discovered by attentive observation."

"Ye shall know them by their fruits; a short plain rule," says Wesley "whereby to know true from false teachers (prophets); and one that may be applied by people of the meanest capacity, who are not accustomed to deep reasoning. True prophets convert sinners to God; or at least confirm and strengthen those who are converted. False prophets do not. They also are false prophets who though they may declare the very truth, and that clearly and fully, yet do not adorn, but bring a reproach upon it by their unholy conduct; and therefore are not sent of God by his Spirit, but come in their own name to declare God's word, hence this is their grand mark; they do not turn men from the power of Satan unto God."

These marks are often seen in the ministry in our days, among the different denominations, especially among the adherents of the lodge and their abettors. Instead of seeking the enduing power of the Holy Spirit, they seek the applause of the ungodly; and instead of aiding and strengthening the hands of the godly and true souls in the church whose spirit is grieved on account of those things, and who are beseiging the throne of grace on account of those abominations in the churches, they cast reproach upon them by shunning their society, and expelling them from the church of their choice, for no other reason than their opposition to those things.

A case among many lays just at hand. Near New Lebanon, Pa., a certain preacher while in conversation on secret societies, said he never belonged to any secret order, except the Good Templars. This was shortly before conference. After that meeting, at his first appointment at that place he defined his position on secret societies and declared publicly from the stand that he was a Mason of nineteen degrees; and that it was nobody's business where he went to enjoy himself. After the close of the meeting a pious sister stepped up to the reverend gentleman and said, "Brother, you are not fit to preach the Gospel. We are starving under your preaching." Which was literally true. For these words the sister was cited to a mock church trial; the reverend gentleman being the accuser and judge of the case at the same time; of course under these circumstances the sister was expelled from the church. The case came up in the form of an appeal at the next quarterly meeting. The presiding elder who was also a Mason cited the case back for another trial, at which of course the verdict of the first trial was sustained, and the godly sister declared out of the church. That sister did no more than her duty by rebuking such a man openly; because he had publicly made himself a liar. "And such a one should be rebuked openly before all," and was not fit to preach the Gospel of Christ without repentance.

Yet presiding elders pat such men on the shoulder, and bishops sanction their evil deeds by promoting them in their appointments, and thus conspiring against the humble ones of Christ, and those who warn the churches against these things are held up to the church as evil doers and church slanderers. O ye who thus seek the applause of man, how can you, in this state meet the Master when he comes? Christ says of such in his time, "O ye generation of vipers, how will ye escape the damnation of hell?" And Wesley says of such, "When they go down to the pit, hell will be moved from beneath to meet them at their coming." O may they repent and turn from Baalam's counsel. For such, God declares in his word, there is no salvation without repentance.

"And ye who suffer for your testimony against these abominations, rejoice that ye are counted worthy to suffer for righteousness sake; for you must expect these things." Put on therefore "the whole armor of God," (Eph. vi. 11-16) that you may be able to withstand in those fiery trials which you suffer from those of your own spiritual household.

This abominable lodge system cannot be overcome by mere side hints and pattings on the head as some would fain try to believe, but by faithfully wielding manfully the spiritual weapons of our warfare "which are mighty through God to the pulling down of the strong holds of Satan." Old Gen. Blucher commanded his body guards, when Napoleon Bonaparte at the memorable second battle of Leipsic sent as a last resort a corps of French grendaers heavily harnessed and covered with their grey woolen mantles in solid phalanx against the Prussian center, "Meine kinder, das sind verdeckte; hauet sie durch die fressen." (My boys, strike them across their jaws, for these are covered ones). So it is with lodgemen and their abettors in state and church, they are the muffled ones of Satan in sheep's clothing, and they must be boldly confronted with the sword of truth as it is in Christ with all long suffering and love.

The "Eastern Question"—Mohammedanism.

What is called the "Eastern Question" is threatening, and includes in it much more than meets the eye. It is an old sore, and, like a cancer, is incurable except by utter extirpation. It is really the Mohammedan question. It is a question whether a barbarous and an unimprovable race shall be allowed to arrest the progress of Christianity and civilization in a large part of the earth. Politics have failed to settle the question, and will always fail, because politics have no religious principles, no moral standard, and no foresight of the future. The world don't turn upon the balance of power between the "Great Powers" of Europe. While they have been balancing power and endeavoring to maintain the old and rotten systems of monarchy and aristocracy, the great working masses of mankind have been moving on. While they were making the Holy Alliance, and restoring the Bourbons, and fighting the absurd Crimean war, and trying to maintain the Pope, the Republic of the United States was advancing with gigantic strides. Bourbon Italy was restored to unity and freedom; toleration was established where the Inquisition once prevailed; the Papacy was confined to its spiritual dominion, and now the working masses are gaining light, and rights, and intelligence. The grand system of Christian civilization was advancing on all the lines of progress, material, political and religious. Yet all this time the "Great Powers" did not understand there was any progress. They fought for Crimean war upon the absurd idea that Turkey could be maintained. They are now negotiating to maintain the "False Prophet" in his place. They are endeavoring to uphold the worst government and the most oppressive despotism upon the earth. All this is upon the idea of maintaining the balance of power. Just as if Russia or Germany were to be arrested in progress any more than the United States. Where was the balance of power when the Germans marched into Paris? Where is the balance of power when Russia has seized the Amotox river, and has her fleets in the sea of Ohkotsh? It is impossible to suppress the growth of race and of empire, any more than of ideas and of freedom, by any system of artificial politics. The Turk "encamped" in Europe, said John Randolph. So did the Hun—the original Magyar—but the practical difference between them was very great. The Turk adhered with fanatical enthusiasm to the religion of the False Prophet, while the Magyar became Christian, and was swallowed up in the European nations. The source and present cause of all the difficulties of the Eastern Question is in the difference of religion. Let us see then what Mohammedanism is. Propagandism was, as in Christianity, the essential element of Mohammedan success. But the mode of propagandism made it at once the terror of the earth, and its own final failure. The propagandism of Mohammed was by the sword. There were many virtues inculcated, and to this day the traveler will say that there is more honesty and temperance in Constantinople than there is here. But the essential idea of its growth was conquest. To the soldier Mohammed promised all the joys of Paradise. Fallen upon the field, his soul passed to the elysian of the blest, bright houris received him, his brow was crowned with vermillion hues, and the cup of nectar pressed to his lips. The fiery Arabian received such a religion with enthusiasm, and moved with resistless force to successful conquest. Arabia, Armenia, Palestine, Northern Africa, and a large part of Europe fell before the Mohammedan. From the Euphrates to the Danube, from Jerusalem to Babylon, from Constantinople to Cordova, the Turk ruled supreme. Arrested at last near the walls of Vienna, by John Sobiesk of Poland, he still retained the most fertile parts of Europe and Asia. The gardens of the Old World were his. The cities renowned in history were the ruins which marked his progress, and the Christian churches of Armenia, of Persia, and of Africa, lay low in sackcloth and ashes, save only when the ruin was so complete that their existence became insignificant. Let us now ask in all candor, whether this is a scene which the Christian should look upon with complacency, or civilization allow to intercept the course of human progress? That question must be answered sooner or later, and will there be any better time than this? In slang phrase the "Great Powers" are trying to dodge it. That is what they have been doing for the past century but if they dodge it to-day, can they dodge it to-morrow? Let us look upon what is the effect of this Turkish conquest. Few people suppose that one-third of Africa is held by the Mahommedans. But it is. From Tripoli through to Kano and Timbuctoo, on the Niger, the Mohammedan is supreme. There are Pagan tribes mixed through, but the Mohammedans hold the power. Those who want to understand Northern Africa should read the interesting book of Dr. Barth, who traveled through it and was a year in Timbuctoo. So in India. There are twenty or thirty millions of Mohammedans there, and they were the originators of the Sepoy rebellion. So along the eastern coast of Africa Mohammedans prevail. In Europe, since their defeat by Sobiesk, they have held the best province on the Danube, and, until within a few years, held Greece. Now, what right have they to it? It is true that lapse of time may make conquest a valid title, in a merely international point of view, but morally and socially it can make no title. Here comes in the main point of this whole question. Had the conquered provinces on the Danube been of the same race, the same religion, the same civilization, or in any way correlative, no great harm could have come of it, and the Christian world might be content to let things stand. The population and religion of the Turkish provinces, from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean, stand about thus: Mohammedans, 6,000,000; Christians, 11,000,000; Jews, 80,000. We find then that Turkish despotism is ruling Christians—not Mohammedans. And how do they rule them? To say that they rule as the white Democrats of Mississippi ruled the blacks, is nothing. To stand the chance of being occasionally murdered, or tied up and whipped, is a small matter compared with what the Turks do. They tax the Christians to death. They prevent them from all freedom of action. They oppress them in every way. Hence it is that Herzegovina and Bosnia are in insurrection. They will not be able, it is probable, to resist the Turkish Empire. But they are raising a question which must be answered.—Cincinnati Gazette.

Journal of the First Northern Indiana Eldership of the Church of God in Indiana.

Soon after the Indiana Eldership of the Church of God, some members of said body, together with those who were expelled for non-co-operation with Masons in the Eldership, met in convention at Yellow Lake Bethel, Kosciusko county, at which time they agreed to meet at Lake Bethel, Kosciusko county, Nov. 25th, 1876, for the purpose of considering the propriety of organizing an Eldership opposed to secret societies.

According to agreement a good delegation of brethren and sisters opposed to secret societies, was present at the meeting. The meeting was called to order by Elder J. S. Shock, who stated the design of the meeting, after which Elder John Martin was elected speaker, Elder Isaac W. Lowman, Clerk, and Elder C. Clem, Treasurer.

Adjourned after prayer by J. S. Shock.

AFTERNOON.

Prayer by Isaac W. Lowman.

The following persons enrolled their names as members of this body until otherwise changed: J. Martin, I. W. Lowman, B. F. Bear, C. Clem, D. Hartoon, C. Bortner, A. Yocum, S. Hoffel, J. S. Shock, Wm. Gidley; Sisters—Hartoon, Ann Skinner, Julia Skinner, R. Ulsh, Mary Moor, J. Fredric, J. Trip and Mrs. Bortner. Thus constituted the Eldership proceede to business.

The title "Northern Indiana Eldership of the Church of God" was adopted as the title of this body.

The clerk was instructed to get a certificate of this meeting recorded in the county records.

Elders C. Clem, B. F. Bear and J. S. Shock were elected a committee on finance to gather funds to defray the expenses of this body.

A standing committee of five was elected, the first-named person to be chairman: I. W. Lowman, J. S. Shock, C. Clem, B. F. Bear and J. Martin, committee.

Whereas, the editor of the Church Advocate has refused to publish manuscripts opposed to secret societies. Therefore,

Resolved, that we have the proceedings of this meeting published in the Christian Cynosure, and have 200 extra copies of the number in which this journal is published, printed to distribute among the people, thereby giving the proceedings of this meeting as large a circulation as possible.

On motion the speaker appointed a committee on license, consisting of J. S. Shock, C. Clem and B. F. Bear.

On motion adjourned to meet in session after pulpit services in the evening. Prayer by B. F. Bear.

EVENING.

Whereas, Elders J. S. Shock and C. Clem were dismembered from the Indiana Eldership of the Church of God because they would not co-operate with nor fellowship Masons in said body; therefore,

Resolved, that we accept the above as a cause of their expulsion from that body.

The committee on license reported the following:

PREACHER'S LICENSE.

"This is to certify that Elder ——— is a minister called and qualified of God to preach the Gospel and to perform all the duties of his sacred calling; and is in good standing in the Northern Indiana Eldership of the Church of God. This to be valid until revoked by the Eldership. Given at ———, in the year of our Lord, 187—. Signed in behalf of the Eldership. Elder ———, Speaker. Elder ———, Clerk.

The report was adopted.

The clerk was instructed to get twenty-five copies of license printed.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, that we hold a ministerial association, and the speaker appoint a committee of three to draft a programme.

I. W. Lowman, J. S. Shock and C. Clem were appointed said committee.

The Association will be held at or near Auburn on the Saturday before the last Sabbath in January, 1877. (The above was revoked by the standing cammittee. The association will not be held at that time.—Clerk.)

The following arrangements were made to supply churches with preaching: Elder J. Martin is to serve the church at Jefferson Union, Noble county, Ind. Yellow Lake Bethel, Beaver Dam and Hans have the privilege of choosing their preacher. Elder C. Clem is to serve the church at Fredericks. Elder B. F. Bear is to serve the church at Eel River Bethel.

Brother B. Ulsh was invited to address the audience on the subject of secret societies, which he did to good acceptance.

Adjourned to meet at Jefferson Union on the evening of the 20th of October, 1877. Elder B. F. Bear is to preach the opening sermon.

J. Martin, Speaker.
Isaac W. Lowman, Clerk.

N. B.—Persons wishing to attend our next meeting should for their convenience preserve a copy of this journal, as a notice of the next meeting may not appear in print.—Clerk.

—The Iowa Freeman has this advice for the friends in that State on politics. It is good for all the rest:

"Now that the fierce conflict incident upon the Presidential election is past, let the friends of good government consult each other as to the best and wisest measures to be adopted to overthrow Masonic rule. Let the strongest and best men be nominated for State offices at our next annual meeting at Oskaloosa, and wherever there is Anti-secrecy sentiment enough to justify it, let town and county nominations be made, and despite the Masonic cry, 'you will loose your vote,' or defeat the Republican candidates,' let every freeman vote his sentiments, knowing that no right action can be lost in the sight of God."

Reform News.

The Michigan State Lectureship.

To the President and Executive Committee of the Michigan State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies:

Dear Brethren:—When at our late State Anniversary at Hastings you did me the honor to call me again to the field as your State Lecturer I could only provisionally accept. I told you, as you will recollect, that I did not dare to say I would not accept the call. I, however, in my own mind saw a possibility that the time might come when I should see it my duty to do so. After several weeks of prayer and watchful attention to the indications of the Divine will, I think the time has come; and I hasten to lay my decision before you. I have been led to it by the following reasons among others:

1. I feel that a proper prosecution of the work calls for more physical strength than is mine to give.

2. The health of my wife is constantly declining, and is in such a state that an absence from her of more than a very few days at a time is a very great source of distress to myself, to say nothing of its effect upon her, and last, but not least,

3. During my Sabbaths at home, for some months past, I have been preaching to a small church some ten miles away, where God has been blessing my labors, with the addition of twelve to its membership already, with a prospect of many more, now rejoicing in a Savior's love; with more on the way and the work still going on.

After a prayerful struggle over the matter, and with the advice of friends, I have felt, and do feel it my duty to stop with these "sheep in the wilderness," till spring, on much smaller remuneration than offered by the society.

I will still lecture, however, if my services are required when my other labors and my strength will permit, on the following terms: I will give two lectures in a place for ten dollars and my expenses. If my services are required, the friends will thus know how to secure them.

It will therefore be understood that I resign into your hands the commission with which you honored me, hoping that God may direct your choice to a man abler and better, though I may be pardoned for saying it will be difficult to find one who loves the cause better than myself.

God helping me, I shall in the future watch, labor and pray for your success against this foe of all righteousness.

Those desiring lectures on application to C. B. Remington at this place, will be attended to so far as in his power. Those wishing for me can direct to me personally at Fentonville.

Yours truly, J. L. Barlow.

From the Indiana Convention.

West Newton, Ind.

I am one of Mr. Ronayne's converts. I am a young man and have been casting about for a profession for life with some intention of joining the lodge, thinking it would assist me to get into business. After witnessing Mr. Ronayne's exposition of Masonry, I have materially changed my mind.

We believe that it has done good in this place; at least the people are stirred up; the only topic of conversation is Masonry. If you go into the stores or offices, you hear nothing but Ronayne and Masonry; some uphold the institution and some condemn it. Some are very much opposed to Masonry, but do not like Mr. Ronayne's plan of fighting it, but are always unable to name a better way by which it can be put down. But it is very clearly noticeable that all those who condemn Mr. Ronayne's exposition in any way are among the ignorant class of people, or are favorable to Masonry. It is also to be noticed that the wisest and shrewdest Masons say but very little about it. All of them admit a part of it to be true, but say some of it is false. It is evident that Mr. Ronayne knows more Masonry than has ever been in our town before, and the part they deny is the part they never learned.

On the first night of the exposition several Masons were present and the first degree was thoroughly worked. But when the second and third degrees were to be worked the Masons were not there, and it is not to be wondered at; once was enough for them, they could not face any more like that.

The following Saturday night was lodge-night, and the Masons were out in full force, which is some evidence that their ranks have been fired into with some effect.

Mr. Ronayne is a powerful and impressive speaker, and his arguments are irresistible. He is certainly doing a good work and should have every encouragement. Some persons who are at a loss for something else to condemn him for, say he is not a Christian; but we never heard sounder Christian doctrine preached, nor with more force and power than we heard from Bro. Ronayne during the convention. We certainly never heard a stronger appeal to the Christian people for the support of their prayers than he made in his closing remarks, which goes to prove that he has full faith in the Christian's most effective weapon, and we believe that many a fervent prayer has gone up to the "great white throne" for his preservation and success.

Asking to be remembered as an Entered Apprentice in this reform,

I am yours truly, BOAZ.

LATER.

Our Anti-masonic tree, planted at West Newton has commenced bearing fruit, which bids fair to be good when fully ripe. One preacher has got himself in a trap. On Dec. 29th Ronayne worked the third degree, it was the last night of the meeting. The next was lodge night. On that night Rev. Mr. McNaughton, the Methodist minister, was to preach to his people. The minister met his congregation at the appointed time, but McNaughton claiming to be very unwell and not able to preach the Gospel dismissed the congregation, walked over to the lodge and remained there until nearly twelve o'clock. I understand that some two or three of his Methodist brethren had an interview with him next day, but the result is not known. P. ALLEN.

DEAR BROTHER K:—On the night of Dec. 15th we closed the second course of lectures in this vicinity. The first was by Elder J. R. Baird, who came here in June and gave us three lectures which strengthened the honest and wonderfully provoked the dragon "who gave his seat to the beast" (Rev. 13: 2). The second was by Past Master Edmond Ronayne with his powerful public initiations, which lifts up the hands that hang down and strengthens the feeble knees and gives reform men back-bone; so that they will not support Masonic ministers nor receive at their hands the sacred emblems of the broken body and shed blood of that dear Redeemer who is barred out of the lodge.

These lectures will certainly do great good and I do hope they will in making voting Anti-masons by the thousand, for these are the kind that are available. One of these will chase a thousand. There were three votes for the American party in this (Rockland) township, and I could lay my hand on the three who voted it, for I gave two of the tickets and voted one myself. I now wish to give my opinion with regard to the Christian Cynosure. It is just the paper that every honest man ought to read, for I think, as E. Ronayne, without the paper all will be a failure. The lectures I compare to the seed sown on stony ground; it takes quick root, but is liable to be scorched or to freeze out, but the paper keeps the roots growing deeper all the while. A. J. WEAVER.

CHRONICLES OF WASIOJA.

Now it came to pass, in those days, that the prophets that lived in the land of Cloudy-water came together, as their custom was in the time of corn harvest, to worship God, and commune together and inquire of the Lord concerning the kingdom.

And they came together on the fourth day of the tenth month, even unto Wasioja in the Land of Cloudy-water. Now there was at Wasioja a school of the Prophets where many young men and maidens came from far and near to learn wisdom and to be wise in all manner of knowledge, and the hand of the Lord was with the School at Wasioja, insomuch that the Holy Ghost fell on many, and the young men and maidens were converted not a few, and many were added to the church of such as should be saved.

Now there lived in the land of Illinois a prophet, whose name was Joshua, and he was a man of good report in all the tribes of Israel, and it came to pass that when Dennis the evangelist came to the meeting of the prophets of the tribe of Illinois, that Joshua said unto him, "Go to now, I have a mind to sojourn with thee and visit the churches;" and the saying pleased him. And it came to pass that when they had visited and strengthened the brethren in the land that lieth beyond the great river, that they fetched a compass and they came to the land of Cloudy-waters; and they came to Wasioja about the time of the evening sacrifice. And they came into the assembly of the people as one Melvin stood up to prophesy.

And when the meeting had come to an end, it was noised abroad that Dennis the Evangelist had come, and Joshua also, that there was great joy among the people; for all the people loved Dennis and Joshua, and on the morrow Joshua preached unto the people, and said unto them, "Have faith in God." And he greatly encouraged the brethren, and they were comforted not a little.

And when the Sabbath was come, Den is stood up for to preach, and he opened the S riptures and exhorted the prophets with much zeal, that they should be faithful watchmen and not be like many false prophets who bow the knee to Baal, and it came to pass that where he made mention of Baal, that some were offended, for there were some that worshipped Baal; howbeit many of the people heard him gladly.

And when the evening was come great multitudes came together to hear the word, and Joshua preached unto them Jesus, and the word was with power, and the Holy Ghost fell on many that heard.

Now when the meeting was ended, one stood up in the midst of the people and said unto them that Joshua would speak unto the people on the morrow concerning Baal. Then great fear fell on all the Masons, (for so the worshippers of Baal were called in those days to deceive the people) and said one to another, "Behold these that have turned the world upside down have come hither also."

Howbeit, the people came together on the morrow, and Joshua reasoned with them for the space of more than an hour concerning the worship of Baal; proving by many things that the Masons did deny Him whom God raised from the dead, and that they worshipped strange gods in dark places, and bowed the knee to Baal, and swore great oaths to tell no man what was done by them in secret, and when he had made an end of speaking, some said, "Are these things so?" and they were astonished above measure and wondered how these things could be in the midst of Israel; and great fear fell on all them that heard.

And one rose up in the midst of the people and said unto Joshua and Dennis, "Sirs, who can tell more concerning this matter? for as the Lord liveth such things ought not to be in Israel." And they answered and said, "Behold, now, there is one Edmond, who was a high priest of Baal for many years, and it came to pass that while he burned incense unto Baal, that the hand of the Lord was heavy upon him, insomuch that his soul did loathe the abominations of Masonry; and he cried unto the living God, and the Lord heard him and delivered him from his idols and he forsook them, and he became a free man, and behold he goeth about to tell the people what abominations he hath seen in secret." And they said, "We have seen Edmond, and what he did even in Syracuse."

And all the people said, "Go to now, let us send and fetch Edmond whose surname is Ronayne, and they did so; and they sent a letter by the hand of Gaylord the scribe.

CHAP. II.

Now when it was noised abroad that the people at Wasioja had sent for Edmond, great fear fell on all the Masons that dwelt in all the regions around about, and they rent their clothes and threw dust into the air; and they said one to another, "Behold now we shall be a reproach and a by-word unto the people, for if this Edmond shall tell all the people what things are done by us in secret, every man will despise us, and we can no longer deceive the people. And they lifted up their voices and wept.

But one who lived in a city not many furlongs off, a ruler and a judge among them said unto them, "Wherefore do ye weep? wot ye not that I know more than ye all? these Wesleyans be all fools; wot ye not that this Edmond will not come to this land seeing that I dwell therein.

CHAP. III.

Now it came to pass in the eleventh month, on the ninth day of the month, that Edmond whose surname was Ronayne came unto Wasioja in the land of Cloudy-water, according to the word of Gaylord the scribe; and all the people came together to hear, from Dan even to Beersheba, insomuch that they trod one upon another. And Edmond stood up in the midst of them and said: "Ye men of Israel hearken unto me. Behold, a horrible thing is done in the midst of thee, and the people perish for lack of knowledge; for Masonry is a great evil under the sun, and few know what abominations are committed by them in secret. Give attention and I will show you what things they be which the Masons do in dark places. I will at this time do these things in the presence of all the people to make Baal a hissing and a by-word in the land, as the Lord hath commanded me. Judge you."

And he laid hold on a young man and stripped off his clothes; howbeit he left his drawers and shirt on lest his nakedness should be seen; (for it is a shame to speak of the things done by them in secret,) and he put a rope around his neck, and blindfolded him, and led him about by the hand, and said many strange words unto him which were very foolish and wicked, and which are lawful for no man save a heathen to utter; and he made him bow the knee to Baal, and swear a great oath to tell no man of these things. And Edmond said, "Behold, these are the things the Masons do in secret; moreover, preachers do these things." And the people wondered greatly, and said one to another, "Do good men commit such abominations?" Howbeit some doubted. And Edmond did these things three times in Wasioja; and the last time was worse than the first.

Moreover, Edmond went unto Dodge Center, and did these things also. And it came to pass that when he was at Dodge Center, that one who had also been a Mason, rose up and bore witness to what Edmond did, and said, "Of a truth these things are so." And the Masons held their peace.

Then Edmond went unto Kasson, about forty and eight furlongs off, and did these things there also. And it came to pass that while he was speaking in Kasson, that a certain son of Belial rose up and said unto him, "Thou liest." But Edmond answered him decidedly—insomuch that the people laughed him to scorn.

And Edmond went to Mantorville, and did likewise, and many of the people heard him gladly. And when he had showed by many signs and wonders that Masonry is a great evil in the land, he departed in peace.

But there was no small stir among the people about these things, and the end is not yet; by and by.

JONADAB, the Scribe.

THE NEW ORDER.

CHAPTER II.

According to previous appointment "our lodge" met in the U. P. church, New Galilee, Beaver county, Pa., on the evening of December 21st, and by seven o'clock the commodious basement of the church was filled to overflowing, and after a few complimentary remarks to the audience concerning secretism, and especially the order known as the "Independent Order of Odd-fellows;" the lodge was opened in due form before the wondering gaze of the vast crowd and doubtless to the utter astonishment of the members of the band of brothers, as there was quite a number present.

The regular routine of business being taken up an imaginary case of application for benefits was disposed of, by which was shown, that benefits do not follow the non-payment of dues. And then the special object of the meeting was taken up, viz., the initiation of a candidate into the initiatory degree of the independent order of Odd-fellowship, which was done in a manner that convinced many that the secrets and ceremonies of Odd-fellowship were quite well known by outsiders. And I have no doubt but there was disgust produced in many minds, and perhaps the mantle of shame crept silently over the brows of the more respectful members of the order. After the initiation the subject was discussed at some length, and then an opportunity was given to the fraternity to present their objections to what had been said and done.

At this point a Mr. Baker arose and broke the ice and plunged into the flood, and if he was not chilled at going in, he almost certainly was at coming out, if he has succeeded in getting out at all. A number of his brethren came to his rescue, true to their obligation, "to assist a brother in need;" and for about one hour cross-firing continued, which was by far the most interesting part of the performance, and the large audience appeared to be delighted with it. If there was no sharp-shooting, there was often a dead calm after a question was answered and explained. They of course denied some things, and cried out persecution. Now if it be persecution to resist the devil we cannot help it. And one of the very best evidences that we are succeeding in showing the real secrets and working of the lodge, is the wrath they manifest. If they were not hurt they would not cry out. Yours for the right,

S. A.

SECEDER'S CONVENTION—RESPONSES.

In regard to the proposition of Bro. Ronayne for a convention of all ex-Masons, it has my hearty approval. J. B. NESSELL.

Ellington, N. Y.

VIOLA, ILL., Dec. 30, 1876.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—I have been waiting to hear responses to Bro. Ronayne's proposal for a convention of seceding Masons for counsel, for encouragement, and for issuing an address to the American people. I am in favor of such a convention. Am not sure that I can attend it, but will if Providence opens the way.

Looking at Freemasonry and its numerous progeny in our land from my standpoint, I see a duty, a Christian duty, a patriotic duty in such a convention—to counsel, to encourage, to pray with and for each other and the cause they represent, and then to lift their united voices to the American people as to the need and duty of the hour. It is, to my mind, a needed thrust of the sickle of God's truth into the ripened harvest too long neglected already. Especially when we see Freemasonry and its cortege in their tinsel and titles of royalty trampling down every vestige of constitutional liberty; poisoning the very fountain of individual conscience and Christian morality; striking deep its envenomed fangs into all our courts; and last, but most alarming, rejects Christ as man's Redeemer and as Sovereign of this world, and erects a throne of iniquity dedicated to falsehood, irresponsible alike to God and man, "whose god is their belly, and whose glory is their shame." It is time that God's enlightened freemen put the trumpet to their mouths and signaled God's hosts to the battle against the cohorts of the enemies of God and his Christ.

What the "harvest shall be" in this loved land of ours if we thrust not in the sickle of God's truth and reap vigorously now while we may, can be estimated somewhat by the awful tribute of blood and treasure laid upon our nation by heaven's just decree, for our forgetting God and humanity in the great question of slavery while preaching, and praying, and voting was invited, and would have been honored by Heaven's great King.

God's moral vineyard must be cultivated by his own servants, using his own moral instruments, and that in God's own time—today; or, by waiting, risk God's own plowing with his judgments, and pruning with the sword of vengeance, where long he waited to be gracious, and sought a people jealous for his honor. "Every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God," are words of love to the obedient, but of swift judgment to the wicked, though they go hand joined in hand; for the King of kings hath spoken it.

I sincerely thank God for such stirring words of life and power as I find from the pen of J. H. Bingham, in the Cynosure of Dec. 28th. I thank God for a Ronayne, the St. Paul, the Luther, of our day. What cannot God do when he wants workers to plow up the thistles, thorns and briars that come to infest his moral vineyard. A Paul, taken from the proud, self-conceited Pharisees; a Luther, snatched from the seething caldron of Romish prostitution; and now a Ronayne carved out of the heart of the "lodge of all iniquity." Thank God that Jesus reigns. Help, Lord, now to stir the hearts of the "more than seven thousand men that have not bowed the knee to Baal" in this our land, in this wickedness of the lodge of all iniquity, to now arise and draw the sword of God's truth mightily through faith.

The American party vote last fall, though sadly few, in view of the light spread abroad on that subject, is a star of hope that our nation has yet the requisite few to save our nation from Sodom's fate. May the Lord bless Bro. Ronayne's convention. J. C. GRAHAM.

MARION, Ind.

I heartily endorse Bro. Ronayne's call for a convention of seceding Masons. I think they could get up and send out such a document as would utterly overthrow the weak argument of adhering Masons, that those who have written Masonic exposes were never Masons, or if they were, are perjured villains and not to be believed. Let the convention proposed by Bro. R. be held by all means. GEO. W. CHAMP.

WHY NOT PREACH IT?

WEST GENEVA, O.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I talk with Freemasons often, and tell them that it is well known that error and iniquity always desire concealment; truth and righteousness desire the open light. "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." John 3: 20, 21.

There are evils in secret systems, inherent in the very obscurity and darkness in which they are enveloped, which ought to be esteemed insuperable objections to a union with them. They are partial, anti-social, and founded upon an opposition to the moral order and social ties by which the human family is bound.

God has made provision for society, establishing mutual obligations. Husband and wife, parents and children; brothers and sisters, binding in one sweet union the domestic circle. In the commonwealth, citizens with citizens, subjects with magistrates; in the church, brother with brother, in the holy ties of fellowship in divine truth and ordinances. But secrecy is a hindrance and interferes in the performance of these relative duties. The Bible directs to happiness in all the relations of life found instituted in the Bible. If Freemasonry is found there why not have females learn it? If found in the Bible, why do not ministers of the Gospel preach it? How long will Masons act the silly thing of telling outsiders that they, by Masonry, have a better understanding of the Bible than outsiders can have?

It has been attempted to clothe the system of Freemasonry in darkness; claiming for it a pre-eminence over all natural and divinely instituted relations. The members of the lodge are under bonds, requiring a wicked partiality against all outside of the lodge. Who is the secret man's neighbor, to whom he feels bound to be benevolent? He is known by his grip, pass-word, etc. But the Christian revelation knows no such distinction. "I was a stranger," says Christ, "and ye took me not in." How can ministers of the Gospel, who have advanced a number of degrees in Masonry, and see the evil of it, and keep silence be counted faithful, or escape the threatening in Ezekiel 33?

Now and then, from my childhood up, I have heard talk respecting the lodge, and can say in truth that all that which was said in my hearing, whether by Masons or others, was evidence to me that it was a bad institution. JAS. BARNETT.

OUR MAIL.

Rev. Wm. Blair, Glennsville, Kentucky, writes:

"There are many Masons in this part of the world and although there are a great many persons who are opposed to them, yet there is but little said against them. It seems to be a one-sided matter. While Masons boast of their greatness there is but little said in reference to their corruption I cannot get the Masons to read the paper to any extent. They close their eyes against the light. Their great gift in carrying their principles is to deny everything and acknowledge nothing. After all this I believe a few faithful, well-informed men could do good work here in putting down this great evil. I have but a short time to stay in this world, but while I do stay I will give my influence against all secret, oath bound societies."

J. H. Hanna, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, writes:

"So far as Mr. Ronayne is concerned, our meetings here are an entire success, especially the last evening, the audience being good only on that evening, not through any fault of his, or ours either. It is proposed now that the ice has been broken, to follow it up with a more complete exposition sometime in March, before our three seminaries close, giving Mr. Ronayne full scope, which he had not this time, to carry it out on his own plan. I am persuaded quite a large list of subscribers for the Cynosure could be got up in these two cities, notwithstanding the unusually hard time experienced here just now, if judicious canvassing was well done."

Can any one help Mr. Hanna in a judicious canvass?

Anthony Overholt, Wadsworth, Ohio, writes:

"I am persuaded that the Cynosure advocates principles that will stand the test in both time and eternity."

S P. Poole, Bellevue, Ohio, writes:

"Three of us have agreed to send fifteen dollars soon for ten numbers of the Cynosure for one year and take our chances in getting subscribers if we have to give them away We want more light on this great subject of reform for the masses, and I know of no human agency equal to the Cynosure to accomplish this much needed work. Books, organizations and lectures are doing a good work, but the masses must be enlightened through a circulating medium. Is there one reader of the Cynosure who cannot get at least one new subscriber besides renewing his own subscription? Let every one who possibly can resolve in the strength of the Master to get up a club of ten at least. Let our efforts be accompanied by our prayers and the cause of truth and right will prevail. I cast one vote for Walker and Kirkpatrick."

Geo. T. Gibbs, College Springs, Iowa, writes:

"I believe that secret societies are the foundation and chief corner-stone of all the corruptions in our body politic, but I think they will be destroyed with a swift and sudden destruction when the day of the Lord cometh. Until then we can only do our duty as the Lord reveals it to us, and wait for the shaking in the mulberry trees."

Henry Labeau, Buena Vista, Kansas, writes:

"There were three Walker and Kirkpatrick votes cast here in this precinct, and I intend to vote the principles of that platform as long as I live, with the help of God. The cause is gaining ground in this place, but there is too much of a man-fearing spirit amougst the people. But the cause of Christ will surely prevail, for Christ says, 'I am with you always, even unto the end.' I feel that this is the Master's service and I cannot fear. May the time soon come when Christians will unite around the Lord's table with no other cable-tow than that of love to the Master aud the creatures of his creation."

Hope Davis, Carpenterville, Illinois, writes:

"I hope the Anti-masonic votes cast will be seed that will produce a great harvest, for the Lord is at the helm. My trust is in the Lord. It is the duty of a minister of the Gospel to cry aloud and spare not; to lift up his voice like a trumpet and show the people their sins. But they slide around the greatest sin of our nation and the world. It seems they fear man more than God. But some have come out and they are persecuted My prayer is that He will regard the lives and health of our agents as precious in His sight, and hasten the day when Satan shall be banished from the church of Christ and the way be prepared for the outpouring of the Spirit of God, that we may have a Pentacostal season. This 'Wicked' must first be removed. 2 Thess. ii.

A friend in Cainsville, Ohio, sends us six stanzas of poetry asking us to publish them. The idea brought out by the poem is that he cannot unite with the church named (Zoar) on account of its fellowshipping Masonry. We have room for but one verse:

"O I would like to meet at Zoar,
And sing and pray as once before;
But there is something in the way,
It is the monster Masonry."

J. F. Cory, Mt. Vernon, Iowa, writes:

"The secretists had a gala day here on the 27th, it being St. John's Day. All the initiated were on hand. I think they are in better spirits than they have been since Mr. Blanchard was here some years ago, when we had an anti-secret society formed. Our society is gone and the cause languishes. We want speakers and teachers but money is scarce. Can you send us a lecturer? Friends of the reform are welcome to the hospitality of my house. The people seem to be indifferent to this enormous evil, but how can the people learn without a teacher, and how can they teach except they be sent?"

J. P. Richards, Bowensburgh, Illinois, writes:

"I have been doing something in the way of lecturing, with good results, I hope."

B. Borton, West Unity, Ohio, writes:

"I wish that J. G. Mattoon or some other of the leaders would call a meeting and organize a society down in our parts, and purchase enough books for a library and form a reading room with your paper and books, etc. Our work is not general enough yet to make it a success at another election.

E. B. Palmer, Batavia, New York, writes:

"Enclosed please find the official canvass. It gives the Anti masonic ticket the honor of one vote; but the fact is we are entitled to five Anti masonic votes. You see the honesty of the two great parties. There must have been a Masonic understanding about the four votes not counted. Norris Gay voted the Walker and Kirkpatrick ticket in the first district, and David Long, Caleb P lmer and E. B. Palmer voted the same ticket in the second district, and our Masonic judges found one Walker and Kirkpatrick ticket in the second district."

S. A. Reynolds, Waverly, Pennsylvania, writes:

"It rejoices my heart that a man so widely known as Mr. Moody, has said what he has in condemnation of so many of the popular sins in our churches, and especially his answer to the question in regard to secret societies. May the Lord raise up more men like Mr. Moody who will dare to face the multitude with God's truth."

H. D. Inman, Coldwater, Michigan, writes:

"May God nerve us all for the mighty conflict and hasten the time of complete victory. Our cause is of God. Let us be of good cheer"

I. S. Perham, Brookfield, Vermont, writes:

"This town cast four votes for Walker and Kirkpatrick. I call these four votes worth $100 each to the cause. I think if our tickets had been circulated in good numbers in this State we should have cast many more votes. May we learn wisdom in future; go on in this good work, and vote as we pray. I pray God to bless you in your work, to keep you humble and strong to do all the work he has for you. I ask the prayers of all Anti-masons or Christians that God in mercy may send to us or raise up among us men to lecture and work the degrees. Let no one be weary in well doing, for in due time we shall reap if we faint not."

W. O. Shaw, South Northfield, Vermont, writes:

"I put in the one Anti-masonic vote in Northfield. In Brookfield there were four votes cast. I have lent or given away nearly all my papers; in many cases to persons who did not know that any such reform existed. I am sowing seed in hopes that some of it will take root."

G. Crook, Concord Station, Erie county, Pennsylvania, writes:

"Erie county is what I call a hard county. If we could have some one to give us some lectures on the secrets of Masonry I think it would set the ball rolling."

Jason C. Bartholomew, Ely, Iowa, writes:

"Freemasonry holds the key to the U. B. Church in North Liberty. Those preachers at Western have been preaching in said place for many a year, and I was told by one of the trustees that he did not wish the subject of secrecy discussed there as it would cause dissatisfaction. Now I am within one step of saying there is no such thing as Christianity; at least I have to look beyond most of the religious bodies to find it."

Read Revelations iii. 4, and take courage, and patiently continue to heed the command found in the second verse of the same chapter.

The following sketch of Mr. Bartholomew's life from the Linn County Pilot, we take the liberty of inserting here.

"J. C. Bartholomew was born in Vermont in 1806, and is a farmer by occupation. Moved to Ashtabula county, Ohio, at the age of eleven years; spent some years in Illinois, and moved to Rapids township in this county, in 1840; spent fifteen years there, then moved to his farm in College township where he now resides engaged in raising fruit, bees, and Jersey stock. He married at the age of twenty-four; his wife still lives to journey with him. They have no children. Mr Bartholomew is a radical agitator and has been all his mature life. An abolitionist while that question agitated the country, and utterly hostile to all secret organizations. Masonry and its thousand offshoots he regards as the most potent agency of hell for the overthrow of the Christian religion, free government and fair play between a man and his neighbor. And his moral and intellectual energies, together with his surplus means, are used in the anti-secret cause. He is in good health. His mental activity and profound sincerity imparts the vigor and glow of middle life to his cheek. He never used tobacco or spirituous liquors."

LESSON NOTES.—1. Before whom I stand: Whom I serve. See Deut. 10: 8; 18: 5. These years: The drouth lasted three and a half years. See 1 Kings 18: 1; Luke 4: 25. 3. Get thee hence: Go hence. Hide thyself: From the wrath of Ahab and the fury of Jezebel. 4. Ravens: Some have explained this as meaning Arabians; others as the inhabitants of a place called Orbo or Oreb; still others have thought it was from a word signifying "to traffic;" hence, here, merchants. But all attempts thus to explain away the plain meaning utterly fail. 7. After a while: Probably about a year. No rain: Because of the idolatry of the people. See Deut. 11: 16, 17. 12. Barrel: An earthern jar, the common vessel in use in the East for such purposes. Cruse: Bottle. Two sticks: A few sticks. A definite number used for an indefinite one. 13. Make me .... first: A wonderful trial of faith is involved in this command! 15 She went and did: Manifesting her faith by instant obedience.—Scholar's Quarterly.

The very name, Elijah, is significant. It means "Jehovah my strength," or "Jehovah my God, and like the reformer himself was a constant protest against the worship of Baal, and a perpetual symbol of faith in God. He is also called the Tishbite—that is, probably a native of Thisbe, which was either in Galilee or beyond Jordan. Moreover, he was of the "inhabitants of Gilead." "Gilead" means "rocky region," and was applied to that mountainous district east of Jordan which was assigned to Reuben, Gad and half of Manasseh. As might have been expected, the people of this rough, hilly, exposed section became remarkable for bravery, generosity and an independent spirit, as well as for uncultivated manners and rude appearance. The sacred chronicler calls them men of might, and men of war, fit for the battle, that could handle shield and buckler, whose faces were like the faces of lions, who were as swift as the roes upon the mountains." 1 Chron. xii 8. They were the Scotch Highlanders, or the Swiss mountaineers of the Israelitish nation. And like them was their countryman, Elijah "Long, shaggy hair flowed over his back; a large, rough mantle of sheepskin was fastened around his loins by a girdle of hide" Wherever he went he was recognized by his striking appearance and his peculiar garb. 2 Kings i. 7, 8. He was also hardy, fleet, courageous, decided, sarcastic, and withal capable of delicate tact and deep sympathy, xvii. 1-24. But more than this, he was a holy man, and an inspired prophet. He represents himself as "standing before God." As servants stand before their masters, so he stood before God, ready to do his biddiug. He had indeed a special commission to accomplish a great work; and with such qualifications natural and spiritual, we can readily understand how, like his successors, John the Baptist, Matt. xvii. 12, 13. Luther and John Knox, he never "feared the face of man."—Evangelical Repository.

For 1876, the Methodist Episcopal Sunday-school statistics show 19,346 schools; 204,964 officers and teachers; and 1,426,946 scholars. This is a gain within a year of 59 schools and of 20,778 scholars; but a decrease of 2,218 officers and teachers.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JAN. 8, 1877.

SOCRATES used to say that he was the idle man who was not working for the most important object that he could find. If any friend of the paper has a work to do for it, if it is for the time the best work to his hand, let him do it with his might and with prayer. Read on the sixteenth page of this number what is said of the "work of the hour."

THE BALLOT-BOX AND COVENANTERS.

In the Cynosure Dec. 21st, we published extracts from a second letter(his first was published) from a Reformed Presbyterian minister, declaring the ballot-box a "carnal device of carnal men," and so "enmity against God." The same letters criticised the work of Mr. Moody and condemned it. As the letters were vigorously written, we published the extracts from the second letter, without once stopping to reflect, as we might have done, that the extracts would not be endorsed by the leading minds of that earnest and able denomination of Christians.

We have since received letters from Drs. Sloane, Milligan and McClurkin, warmly dissenting from the extracts, and gently hinting that we should have known better than to suppose that Covenanters generally would agree in the doctrine of them; in which hint we are disposed to concur.

Dr. Sloane says, Covenanters or Reformed Presbyterians "are in favor of the ballot-box and anything necessary to a Republican form of government * * on this side the seas; and we believe in favor of a form of government virtually democratic all the world over." And he adds:

"The moment the Divine character of government, the authority of God's word and the kingship of Christ are recognized, we will use the ballot-box in common with the rest of our fellow-citizens; and as to Mr. Moody, may our Covenant God bless him in his efforts to save perishing souls." To which we add our cordial "Amen."

Dr. McClurkin writes: "No intelligent Covenanter denies the use of the ballot-box. But the Bible directs, 'In all thy ways acknowledge Him,'" and one of our ways being civil government, he argues that the neglect of such acknowledgement in our constitution is plain disobedience to God in which he does not wish to be involved. He also argues that we cannot, "by voting, remedy this fundamental wrong;" that Mr. Moody calls for separation and said lately, "If we would succeed in helping others out of darkness, we must first get out of it ourselves." And he further argues that as God is omitted from the Constitution, swearing into the Constitution and voting to reform it, is equivalent to going into a Christ-excluding lodge.

Dr. Milligan is still more pointed in some of his remarks; but his general views are identical with those of Drs. Sloane and McClurkin. We would give space to all three of their letters, but that would inaugurate a discussion for which the Cynosure has at present no use.

It is yet but respectful for us to reply that these excellent and learned men cannot go beyond us in regretting that, while the political platform on which the Constitution stands, viz., the Declaration of Independence, contains four distinct recognitions of the God of the Bible, the Constitution itself, which was only thirteen years later, contains no recognition of any God, false or true. Such, during that period, had been the progress of French ideas in this country. The satire of the old Scotch Presbyterian member of the convention in 1787 was not more keen than just: "Misther Praasident, what god do you propose to swear your witnesses by under that Constitution?"

But while we all deplore the French omission of God from the Constitution, and labor to correct it, we rejoice that God is not omitted from the platform on which it stands. We too believe that government ("the powers that be") is "ordained of God," though Nero be emperor. And we feel about our Constitution a little as the pious old lady did about the chicken which a wicked man brought to her, that "The Lord sent it if the devil brought it." And, besides, since we find ourselves on board the Constitution, we prefer to take part in navigating the ship; though if government were in itself wrong, as the lodge is, I would not touch its ballots but with tongs.

Meanwhile in my musings I have pondered whether God does not choose some of us for one purpose and some for another. For sure I am that I have derived my clearest and most definite ideas on this subject from the Covenanters. When all our statesmen were dragging their anchors away from God, the flukes of the Old Covenant held fast. So

"God builds on wants and on defects of mind
The glory, peace, and virtue of mankind."

—The so-called "United Brethren" Tribune has suffered like all the rest of Masonic journals in pecuniary matters, having been sold out under the sheriff's hammer a while since, at a loss to its owners of some hundreds of dollars each. The purchaser has changed the name to the "Observer." Its present character we do not know from actual observation, but such a "traitor in the camp" is too valuable an ally for the lodges to give up.

"NEITHER GIVE PLACE TO THE DEVIL."

Abolitionism, like all reforms, was carried by a war of ideas; and some rare and excellent natures went down in the fight; actually lost their mental balance, and "concerning the faith, made shipwreck." I think it was Macauley who wrote to Robert Hall, after that great man had recovered from a period of mental aberration, delicately suggesting that Hall's mind had, perhaps, temporarily given way, under "the friction between things as they ought to be and things as they are."

Satan evermore pushes good men in the direction of their virtues. And some of the most morose and crabbed come-outers of the anti-slavery movement, when they entered it were among the most gentle and genial of men.

There is a chameleon trait in men, which makes us become like the objects we contemplate. We reformers should beware of this, and while we look carefully at the errors and crimes of the lodge, we should, as did David, "Set the Lord always before our face," and thus be continually beholding "the Lamb of God who takes away the sins of the world." Every reformer should have on one side of his shield in the thickest of the fight, "The battle is not yours but God's"; and on the other side, "The wrath of men worketh not the righteousness of God."

If any people on earth ought to be cheerful and happy members of the family and the church of Christ, it is those who have escaped the crimes and corruptions of the lodge, and even that pity which

"Sheds tears feelingly and fast" over the sins and abominations of the land, should, all the time, convey comfort and satisfaction to the heart.

A WHITE LEAGUE OATH.

A Washington paper publishes the following oath of the "Grand Order of the Knights of the White League," a Democratic organization said to have ramifications in every State in the Union:

"You most solemnly swear that you will support the constitution and by-laws, and execute and perform the objects and purposes of this society, and you hereby bind yourself to give material aid and pecuniary assistance in procuring the just, and, if necessary, the forcible inauguration of Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, respectively, for the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States; and you further swear that you will, if deemed advisable, take up arms in behalf of this great object. In this you most solemnly pledge your life and honor, acknowledging that you have forfeited your life if in any manner you betray the objects and secrets of this society. So help you God."

This report comes from a partisan source and needs confirmation. If true it presents a question of the utmost gravity to the American people. If it is but the invention of a few hot-headed politicians the conspiracy will be of only temporary moment, but it is claimed to be taken by determined and desperate men all through the country in every Congressional district. The fact that such a story could be started is proof of a model from which it was drawn, and the marks of the original are plain enough when compared with the Royal Arch oath. If it is true we shall know very well to whom should be charged the strife and persecution, and may be blood, that naturally spring from an organization so charged with the spirit of lawlessness and war.

—Two important meetings will be held in Kansas within a fortnight or three weeks—the State Association holds a semi-annual convention at North Cedar, Jackson county, next Tuesday. Rev. H. T. Besse, the President, and Rev. J. Dodds, Secretary of the Association, promise good speaking and announce important business. This should bring out a large delegation from all parts of the State. The Central Kansas Association also has a meeting near Sterling, Rice Co., two weeks from to-day. This convention represents an important district, in which many Wesleyans and Friends are settled, who should salt the region with the truths of our reform Let these meetings be full.

—Lectures in their respective churches have been lately given on the lodge question by Rev. W. I. Phillips of the Congregational church of College Springs, Iowa, and Rev. Abner Orr of the Methodist Episcopal church, Cainsville, Mo. This good work should be taken up as opportunity offers by every evangelical minister. God speed the day when this evil shall be discussed as freely as intemperance.

—Dr. S. L. Cook, the Indiana State Lecturer, has sent in another interesting report of work done during the past few weeks which we lay over for lack of room.

—Elder Barlow's resignation of the State lectureship of Michigan will be read with regret by many who have listened to his addresses with profit and satisfaction. The work in the State was never in a more hopeful condition, all things considered, than now, and if the Michigan brethren succeed in getting another lecturer, as we understand they are trying to do, he will find many fields where the plow has broken up the fallow ground and all is ready for seed-sowing.

—Bro. Hinman passed across his field from Indiana to Iowa a week or so ago, stopping on the way at Wheaton, Ashton, Morrison and Round Grove. He has appointments during the month at Marshalltown, Colo Albion, etc.

—The Michigan State agent, Bro. Remington, is making arrangements to secure Past Master Ronayne for two or three weeks in his State. Correspondence should be opened immediately (see notice) with Bro. Remington by any who wish the expositions worked by a master hand in their places.

—J. H. Vandever, editor of the Iowa Freeman, Mason City, Iowa, has lately been visiting the reform centers of Cedar, Linn and Marshall counties where he was warmly welcomed. He lectured at several points and received encouragement for his publishing enterprise.

—The discussion of the lodge issue which arose in the last Wesleyan General Conference at Sycamore, Ill., over the amendment of the restricting rule, has continued through all last year in the State Conferences and in the columns of the American Wesleyan. In the latter the advocates of the amendment have found at last but a single opposing champion who maintained his ground till all there was left of it was the opinion that there might possibly be a secret society that was justifiable. Whether he is right or not is no matter while all agree that none such exist at present, but it was certainly questionable to keep correspondents and editors dodging about that corner for a twelve-month.

—We desire to make the Cynosure a means of more intimate communication between churches that disfellowship the abominations of the lodge, especially between independent churches like the Baptist and Congregational that have no denominational organ open to them on this topic. The paper can be the means of greater union between all testifying churches, mutually strengthening their faith and kindling their zeal; it can also assist Anti-masonic pastors in settlement where their labors will be accepted and useful, and where no compromise will be needed to retain their position. We have the address of two such pastors who are unengaged, and with whom correspondence may be opened through the publisher of the Cynosure. Any others desiring to avail themselves of this medium will find us ready to assist them with all the means in our power.

—Despite the serious questions that exist and may continue to arise from the efforts of the lodge faction in the United Brethren church, the position of that disloyal party has its ridiculous side. The Telescope photographs it thus:

"The third reason why our rule on secrecy should be struck out is because Masons say they do not want United Brethren to enter their lodges. The fourth reason for striking it out is that United Brethren who carry a demit from the lodge are not respected by Masons in regular standing. The fifth reason is that all our members who are eager to enter the lodge can then do so without acting dishonorably to the church. The sixth reason is, such noted men as Mr. Moody take the position of our church on secrecy. The seventh reason is that there is a rapidly growing sentiment against the lodge in all the churches. The eighth is because there is a national organization opposed to secret oath-bound societies. We should now back out of the fight."

—The Masonic Jewel publishes the report of a Deputy Grand Master of the State of his apostolic mission among the lodges. In one case he found the members quite deficient in the ritual, "but," he adds, "they are educating some Masonic orphans which 'cover a multitude of sins,'" which seems to imply that said "orphans" were such only in name and their Masonic fathers were made to care for them by law. Of another lodge he says, "When they have a degree to confer—which is rare—they send for a brother who lives fifteen miles from them to do the work." "They are intelligent gentlemen, and nearly every one out of the twenty-two was a member of some church—a bad fix for a lodge to be in." For which reason, intelligence or church membership? Either admission is bad enough; but evidently the latter is meant, and thereupon hang many reflections which intelligent minds can make for themselves.

—Rev. E. G. Cooper, Wisconsin Lecturer, picked up the following in his last trip which is reported in the American Freeman:

"C. C. Cozens of Ravannah, Mercer county had by request arranged for a lecture at his school house, and for the M. E. church for meeting on Sunday. He is a live man—was once induced to join a lodge, a charitable friend paying the fee of initiation. The lodge-room was the upper room of his dwelling. He presented himself at the time appointed for his initiation; assented to the artful questions and requirements, doffed his coat, vest, pants, boots, socks, then came the Masonic clothing, slipper, cable-tow; but when the hood-wink was about to be added to finish him up in due form, he rebelled, began to extricate himself from the rope, which movement brought him in contact with some of the lodge officers, one of whom he took by the throat, at the same time calling them thieves, robbers, etc."

News of the Week.

—The funeral of Alderman Mark Sheridan was attended last week by the longest procession of the kind known in Chicago for years.

—It is reported that the Lake Shore R. R. Company propose to refuse payment for damages to persons injured in the Ashtabula disaster. It is also reported that the company have detectives at work on the supposition that the bridge had been tampered with by villains who robbed the passengers.

—Heavy rains in West Virginia caused a great flood in Monongahela River which swept away the ice-fields gathered behind dams for fifty miles above Pittsburgh, and on Sunday morning the flood reached the city, and destroyed coal barges, steamboats, tugs and docks, valued with their loads at $2,000,000 or more. Great damage was also done above the city among the coal mines, and all down the Ohio to Cincinnati.

—The situation in Constantinople remains apparently unchanged, though from the willingness of the Conference to make concessions and the continued obstinacy of the Porte, it is thought that Turkey will have her own way at last.

—The report of the India famine says that in one of the Bombay districts, Shoplapore, the crops have totally failed. Things are nearly as bad in two other districts. The crops partially failed in six districts. Already 287,000 persons are on the relief works. In Madras famine prevails in twelve districts, and now 1,000,000 persons are on the relief works. The cost to the state is estimated at over £2,000,000 in Bombay, and £4,000,000 in Madras.

—A correspondent at Madrid, writing Jan. 3, says that in Guipuzcoa and neighboring provinces, today, a fearful hurricane has raged with fearful violence. The railway station store at Irun is on fire. Miles of woods on the mountains are burning, whole herds of cattle and hamlets have been destroyed. The military of the province have been actively engaged arresting the conflagration.

—The chapel within the Tower of London has been recently overhauled. It was here that the state prisoners who died within the Tower, or were beheaded on Tower-hill, were buried. Three plain deal coffins have been found, and an examination of their contents led to the belief that they contained the remains of Anne Boleyn, Duke of Northumberland and Margaret Pole, Countess of Salisbury, whom Henry VIII. caused to be beheaded in 1541. No trace was found of the bones of Lady Jane Grey.

The Home Circle.

Dedication Hymn.

BY REV. S. WRIGHT.

[Sung at the re-dedication of the Baptist church at South Glens Falls, N. Y., Dec. 6th, 1876.]

To Thee, O Lord, with joyful lays,
We lift our hearts in solemn praise;—
We to thy throne for refuge flee,
And dedicate ourselves to Thee.

To Thee—our souls,—our all we give,
To Thee,—help us forever live,
To Thee,—we give as thine abode
This house,—a Temple for our God.

Here,—let Thy love and mercy reign,
Here,—soothe the heart, and ease its pain,
Here,—bow the stubborn human will,
And let Thy richest grace distill.

Now, be the FATHER'S love adored,
Now be the SON revered as Lord,
Now may the SPIRIT blessed be,
The Three In One, and One in Three.

John Quincy Adams on the Bible.

MY DEAR SON: - In your letter of the 18th January to your mother. you mentioned that you read to your aunt a chapter in the Bible or a section of Doddridge's Annotations every evening. This information gave me real pleasure; for so great is my veneration for the Bible, and so strong my belief, that when duly read and meditated on, it is of all books in the world that which contributes most to make men good, wise, and happy—that the earlier my children begin to read it, the more steadily they pursue the practice of reading it throughout their lives, the more lively and confident will be my hopes that they will prove useful citizens to their country, respectable members of society, and a real blessing to their parents. But I hope you have now arrived at an age to understand that reading, even in the Bible, is a thing in itself, neither good nor bad, but that all the good which can be drawn from it is by the use and improvement of what you have read, with the help of your own reflection. Young people sometimes boast of how many books and how much they have read; when, instead of boasting they ought to be ashamed of having wasted so much time, to so little profit.

I advise you, my son, in whatever you read, and most of all in reading the Bible, to remember that it is for the purpose of making you wiser and more virtuous. I have myself, for many years, made it a practice to read through the Bible once every year. I have always endeavored to read it with the same spirit and temper of mind which I now recommend to you; that is, with the intention and desire that it may contribute to my advancement in wisdom and virtue. My desire is indeed very imperfectly successful; for, like you, and like the Apostle Paul, "I find a law in my members warring against the law of my mind." But as I know that it is my nature to be imperfect, so I know that it is my duty to aim at perfection: and feeling and deploring my own frailties, I can only pray almighty God for the aid of his Spirit to strengthen my good desires, and to subdue my propensities to evil; for it is from him that every good and perfect gift descends. My custom is, to read four or five chapters every morning, immediately after rising from my bed. It employs about an hour of my time, and seems to me the most suitable manner of beginning the day. But as other cares, duties, and occupations engage the remainder of it, I have perhaps never a sufficient portion of my time in meditation upon what I have read. Even meditation itself is often fruitless, unless it has some special object in view; useful thoughts often arise in the mind, and pass away without being remembered or applied to any good purpose—like the seed scattered upon the surface of the ground, which the birds devour, or the wind blows away, or which rot without taking root, however good the soil may be upon which they are cast. We are all, my dear George, unwilling to confess our own faults, even to ourselves; but when our own consciences are too honest to conceal them from us, our self-love is always busy, either in attempting to disguise them to us under false and delusive colors, or in seeking out excuses and apologies to reconcile them to our minds. Thus, although I am sensible that I have not derived from my assiduous perusal of the Bible (and I might apply the same remark to almost everything else that I do) all the benefit that I might and ought, I am as constantly endeavoring to persuade myself that it is not my own fault. Sometimes I say to myself, I do not understand what I have read; I cannot help it; I did not make my own understanding; there are many things in the Bible "hard to understand," as St. Peter expressly says of Paul's epistles—some are hard in the Hebrew and some in the Greek, the original languages in which the Scriptures were written, some are harder still in the translations. I have been obliged to lead a wandering life about the world, and scarcely ever have at hand the book which might help me to surmount these difficulties. Conscience sometimes puts the question—whether my not understanding many passages is not owing to my want of attention in reading them. I must admit that it is; a full proof of which is, that every time I read the book through, I understand some passages which I never understood before, and which I should have done at a former reading had it been effected with a sufficient degree of attention. Then, in answer to myself, I say: it is true; but I cannot always command my own attention, and never can to the degree that I wish. My mind is oftimes so full of other things, absorbed in bodily pain, or engrossed by passion, or distracted by pleasure, or exhausted by dissipation, that I cannot give to proper daily employment that attention which I gladly would, and which is absolutely necessary to make it "fruitful of good works." This acknowledgement of my weakness is just; but for how much of it I am still accountable to God, I hardly dare acknowledge to myself. Is it bodily pain? How often was that brought upon me by my own imprudence or folly? Was it passion? Heaven has given to every human being the power of controlling his passions, and if he neglects or loses it the fault is his own, and he must be answerable for it. Was it pleasure? Why did I indulge it? Was it dissipation? This is the most inexcusable of all; for it must have been occasioned by my own thoughtlessness or irresolution. It is of no use to discover our own faults and infirmities unless the discovery prompts us to amendment.

I have thought if in addition to the hour which I daily give to the reading of the Bible, I should also from time to time (and especially on the Sabbath) apply another hour occasionally to communicate to you the reflections which arise in my mind upon its perusal, it might not only tend to fix and promote my own attention to the excellent instructions of that sacred book, but perhaps also assist your advancement in its wisdom and knowledge. At your age, it is probable that you have still greater difficulties to understand all that you read in the Bible than I have at mine; and if you have so much self-observation as your letters indicate, you will be sensible of as much want of attention, both voluntary and involuntary, as I here acknowledge in myself.

* * * * * *

I shall number separately those letters that I mean to write you upon the subject of the Bible; and as, after they are finished, I shall perhaps ask you to read them all together, or to look over them again myself, you must keep them on separate file. I wish that hereafter they may be useful to your brothers and sisters, as well as to you. As you will receive them as a token of affection for you, during my absence, I pray that they may be worthy to be read by them all with benefit to themselves, if it please God that they should live to be able to understand them. From your affectionate father, JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

St. Petersburg, September, 1811.

Oh, what a blessing is Sunday interposed between the waves of worldly business like the divine path of the Israelites through Jordan! There is nothing in which I would advise you to be more strictly conscientious than in keeping the Sabbath holy. I can truly declare that to me the Sabbath has been invaluable.—Wilberforce.

Every duty we omit obscures some truth we should have known.

It has been well observed that the tongue discovers the state of the mind, no less than that of the body; but, in either case, before the philosopher or physician can judge the patient must open his mouth. Some men envelope themselves in such an impenetrable cloak of silence that the tongue will afford us no symptoms of the temperament of the mind. Such taciturnity indeed is wise if they are fools, but foolish if they are wise, and the only method to form a judgment of these mutes is narrowly to observe when, where and how they smile.—Colton.

Letters and Puzzles.

CONSTABLEVILLE, N. Y., Jan, 1, 1877.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I thought I would send a drop word puzzle. The last word of every line is omitted for the guesser to supply. They are all rhymed on one word. I send the answer to the puzzle in the Cynosure of Dec. 28th. 1, fiddle; 2, lion; 3, London; 4, pepper; 5, flowers; 6, Erie; 7, deer; 8, first; 9, red; and I think she is pretty sharp on the "Independent Order of Oddfellows." I am very glad that Mr. Moody has spoken against secret societies. He has stirred up the lodge, and he will have a chance to see how bitter and wicked they are. I hope the Cynosure will have a "Happy New Year." CORA M FISK.

The Upshot of a Quarrel.

A dish of milk was on the floor;
Puss wanted some and so did Dash;
'Twas big enough for many more
To lap out of without a splash;
But she was rude, and he was ruder,
Neither would let the other taste it;
Each thought the other an intruder,
And did the most to spill and waste it.

If Dash one moment ventured nigh,
Puss would that moment spit and fly;
If Puss the dish next moment sought,
Dash the next minute raged and fought.
At length, with sorrow be it spoken,
Between them both the dish was broken.

Brothers and sisters, all take warning,
The lesson must not meet your scorning;
Never let selfish trifles lead
To loud dispute and sinful deed;
Yield to each other, and be sure
Your happiness is more secure.

Story-Telling.

More than thirty years ago there was a little boy in Glasgow who was very fond of stories. He was accustomed to go in the afternoon to a neighbor's house, where stories were told about robbers, and stories about ghosts—foolish stories! And stories about poor boys who went to rich London and became great men; and stories about sailor-boys who had been shipwrecked and cast on desert islands in the midst of the tumbling sea—fine stories! It was a very pleasant sight to see the fire blazing on the hearth, and the boys all seated within its light, each telling his story in his turn.

The boy I speak of would have been entirely happy at that fireside, but for one little fear. In the street where he lived there was a graveyard. His father's house was on one side, and the house where the stories were told was on the other. To go back to his father's house he had to pass that way after dark; so he had to leave every even ing before the stories were ended. Sometimes, in the midst of a very good story, he would be seen turning his eyes to the window, and watching the darkening sky, as if he would keep the night from coming on.

One day the boys happened to be alone in the house. The stories were all fine and the fire was warm, and they all forgot that the hours were passing away. The sun went down; the sky grew dark; nothing was to be seen at the window but blackness. But just as they had reached the middle of a story there came a flash of lightning from the sky, and after that a peal of thunder, and then rain, thick and heavy, dashing against the panes.

My little friend remembered the graveyard in a moment and wished he were home. He went to the door; but the light of the fire, as it fell forward across the street, made the darkness seem more dark.

"I wish I were home," he said.

He was a timid little boy and began to weep. He was afraid of the dark night and the rolling thunder, but especially he was of the graveyard.

After a long while he got courage to say, "Keep the door open, and cry after me till I am out of hearing, and I will not be afraid." The other boys agreed, and opened the door to let him out. But just at that moment there came another flash of lightning and another roll of thunder, and he and they ran back and cowered beside the fire.

"Come with me, some of you," he next said. "Come two of you; I am afraid to go alone." But the other boys were very little older than himself. And now they also were afraid and began to cry.

Eight o'clock! Nine!

"O, I wish I were at home!"

Ten! and still he is afraid to go.

Half-past ten! eleven!

"I wish—I wish I were at home."

He went to the door a third time. He still saw nothing but the black, wet night. He cried as if his heart would break—"I wish—I wish—I wish I were at home!"

While he was sobbing out these words he saw a star of light twinkling through the gloom. It came nearer and nearer, and grew bigger the nearer it came. Joy! It was light from his father's house! His brother, carrying a lantern, had come to bring him home. It was as if daylight had come back again. His crying was at an end; his tears were dried up. He became bold as a lion. The fear of the graveyard went away, and he stepped out into the darkness with a smile on his face. His brother was by his side, and the light of his brother's lantern would light him home!

Now Christ does for his dying brothers and sisters just what this boy's brother did for him. He comes for them, with light from their Father's house, and takes them by the hand to lead them home.

Our life upon the earth is like the story-telling of these boys. We are all story-tellers, telling our stories to each other. The hour of death comes to bring our story-telling to an end. Suddenly we find that the day of life is spent. The sun goes down. The night comes up. We cannot remain on the green earth and beside the ruddy fires any longer. O, it is pleasant in that hour—it dries up all our sorrows—when the Elder Brother is seen by the soul of the dying one coming from the home in the sky!—Dr. A. Macleod.

A Leaf for Cold Weather.

Do you notice how chilly the days are growing? The wind bustles about gleefully, hustling the dry leaves hither and thither in unceremonious fashion, shouting noisily, "Winter is on his way and will be here shortly!" Do you dread the approach of the Ice King? It is a grand time to study and work indoors while he holds sway without. Whip Behind.

Passing up the Bowery, in the city of New York, I once saw an exhibition of most contemptible meanness and selfishness in a little boy. I could not learn his name, but for convenience, I will call him "Savage," he showed such a savage temper.

A cab (a carriage with one horse and two wheels, opening behind, to carry people about the city,) was passing by, the horse going pretty fast. Two boys were running behind to get on out of sight of the driver, and have a ride. One of them succeeded in getting on. Just as Savage was about to get hold, the driver happened to strike his horse. The horse sprang forward and left him behind. Savage was angry because the other had got on and he had not, so he called out to the driver, "Whip behind! Whip behind!" as loud as he could. The driver heard him, and mistrusting that somebody was hanging on behind, brought his heavy lash around and struck the boy across the face. The blow left a large cut in his face and hurt him much. He fell from his seat upon the pavement, and that hurt him more. Savage (and savage he was) laughed at the poor little boy's sufferings, and never went up to him to offer him any sympathy, but stood on the sidewalk taunting him: "You got it—I am glad of it."

What made Savage cry out, "Whip behind"? It was not because he thought the boy had no business there, nor because he wanted to do the driver a favor, for he would have gotten on himself if he could have done it, but purely because of his mean and savage disposition. He could not bear to see the other boy enjoying a ride that he could not enjoy. Had Savage got on he would not have called on the driver to whip behind. He would have been glad to have enjoyed the ride quietly, but he could not bear to see the other boy enjoying a pleasure that he could not enjoy.

This is the very spirit of military defence; a willingness to enjoy life at the expense of our enemies, rather than have them enjoy life at our expense. Let everybody feel and know that you have no wish to deprive them of any blessing because you cannot get it—that you have no desire to get or keep any blessing or privilege, by depriving them of any—and that you had rather give up property and life than deprive them of their blessings in order to keep them—and nobody will envy you or grudge you your enjoyment. Nobody will ever cry, "whip behind."—The Informer.

Home and Farm.

Stop the Leaks.—By the stopping of leaks we mean not only all unnecessary expenditures, but the taking care of what you have. Many farmers are very negligent in caring for their implements after having finished the season's work—leaving them exposed to winter's rain and summer's sun—which often injures them more than the work to which they were subjected. We seldom go into the country without seeing some implement laying out in the field, about the yard, laying on the roof, or hung on a tree. Even the harness is sometimes thrown upon the ground, or laid exposed to the weather for weeks at a time. In all this, there is a great leakage, which, with a little care, could be avoided. One farmer will mend or repair a broken or disordered article, making it almost as good as new, where another will throw it away. One keeps his cattle and horses in good flesh, while another has about him poor and scrawny stock. We have heard some of these people remark that they were unlucky, and do not see how it is his neighbor makes money at everything he puts his hands to. The secret is they look out for all the little leaks, and and take care of what they have, while our unlucky friends overlook the many small leaks, by studying how to close in a large on.—Sutter Banner.

In Case of Fire.—The season is at hand when fires most prevail, and when the precautionary hints of the late Dr. Hall are most important to be heeded. They are as follows: Keep doors and windows of the structure closed until the firemen come; put a wet cloth over the mouth, and get down on all fours in a smoky room; open the upper part of a window to get the smoke out; if in a theatre, church or schoolroom, keep cool; descend ladders with a regular step to prevent the vibration. If kerosene just purchased can be made to burn in a saucer by igniting with a match, throw it away. Put wirework or glass shades over gaslights in showwindows, and in bedrooms with curtains; sprinkle sand instead of sawdust on floors of oil-stores; keep shavings and kindling-wood away from steam-boilers, and greasy rags from lofts, cupboards, boxes, etc.; see that all stove-pipes enter well into the chimney, and that all lights and fires are out before retiring or leaving the place of business; keep matches in metal or earthern vessels, and out of the reach of children; and provide a piece of stout rope, long enough to reach the ground, in every chamber. Neither admit any one if the house be on fire except policemen, firemen, and known neighbors; nor swing lighted gas brackets against the wall; or leave small children in a room where there are matches or an open fire; nor deposit ashes in a wooden box, or on the floor; nor use a light in examining the gas-meter. Never leave clothes near the fire-place to dry; nor smoke or read in bed by candle or lamp light; nor put kindling to dry on top of the stove; nor take a light into a closet; nor pour out liquor near an open light; nor keep burning or other inflammable fluids in rooms where there is a fire; nor allow smoking about barns or warehouses.

Durable Buildings.—Donald G. Mitchell, in a recent address, said: The material of a house will be chosen according to circumstances. Wood is cheap and dry, and if painted often will last many years. Very old wooden houses may be seen in England still in a good state of preservation. Wooden houses are warmer where bricks are filled in between the studding, but paper laid between the boarding will keep out much cold. Back plastering is, however, better than either, when the cost is considered. The northerly sides of a house should be made warmer and tighter than the sunny sides. This is too often neglected or forgotten. But nature does not forget, for the bark of trees is always thickest on the north side. Concrete walls are often economical and satisfactory. Concrete houses may be built largely by unskilled labor, the principal requisites being good lime, and clean, sharp sand. Such walls should be left rough. It is barbarous to check it off and attempt to imitate finished stone. Water cement should be used for the two feet next the ground. Stone houses are also desirable, if well built. Many people have been prejudiced against stone houses, believing them too damp, but if this is so it is because they are not properly built. Well constructed stone or brick houses are warm in winter and cool in summer.

In many portions of New England there are plenty of stones which are lying in useless fences, or lumbering the highway, which might be put to a better use as building stones for houses or barns. They should be used without hammering except for the corners, and these may be made of hard brick if the stones are not of proper shape. Oak or chestnut is fully equal to stone for the lintels, but for the sake of effect they may be faced by thin slabs of stone if one desires it. Many years ago the speaker built a farm-house 50x27 feet on his own place, and constructed the walls of stones taken from old fences. Bricks were used for finishing around the windows, which were made double to save jambs. The plastering was furred out five inches, making the house warm in winter and cool in summer. It is now staunch and strong, and bids fair to last many years. Its cost, with ten finished rooms, was but $1,500. None of the stones were touched by hammer and even the moss upon them was saved when practicable. A larger house has been built since, and the work was done a little better, but the stones were only the ordinary stones of the field. The upper story is of wood and overhangs the first story. Stones having a taint of iron should not be used, neither such as will disintegrate when exposed to the changes of weather. Aside from these all the world is open to choose from. Such houses require no painting. Age will mellow them, and vines will cling to them kindly.

THE GOSPEL MEETINGS.

COMING OF THE LORD.

In 2 Timothy, iii. 16, Paul declares: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness;" but there are some people who tell us when we take up prophecy that it is all very well to be believed, but that there is no use in one trying to understand it; these future events are things that the church does not agree about, and it is better to let them alone, and deal only with those prophecies which have already been fulfilled But Paul doesn't talk that way. He says: "All Scripture is * * profitable for doctrine." If these people are right, he ought to have said: "Some Scripture is profitable; but you can't understand the prophecies, so you had better let them alone." If God didn't mean to have us study the prophecies he wouldn't have put them into the Bible. Some of them are fulfilled, and he is at work fulfilling the rest, so that if we do not see them all completed in this life, we shall in the world to come.

I don't want to teach anything to-day dogmatically, on my own authority, but to my mind this precious doctrine – for such I must call it—of the return of the Lord to this earth is taught in the New Testament as clearly as any other doctrine in it; yet I was in the church fifteen or sixteen years before I ever heard a sermon on it. There is hardly any church that doesn't make a great deal of baptism, but the New Testament only speaks about baptism thirteen times, while it speaks of the return of our Lord fifty times: and yet the church has very little to say about it. Now, I can see a reason for this: the devil does not want us to see this truth, for nothing would wake up the church so much. The moment a man takes hold of the truth that Jesus Christ is coming back again to receive his friends to himself, this world loses its hold upon him; gas stocks and water stocks, stocks in banks and in horse railroads, are of very much less consequence to him then. His heart is free, and he looks for the blessed appearing of his Lord, who at his coming will take him into his blessed kingdom.

In 2 Peter i. 20, we read, "No prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." Some people say, "Oh yes, the prophecies are all well enough for the priests and doctors, but not for the rank and file of the church. But Peter says, "The prophecy came not by the will of man, but holy men spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." and those men are the very ones who tell us of the return of our Lord. Look at Daniel ii. 45, where he tells the meaning of that stone which the king saw in his dream, which was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that broke in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver and the gold. "The dream is certain and the interpretation thereof sure," says Daniel. Now we have seen the fulfillment of that prophecy all but the closing part of it. The kingdoms of Babylon and Medo-Persia and Greece and Rome have all been broken in pieces, and now it only remains for this stone cut out of the mountain without hands to smite the image and break it in pieces till it becomes like the dust of the summer threshing floor, and for this stone to become a great mountain and fill the whole earth.

BUT HOW IS HE GOING TO COME?

We are told how he is going to come. When those disciples stood looking up into heaven at the time of his ascension, there appeared two angels who said unto them (Acts i. 11): "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." How did he go up? He took his flesh and bones up with him. "Look at me; handle me; give me something to eat; a spirit has not flesh and bones as ye see me have; I am the identical one whom they crucified and laid in the grave. Now I am risen from the dead and am going up to heaven." He is gone, say the angels, but he will come again just as he went. An angel was sent to announce his birth to the Virgin; angels sang of his advent in Bethlehem; an angel told the women of his resurrection; and two angels told the disciples of his coming again. It is the same testimony in all these cases.

I don't know why people should not like to study the Bible and find out all about this precious doctrine of our Lord's return. Some have gone beyond prophecy, and tried to tell the very day he would come. Perhaps that is one reason why people don't believe this doctrine. He is coming, we know that; but just when he is coming we don't know. Matthew xxiv. 36 settles that. The angels don't know, and Christ says that even he doesn't know, but that is something the Father keeps to himself. If Christ had said, "I will not come back for two thousand years, none of his disciples would have begun to watch for him, but it is the proper attitude of a Christian to be always looking for his Lord's return. So God does not tell us when he is to come, but Christ tells us to watch. In this same chapter we find that he is to come unexpectedly and suddenly. In the twenty-seventh verse we have these words: "For as the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." And again in the forty-fourth verse. "Therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

Some people say that means death; but the word of God does not say it means death. Death is our enemy, but our Lord hath the keys of death. He has conquered death, hell, and the grave, and at any moment he may come to set us free from death and destroy our last enemy for us; so the proper state for a believer in Christ is waiting and watching for our Lord's return.

In the last chapter of John there is a text which seems to settle this matter. Peter asks the question about John. "Lord, what shall this man do? Jesus said unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me. Then went this saying abroad among the brethren that that disciple should not die. They did not think that the coming of the Lord meant death; there was a great difference between these two things in their minds. Christ is the Prince of Life; there is no death where he is; death flees at his coming; dead bodies sprang to life when he touched them or spoke to them. His coming is not death; he is the resurrection and the life; when he sets up his kingdom there is to be no death, but life forevermore.

There is another mistake, as you will find if you read your Bibles carefully. Some think that at the coming of Christ everything is to be all done up in a few minutes; but I do not so understand it. The first thing he is to do is to take his church out of the world. He calls the church his bride; and he says he is going to prepare a place for her. We may judge, says one, what a glorious place it will be from the length of time he is in preparing it, and when the place is ready he will come and take the church to himself.

In the closing verses of the fourth chapter of 1 Thessalonians, Paul says: "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so also them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. * * * We which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words." That is the comfort of the church. There was a time when I used to mourn that I should not be alive in the millennium; but now I expect to be in the millennium. Dean Alford says—almost everybody bows to him in the matter of interpretation—that he must insist that this coming of Christ to take his church to himself in the clouds is not the same event as his coming to judge the world at the last day. The deliverance of the church is one thing, judgment is another. Now I can't find any place in the Bible where it tells me to wait for signs of the coming of the millennium, as the return of the Jews, and such like, but it tells me to look for the coming of the Lord; to watch for it; to be ready at midnight to meet him, like the five wise virgins. The trump of God may be sounded for ought we know, before I finish this sermon—at any rate we are told that he will come like a thief in the night and at an hour when many look not for him.

Some of you may shake your heads and say, "Oh, well, that is too deep for most of us; such things ought not to be said before these young converts; only the very wisest characters, such as the ministers and the professors in the theological seminaries, can understand them." But, my friends, you find that Paul wrote about these things to those young converts among the Thessalonians, and he tells them to comfort one another with those words. Here in the first chapter of 1 Thessalonians Paul says, "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus which delivered us from the wrath to come." To wait for his Son; that is the true attitude of every child of God. If he is doing that he is ready for the duties of life, ready for God's work; aye, that makes him feel that he is just ready to begin to work for God. Then over in the next chapter (2 Thessalonians, 19), he says: For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" And again, in the third chapter at the thirteenth verse, "To the end that he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his Saints. Still again, in the fifth chapter, "For ye yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night." He has something to say about this same thing in every chapter; indeed I have thought this Epistle to the Thessalonians might be called the Gospel of Christ's coming again.

There are three great facts foretold in the Word of God: First, that Christ should come; that has been fulfilled. Second, that the Holy Ghost should come; that was fulfilled at Pentecost, and the church is able to testify to it by its experience of his saving grace. Third, the return of our Lord again from heaven. For this we are told to watch and wait "till he comes." Look at that account of the last hours of Christ with his disciples. What does Christ say to them? If I go away I will send death after you to bring you to me? I will send an angel after you? Not at all. He says: "I will come again and receive you unto myself." If my wife were in a foreign country, and I had a beautiful mansion all ready for her, she would a good deal rather I should come and bring her unto it than to have me send some one else to bring her. So the church is the Lamb's wife. He has prepared a mansion for his bride, and he promises for our joy and comfort that he will come himself and bring us to the place he has been all this while preparing.

My friends it is perfectly safe to take the Word of God just as we find it. If He tells us to watch, then watch! If he tells us to pray, then pray! If he tells us he will come again, wait for him! Let the church bow to the Word of God, rather than trying to find out how these things can be. "Behold, I come quickly," said Christ. "Even so come, Lord Jesus," should be the prayer of the church.

Take the account of the words of Christ at the communion table. It seems to me the devil has covered up the most precious thing about it. "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show forth His death till He come." But most people seem to think that the Lord's table is the place for self-examination and repentance, and making good resolutions. Not at all; you spoil it that way; it is to show forth the Lord's death, and we are to keep it up till he comes.

Some people say, "I believe Christ will come on the other side of the millenium." Where do you get it? I can't find it. The Word of God nowhere tells me to watch and wait for the coming of the millenium, but for the coming of the Lord. I don't find any place where God says the world is to grow better and better, and that Christ is to have a spiritual reign on earth of a thousand years. I find that the earth is to grow worse and worse, and that at length there is going to be a separation. "Two women grinding at a mill; one taken and the other left; two men in one bed; one taken and the other left. The church is to be translated out of the world, and if this fail we have two examples already, two representatives as we might say, in Christ's kingdom, of what is to be done for all his true believers. Enoch is the representative of the first dispensation, Elijah of the second, and, as a representative of the third dispensation, we have the Savior himself, who is entered into the Heavens for us, and became the first fruits of them that slept. We are not to wait for the great white throne judgment, but the glorified church is set on the throne with Christ, and to help to judge the world.

Now some of you think this is a new and strange doctrine, and that they who preach it are speckled birds. But let me tell you that most of the spiritual men in the pulpits of Great Britain are firm in this faith. Spurgeon preaches it. I have heard Newman Hall say that he knew no reason why Christ Christ might not come before he got through with his sermon. But in certain wealthy and fashionable churches, where they have the form of godliness, but deny the power thereof,—just the state of things which Paul declares shall be in the last days,—this doctrine is not preached or believed, They do not want sinners to cry out in their meeting, "What must I do to be saved?" They want intellectual preachers who will cultivate their taste, brilliant preachers who will rouse their imagination, but they don't want the preaching that has in it the power of the Holy Ghost. We live in the day of shams in religion. The church is cold and formal; may God wake us up! And I know of no better way to do it than to get the church to looking for the return of our Lord.

Some people say, "Oh, you will discourage the young converts if you preach that doctrine." Well, my friends, that hasn't been my experience. I have felt like working three times as hard ever since I came to understand that my Lord was coming back again. I look on this world as a wrecked vessel. God has given me a life-boat and said to me, "Moody, save all you can." God will come in judgment and burn up this world, but the children of God don't belong to this world; they are in it, but not of it, like a ship in the water. This world is getting darker and darker; its ruin is coming nearer and nearer; if you have any friends on this wreck unsaved, you had better lose no time in getting them off. But some one will say, "Do you then make the grace of God a failure?" No; grace is not a failure, but man is. The antediluvian world was a failure; the Jewish world was a failure; man has been a failure everywhere, when he has had his own way and been left to himself. Christ will save his church, but he will save them finally by taking them out of the world. Now don't take my word for it; look this doctrine up in your Bibles, and if you find it there, bow down to it and receive it as the Word of God. Take Matthew xxiv., 50; "The lord of that servant shall come when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder and appoint him his position with the hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Take 2nd Peter, third chapter, fourth and fifth verses: "There shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." Go out on the streets of Chicago and ask men about the return of our Lord, and that is just what they would say: "Ah, yes, the Lord delayeth his coming!"

"Behold, I come quickly," said Christ to John, and the last prayer in the Bible is, "Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Were the early Christians disappointed then? No; no man is disappointed who obeys the voice of God. The world waited for the first coming of the Lord; waited for 4,000 years, and then He came. He was here only thirty-three years and then He went away; but He left us a promise that He would come again; and as the world watched and waited for His first coming and did not watch in vain, so now to them who wait for His appearing shall He appear a second time unto salvation. Now let the question go round, "Am I ready to meet the Lord if he comes to-night?" "Be ye also ready for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh."

There is another thought I want to call your attention to, and that is: Christ will bring all our friends with Him when He comes. All who have died in the Lord are to be with Him when He comes in the clouds of heaven. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death has no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years." (Rev. xx., 6.) "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were past; this is the first resurrection (verse 5). That looks as if the church were to have a thousand years with Christ before His return to the final judgment, when Satan shall be cast out, and there shall be new heavens and new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness.

Now I want to give you some texts to study at home: I. Cor. ii., 26; Luke xix., 13; I. Tim., vi., 12; I. Thess., i., 7; James, v., 8; I. Thess., iv., 17-18. And so let us watch and wait till He comes.—Tribune.

Religious Intelligence

—Miss Fannie Townsley has been holding revival meetings in Williamstown, Vt., and a good work has been accomplished. She is assisted by Miss Buck of Wheaton, where Miss Townsley was educated.

—The evangelist Hammond went from Philadelphia to Massachusetts. He has been speaking in Newburyport.

—Many of the States contain exceptions to the Sabbath laws, by which those who "conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week" shall be exempt from the penalties of the law. In Massachusetts the question has been presented to the courts whether, on general principles, that class should be exempt from the penalties of the laws. The Supreme Court has sustained the lower court in its decision that Israelites must be held amenable to the laws of that State, regulating the observance of the Sabbath. The case grew out of an attempt to keep a store open on that day.

—Between 4,000 and 5,000 persons met in Centennial Hall, Peoria, Jan. 3, in memory of P. P. Bliss. The union services in which all the city churches joined, were very impressive. Remarks were made by Revs. Beavis, Stevens, Wilson and others, and a letter from D. L. Moody was read, expressing his regret at being unable to be present. The audience was deeply affected at times, and sorrow was universal and genuine.

—Rev. J. M. Snyder's labors with the Wesleyan church at Norton, Ill., have been signally blessed. During five week's protracted meeting there have been thirty-three conversions.

—A movement is on foot in the Scioto Conference of the United Brethren church to erect a monument to Bishop Edwards. Few men have been more worthy of being remembered.

—The noon-day meeting in the Carpenter Building 221 West Madison St., opened on Wednesday, the 17th. The following is the notice for the week of leaders and topics: Wednesday, Maj. Cole, subject: Prayer; Thursday, the Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D. D.; Friday, Tony Delight, subject: Gospel Temperance; Saturday, the Rev. J. P. Stoddard, subject: Sunday-school Lesson.

—Sabbath, Jan. 7th, was an important day among the Presbyterian as well as other churches of Chicago. The Third Church, Dr. Kittridge's, gathered in 161 new members, of whom 126 were admitted on profession with 42 baptisms. Thirteen hundred members partook of the communion, and the church building was densely crowded. The Fifth, Dr. Thompson's, received sixty, of whom forty-nine were on profession. The Sixth, Rev. H. T. Miller's, received eighty-two new members, fifty on profession. The First, Dr. Mitchell's, received twenty-six at the parent church, and nearly as many at the Railroad Mission. Reunion, Rev. J. H. Walker's, received seventeen. Westminister Church, Rev. E N. Barrett's, received thirty-five. The Fourth, Dr. French, received twenty-three. The Forty-first Street Church, Rev. Mr. Wells, received thirteen. The Welch Presbyterian, Rev. Mr. Harries, received eleven. The First German, Rev. Mr. Hager, received seven. The Presbyterian gain in all was about 500 for that one Sabbbath. On last Sabbath the Second church, Dr. J. Monroe Gibson, received nearly 100 new members.

—A memorial service of intense interest was held in the 1st Congregational church here on Sabbath evening in respect to Prof. Bliss. Major Whittle and Dr. Goodwin spoke and a partly finished hymn left by Mr. Bliss was sung. Mr. Stebbins, the singer from Boston, will accompany Maj. Whittle in his evangelical labors.

—The Cheshire Presbytery, Pa., adopted the plan of having two ministers visit each church and hold a four day's meeting. The result at Cochransville was seventy-five conversions.

—A new college is projected by the Nebraska Conference of the United Brethren to be located at Fairbury, Neb., and will be opened in the spring. The Board of Trustees have accepted a plan of building which will cost about $15,000. Material is now being put on the ground. About $10,000 have been subscribed.

—Rev. Geo. H. Varce of Good Hope, Ill., closed a four week's meeting lately during which there were a number of conversions. Rev. W. C. Smith, agent of Westfield College was one of his assistants in the work.

—Among the late additions to the Congregational churches in Chicago the Leavitt St. church has received fifty-nine, forty on profession; Union Park fifty-four, thirty-eight being on profession.

On last Sabbath Dr. Goodwin of the First church received 147 about 100 of whom were on profession and 46 were baptized. Fifty or sixty of these new members were from the Sabbath school.

—At the last regular monthly meeting of the Baptist pastors of the city and vicinity additions of seventy-eight by baptism and forty-two by letter were reported.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hnndreds of yonng men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

Dnring the year ending July 1st, 1876 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratnitously sent ont, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of onr most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who wonld be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."

THE ANTI-MASON'S SCRAP BOOK,

CONSISTING OF 21 CYNOSURE TRACTS.

In this book are the views of more than a Score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of Secret Societies.

The dangerous tendency and positive evil of organized Secrecy is here shown by the most varied and powerful arguments and illustrations that have ever been given to the public.

Lecturers and others who wish to find the best arguments against the Lodge, should send for this book.

Those who wish to circulate Antimasonic Tracts ought to have the book to select from.

The Work of the Hour.

TEN THOUSAND SUBSCRIBERS.

In six weeks from the date of this paper,

MARCH FIRST,

we intend to report the number of subscribers for the Cynosure.

Facts are worth more than estimates. Five clubs of ten, and three of five or more for a year, together with sixty-seven renewals and new subscriptions sent singly or in numbers of less than five each, and a number of discontinuances (they have not been counted) are the facts for the last week.

Rev. A. Osgood, Lostant, Ill., sends a club of ten and writes: "The light is increasing in this community. Believing as we do that Mr. Ronayne is right in advising all reformers to circulate the Cynosure we have made extra efforts this week and herewith send you fifteen dollars. * * * Will try and send you as many more names before the year closes."

Will all others who approve of Mr. Ronayne's advice, who have not already followed it, put forth "extra efforts?" Nothing less than "EXTRA EFFORTS" on the part of many of our readers will increase the circulation of the paper to ten thousand.

Amos Forlow, Hicksville, O., sends a club of ten and writes:

"I consider this a failure on my part, for I did hope that I could do much better. Our good cause is making many friends here. A number of men here told me that they had voted the last ticket for lodge power." If all our readers would fail as honorably, the Cynosure mail list would soon reach ten thousand; but persevere. Ask God and your neighbors to take hold and help and send in another club of ten during the next six weeks.

M. Woodward, Adams Center, N. Y., sends a club of ten and writes:

"I feel an interest in the good and glorious work you are engaged. in. * * * I have at last succeeded in getting up a club of ten by spending considerable time and effort. I find a good many Anti-masons not pocket deep." Until a reform reaches a man's pocket it has not taken a very sure hold of his soul.

Alexander Baldridge, Varick, N. Y., sends a club of ten.

Rev. M. A. Gault, Mediapolis, Iowa, sends in a club of ten and writes:

"Enclosed find $15 for this club of ten. I believe Ronayne is right. We cannot aid the cause better than by circulating the Cynosure. The Masons here eagerly devour it when it is left anywhere within their reach, and it cannot fail to open their eyes. There has been more talk here on Masonry since Ronayne's visit than for ten years before."

Hiram Summy, Pleasantville, Iowa, sends five names for a year and five for six months and writes: "I am going to try to get ten for a club. If I cannot get ten I will get as many as I can." J. T. Cooper, Allegheny, Pa., renews his subscription and writes. "I feel that I should be in this way contributing to the support of the cause which this paper represents." Philip Bacon, Weatogue, Conn., writes: "I never found it so hard to get subscribers as at the present time and I never felt the need of an extended circulation of the Cynosure as now. I expect to canvass several weeks for the Cynosure and the cause of truth and righteousness. * * But I believe this is a good time for reform work.

Certainly it is a good time, and the harvest is plenteous. Let each do with his might what his hands find to do.

A friend from New Jersey writes of a copy of the Cynosure, "This is the first copy I have seen, in fact I did not know that such a paper was in being. IT IS JUST THE THING THE TIMES DEMAND."

Many more friends are ignorant of the existence of the Cynosure, who would hail it with joy. More still are ignorant of its merits, and more still of their duty to help support it.

Have you sent in one club? Can you secure another? Let all who can put in their best efforts during the next six weeks. Subscribe, subscribe, SUBSCRIBE! Make that your watchword when speaking to others of the Cynosure The cause of Christ, the cause of humanity demands a wide circulation for the paper. We know of no more effectual weapons under the blessing of God to use in this warfare against the powers of darkness, at the present time, than clubs, CLUBS, CLUBS! Large clubs if you can get them, but clubs of any size will help. We wish every town where the paper goes would furnish one club at least.

Different seasons of the year bring different classes of work. All who examine into this work see that now is the time to secure new subscriptions for the Cynosure. This is emphatically

THE WORK OF THE HOUR.

A friend renews his subscription and writes: "If you do not hear from me again send the paper no longer than the money pays for, as that is the way I prefer to do business."

Our rule has been to discontinue subscriptions when the time was out, but we have suspended this rule for the present, as nearly half the whole list of subscriptions expire during the present months and many are delaying their renewals a little for the purpose of securing clubs. If your time is out and you do not wish to renew please notify us.

We have a large number of supplements containing "Freemasonry at a Glance" on hand. They are sent free when ordered for canvassing purposes. For general distribution at 75 cents per hundred by mail post paid, or 50 cents per hundred by express.

Canvass for the paper for Christ's sake and you will be well repaid for the trouble.

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK,

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On

TIN ROOFS

our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

BRICK WALLS.

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

TO ALL SECEDING MASONS.

BRETHREN.—I propose that we, who have been members of the Masonic order, meet in general convention in some centrally located city as early as practicable; that we hold our convention six successive days; that we work a degree of Masonry each day or evening, and that we issue from that convention an address to the American people. All I feel will see at once the propriety of this movement and I have no doubt will do everything in their power to make it a glorious success. Think the whole matter over, brethren, and communicate your views through the Cynosure. Now let us all work and work quickly else we may not have time to work at all

Though not through grips, still fraternally yours. EDMOND RONAYNE

Topics of the Time.

Before Mr. Moody started for Boston he held a social meeting at Farwell Hall with the reformed inebriates who have been made to hope for this world and the next through the agency of the special meetings. Some four hundred of these men were present, and experienced a mutual joy in feeling in themselves, and seeing in others the wonderful effect of Divine grace. Never in the North-west was there so great a work for temperance, so thorough, honest and lasting as this revival has accomplished. Mr. Sawyer, who came on from New York to assist in this special effort, will soon go to Boston and probably two or three of those who came out here, some of whom are talented and eloquent men.

The present famine in the Madras district of the Indian possessions has called out again the paternal offices of the British government for their relief. Already 1,200,000 persons are receiving aid and the number will undoubtedly be 3,000,000 before another harvest. It is estimated that over $30,000,000 will be spent in this way. The recollection of the Irish famine shows cause for gratitude in the contrast. This relief will be used in the most judicious way in employing the people upon such public works as will be of permanent benefit to the whole country; and while thus standing between the people and death their labor will be made useful in preventing future suffering from famine. This wise and humane course of the British government is sufficient explanation for the extravagant and joyful demonstrations of the natives when Victoria was officially proclaimed empress of India.

The Ashtabula horror had a sad sequel last week in the suicide of chief engineer Collins of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern road. The coroner's investigation is daily strengthening the belief that the bridge was faultily constructed, under the superintendence of Mr. Stone, then President of the road, Mr. Collins not appearing to have had any responsibility for the work. He may however have known or suspected the weakness of the structure, and as Webster says, "suicide is confession." Mr. Collins was a man of nervous temperament and the disaster preyed deeply upon his mind, so that the desperate act may have been done in a sudden insane mood.

Henry Clay, the Kentucky statesman, it is said, was a Freemason, and was Grand Master of the State in 1820. The last time he seems to have publicly officiated in a Masonic gathering was in 1822 when he is said to have presided over a National Masonic Convention in Washington City on the 9th of March. Though he lived over thirty years after this the record is silent regarding his Masonic career. Did the developments of the Morgan tragedy make a seceder of the great Kentuckian?

"We believe that God controls the destiny of nations, and recognize his goodness to us in the past. We acknowledge that as a people we have 'forgotten his precepts' and thereby forfeited our claim to his protection. Therefore our existence is seriously imperiled." Thus begins a call to all Christians in the country to set apart the 14th of February, the day on which the electoral votes are to be counted, for a season of national prayer to God for his mercy upon our land. The suggestion is good but would be better if humiliation, fasting and confession were added. If we as a people have forfeited the protection of God, the exigency demands sincere humiliation and repentance.

The compromise presented to Congress for the disposition of the election difficulties, naturally has the undivided attention of all classes. The arrangement as condensed in our news column, proposes an arbitration such as has never before been thought of in the history of the country. No hint of the necessity of such an arrangement is made in the Constitution, which, notwithstanding its rigidity should cover every possible case of the kind. Although planned with much care and with such popular features that it will probably pass both Senate and House, (it is essentially a revolutionary measure.) The Constitution evidently refers the decision of all questions of election to the States; the electoral college is a provision to secure the vote of States in their individual capacity and allows each State to direct how these electors shall be chosen. It gives no power to Congress to correct any irregularities or frauds, but simply provides for the counting of the electoral votes in the presence of a joint session. Thus that instrument seems to us to read. The arrangement seems therefore unconstitutional and revolutionary and its adoption must be made in the face of the grave results that may follow. We do not care to make this statement because the partisan press of both parties are opposed to the compromise as they seem to be On the other hand the independent politicians and the business men of the country are glad to accept it as a relief to the disastrous uncertainty now paralyzing trade and legislation. Relief from the election perplexity is most "devoutly to be wished," but we cannot afford to sacrifice too much for it.

THE WEAKNESS WHICH EVER PREVAILS.

"And he halted upon his thigh."—Gen. xxxii. 31.
"My strength is made perfect in weakness."—2 Cor. xii. 9
"Out of weakness were made strong."—Heb. ix. 34.

If thou hast met God's angel fair,
Mid clouds of darkest night,
If thou hast wept and wrestled there,
And he has brought thee light;
Then with that light which driveth all,
His love hath made thy pride to fall.
And though thy heart is strong and free,
Yet thou hast learnt this mystery,
That strength in weakness lives.

If thou hast been where tempests hail,
And threatening storms sit lower,
Hast known the any land the foil,
Stood in temptation's hour;
If through it all kept thou hast wept,
The beetling path of truth hast kept;
If in the lull, thy watchful ear
The voice of love hath bright thee cheer,
Then thou didst stoop to win.

If now, where'er thy steps may tend,
Thy faith beholds a well known form,
And by thy side thou hast a friend,
The angel of the storm;
Then he who gives victorious grace,
That crown upon thy head to place,
Hath kill'd thy own strength in the strife,
And given his own vega life,
In which thy faith doth live.

And thus, although a Prince with God,
Self cannot lift its head;
For thou hast pass'd beneath the rod,
And thine own life is dead,
And though a crown is on thy brow,
The hand which gave it laid thee low,
And he who raised thee from the ground
Through thy own victory gave a wound,

In which thy strength hath root.
A strength the birth of sorrow's night,
Fair child of many woes,
That throws its life on God's own might,
And thus sets at its foes,
O weakness, last born, yet most true,
Each foe without, within subdued
True source of strength, and only known
To those who wield and wear a crown,
All heaven shall yet be thine!

THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

This body of Christians, venerable alike for its age and its devotion to moral reforms, has for the last fifteen or twenty years been undergoing a change in some respects, and no little uneasiness is felt as to the result by many of its members.

What may be called the Progressive School hold that the spirit of entire consecration which was the animating principle of Fox, Penn, and the early Quakers, has long since given place in a large degree, to formalism; that the slow progress they have made as a church, and the heresies that have arisen among them have resulted from a decline in spiritual life. It is held that the changed circumstances under which we live demand a modification of the usages of two hundred years ago; and that true consistency requires a cheerful acceptance of what God, in his providence has shown to be useful as a means of leading men to Christ. Hence revival meetings, in which singing, the anxious-seat, and other methods of Christian work have been largely adopted, many hopeful conversions and much apparent prosperity to the church has been the result.

On the other hand it is held by what may be called the Old School Quakers, that while it is true that the church is in great need of a genuine revival, yet the end will not be secured by such means; that the old land-marks are being departed from; that unworthy members are being received into the church; and that statistics show an actual decline in morals as the result of the new measures.

There is doubtless truth on both sides. It is true that in the world's great harvest, the Society of Friends has an important mission. She cannot afford to be slothful or careless, and that a great want of the church is a more earnest, active and aggressive piety.

I cannot but warmly sympathize who those faithful men and women that are laboring to awaken the church to a higher life are teaching anew the doctrine of holiness as taught by Paul, and Fox, and Penn, and whose hearts yearn for the perishing multitudes that are outside of the church. But I perceive (or think I do) that there is imminent danger of departing from what has always been the crowning glory of this Society of Friends. viz.; that they applied Christianity to all the affairs of life, and if they shall in their zeal for growth and outward prosperity be led to accept a mere emotional and sentimental religion for practical righteousness; if they shall fail to insist on a religion which makes men abhor war and oppression, and which teaches them simplicity and plainness in speech, manners, and dress; if they shall neglect to inculcate simplicity and candor as the essential elements of true spiritual life, and which is utterly inconsistent with the cunning craftiness of lodge secretism, then they will have done incalculable injury to the cause of Christianity.

In the world's great battle we cannot spare the Society of Friends, nor afford to have them forget their distinctive principles. May they have the wisdom of the Lord to direct.

Is Sin Confessed in Masonic Prayer?

According to Mackey's ritual and Webb's Monitor, Freemasonry in its first three degrees has no prayer in which there is confession of sin, but it has that confession in the "prayer on opening a council of Royal Masters," page 573, Mackey Ritualist. But alas, in it there is no allusion to Christ as the way to the Father; it ignores him as The Truth, and presumes to ask acceptance for its unhallowed offering of a dead Masonry instead of Christ himself who lives forevermore. How any Christian can continue in such a brotherhood and take part in such a worship, is one of those inexplicable enigmas which we used to imagine were in vague only in the dark ages, which were as consistent as the assertion that slavery and liberty are one, or that more light is found at midnight than in the blaze of a noonday sun. Freemasons are very sensitive on this subject, and any reader may test the fact by asking the same question of six Masons separately, and he will probably receive six different answers of this character: The first may say, "You know nothing about it." You may tell the others who bring out that sterotyped snub to inquirers that you want some other answer and the second may simply deny the fact and say, "It is not so." The third tries to foil and says that prayer is not confession. The fourth that "they do confess sin in every prayer." The fifth that "they do pray in the name of Christ," and the sixth that they "do not so pray, for Jews and others would be offended and the forms were in existence before Christ came." In every such answer the reader must remember that the apparently candid Mason who speaks with such assurance is under oath to conceal Masonic truth, and therefore justifies the evasions and falsehood uttered under mental reservation.

Have we too much freedom? Is it the case that our people like the Israelites demand a king? Some one to whom they will bow with abject submission while flattered with the sound of "liberty and equality?" Nothing can be more self-evident than that the precious boon of civil and religious liberty on this continent is endangered by its professed friends. We do not charge the masses of Masonic dupes with such a design but it requires no special gift of prophecy to tell what is clear as the future fruit from present seed planted, watered and cared for by its gardners. The sentiment of the Masonic prayer is "Lord I thank thee that I am not as other men," or, and that we can enjoy the things of this life and the next also if we follow faithfully the rules of Freemasonry which has no need of Christ as a Saviour from sin.

HOMO.

The Difference.—Winslow and Brent.

BY J. H. H. WOODWARD.

Rev. Mr. Winslow of Boston, Massachusetts, who committed heavy forgeries there and then escaped to Belgium, is a Knight Templar; while Charles J. Brent of Louisville, Kentucky, who committed heavy forgeries there and then escaped to England, is a non-Mason. While Mr. Winslow has been neither captured nor extradited, nor is likely to be, but, on the contrary, is walking the soil of the British realm, to speak Masonically, a free and upright man and Mason (the term upright, as used in this connection, implying a carriage of erect and fearless posture, boding no evil, because the Blue Lodge god in whom the Mason puts his trust, is ample to protect him from all harm and impending danger), Mr. Brent has been captured, extradited and brought back to Louisville, Kentucky, and there placed in durance vile, to await his forthcoming trial for a crime in every essential particular parallel to that for which Masonry decrees Mr. Winslow shall not be tried and made to suffer.

While Mr. Winslow's Masonic character is broadly and well known, the Masonic Grand Lodge reports of Kentucky, of which State Mr. Brent is a native, utterly fail to disclose his name as a member of the ancient and honorable fraternity at all; and, after the most careful examination, it can not be found upon the lists of the Louisville lodges, the place where, according to his own statement, he was born and had always lived up to the time he absconded with his ill-gotten gains to England. While Belgium, the country to which Mr. Winslow fled, has no extradition treaty with the United States, England, the country to which Mr. Brent betook himself, has. While the former fugitive from justice seemed to have tempered his crime with acts of consummate discretion, the latter evidently acted without any method in his madness whatsoever. Mr. Winslow, in taking refuge in Belgium, made a temporary sojourn among a non-English speaking people, of whose language he probably knew as little as King Solomon, in his day and generation, knew of the then unborn English. And in making his residence in Belgium, brief though it was, Mr. Winslow could but have felt, for the time, the uncongeniality and loneliness of his situation. But it was necessary however, to be endured, and probably imposed upon him by his admiring and keen-sighted Masonic friends of the "hub," as an essential means whereby to secure his eventual personal safety against the grappling talons of outraged public law. Like a prisoner awaiting ransom, here in Belgium Mr. Winslow remained cooped up as it were, until matters could be Masonically arranged for him in England, when, with Masonic assurances of safety and protection, he took his departure from Belgium for that more congenial land, where in due time he safely arrived and yet remains in spite of extradition treaties and all forms of law whatsoever, apparently as secure as if treaties and law had no existence at all—and the powers of earth were not constituted for his government, accountability and punishment. And in this immunity from criminal atonement Mr. Winslow and his whole fraternity glory, as if it were a divine right vouchsafed by God himself, and a matter of forbidden question to the whole outside world to question into.

The history of these cases, particularly that of Winslow's, since his advent in England, is somewhat familiar to the public mind. So soon as it became known in this country that Winslow had arrived in England, steps were at once taken to have him remanded under the extradition treaty, to the United States for trial. But the legal demand for his person was met by a Masonic quibble in the British Secretary's office, which, for the time being, gave Mr. Winslow the utmost open protection, and himself and his whole fraternity the happiest satisfaction. The British Secretary, ostensibly in the cause of public justice, but really and covertly in furtherance of Masonic protection to Winslow, demanded as a preliminary to the surrender of the persons of Winslow and Brent, that the United States should guarantee that these criminals, when extradited, should not be tried for any causes or crimes other than those named in the papers upon which their surrender was to be made. Against this new and unheard of demand the American authorities at first rebelled and remonstrated, but backed, as it was, by a recent act of the British Parliament, probably passed in the interest of Masonry or at its bidding, they, for some unannounced reason, finally gave the guarantee—when lo and behold! Mr. Brent, who was unable to give the Grand Hailing Sign of Distress, was at once nabbed and hurried back to this country, while Winslow, basking in the sunbeams of Masonic light, caught a glimpse of approaching danger and at once retired to the shades of Masonic privacy. Thus the matter stands at the present moment. That the Masonic officials of England could, if so inclined, unearth Mr. Winslow's retreat in one-half hour, there is but little reason to doubt, but having been taught to conceal and never reveal a brother's trust, such deed will never be consummated, and Winslow will, therefore, remain inviolate and secure in the enjoyment of his shameful criminal spoils.

What finally led to the guarantee on the part of the American authorities, after having at first stubbornly refused to give it, is probably one of the many Masonic secrets wrapped in the history of American diplomacy, which will never be disclosed to the public eye. It is not improbable that the victims of Brent's robberies at Louisville, Kentucky, were Masons, and that for their sakes the guarantee was given. It is said, since Brent's return, that he has restored to the rightful owners, the full proceeds of his robberies, and that they are now all leniently inclined towards him. These two cases clearly show that laws and treaties as to outsiders are all-powerful, but as to Masons are as brittle as straw.

—In a recent sermon Mr. Moody related this interesting incident:

"I never preach about restitution but some one who hears me makes restitution, and that shows that God owns his truth. The other night, after I had been preaching on this subject, a young man came into the inquiry-room as if he had a mountain on top of him. I called one of our business men to talk with him, and it was the very man from whom that inquirer had stolen money while in his employ several years before. The poor fellow confessed his crime then and there. His old employer knelt in prayer with him, and he rose up saved, rejoicing in pardon both from God and man."

"A Ghastly Joke."

The words which we use for a caption to this article are taken from one of the Masonic organs of the country, a newspaper published in Vermont. That paper denounces as a "ghastly joke" the act of some Democrats who gave a dead muskrat a formal funeral service, and burial in one of the principal graveyards of the State, thus simulating the "honors" which they thought due to the Republican party.

What puzzles us in this case of revolting barbarism is, to know what weight to attach to the indignant words of the Masonic editor against such desecration of church yards. Has not the editor of a Masonic organ sense enough to know that where characters of exalted titles like the Masons, set the example of desecrating grave-yards with mock funeral ceremonies, political speech-making, floral demonstrations etc., that the baser sort of men will be quick to catch the infection, and make use of sacred subjects for bad purposes? The editor of the Masonic organ pretends to be shocked by the muskrat demonstration; but there are other persons whose religious sensibilities are quite as much shocked by the Masonic, Grand Army demonstration over the dead.

This pretence of being indignant and shocked at what one sets the example in himself, is one of the sly, crafty traits of jesuitry, which seeks to gain the credit of holiness while covertly urging men on to wickedness. It is possible that a Masonic leader may not know any better than to lend himself as a tool to such jesuitical purposes, but it is only by laying claims to ignorance that he can come off whole with honest pretentions. An intelligent leader cannot pursue a course that leads men into revolting depravity, and then claim the honest man's right of being indignant at it.

The editor of a Masonic organ devotes his intellect and his character, such as they are, to unhinging the religious ideas of the people. He brings forward religious ceremonies which are hollow, cynical meekness, and deliberate blasphemies against the Christian religion; he places himself and his preposterous Masonic ideas far above that religion, and looks down upon it with mingled commiseration and contempt; and then, with all the craft of the common bawd, wonders that coarser men than he should follow his example, and carry it out to its logical consequences.

Ghastly joke indeed! The most ghastly joke that we know of is Freemasonry itself. Men who have played it off on the American people, are not fit for offices of trust; for if they will so impose upon the people once, what security is there that they will not do it again?

American.

Ye shall be Witnesses.

The following from the Armory, published at the Scriptural Tract Repository, Boston, contains an ably written argument which may be justly applied to the testimony of men who have escaped from Freemasonry:

The province of a witness is to testify what he knows. He is not to tell what he has thought, or inferred, or imagined, or supposed, or heard from the lips of others; he is simply to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so far as he himself knows, concerning the matters which are at issue. If he passes beyond this limit of personal knowledge, he is checked and rebuked; his opinions are not desired; his hearsay reports are not admitted.

The apostles of Jesus Christ were witnesses. When he had left this world he declared that they should perform that service on his behalf. They were to tell the world what they knew of him. They had no theories to press, no metaphysical distinctions, no fine spun philosophies to advance, but they had the simple story of matters that came beneath their personal knowledge. They were to speak of Jesus of Nazareth, who was born in Bethlehem of Judea; who was baptized of John in Jordan; who was tempted of Satan in the wilderness; and who was during a series of years, their leader, teacher, guide and friend. They were to tell what they had seen and known of him. Their testimony was concerning what their eyes had seen, their ears had heard, and their hands had handled, of the Word of Life, which was made manifest in the flesh. 1 John i. 1, 2.

When John the Baptist, harassed by persecution and imprisonment, and oppressed by doubts, sent to inquire of Jesus if he was really the Messiah that was to come, he made no answer, but simply bade messengers to go and tell the things which they had seen and heard, how the blind saw, the deaf heard, the sick were healed, the dead raised, devils cast out, and the poor had the Gospel preached to them.

There was no pretence, no profession, no argumentation nor theorizing needed, but simply the bald, plain statement of visible, unmistakable facts. Thus also the things concerning which the apostles testified, were matters concerning which there was no possibility of their being mistaken. They could not be deceived, they either told the truth, or were wilful and corrupt perjurers. The things narrated were of such a nature that all deception was out of the question. Hence the apostle makes the issue squarely: "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain, yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not." 1 Cor. xv. 14, 15.

The simple question then is, were the apostles and their associates perjurers? It is true that men have, in times past, perjured themselves; but was it ever known that twelve men combined together to utter absolute falsehoods and perjuries? Was it ever known that hundreds and thousands of men thus combined for purposes of perjury? And in cases where men have committed this crime, motives have existed; it has been in expectation of some supposed good, it has been in hope of advancement or honor, or wealth, that they have violated their consciences or their oaths. But whoever heard of five hundred men of blameless life, spotless character, chaste and temperate habits, combining, that by perjury they might purchase poverty; that by perjury they might win reproach; that by perjury they might insure persecution; that by perjury they might become the filth of the world, and the off-scouring of all things; that by perjury they might come down from positions of honor, turn aside from occupations of profit, forsake friendships and pleasures, and joys in which they delighted, and instead of them might secure to themselves mocking and scoffing, and scourging and violent death, as their sole and complete reward? The world has never seen a company of men perjuring themselves for such gains as these. The world never will see such a sight as long as it shall exist.

The men who testified concerning Jesus Christ were not perjurers; they were virtuous, quiet, peaceful, honest, temperate men. They could but speak the things which they did know, and testify the things which they had seen. They had walked with Jesus of Nazareth up and down the hills and vales of Galilee, Judea and Samaria; they had seen him in public and private life; they had heard with wonder the gracious words that he spoke; they had seen demons depart at his command, and pains and infirmities vanish at his word; they had seen his power over sickness and over death itself; they had beheld the sheeted corpse rise from the bier on which it was borne, or come forth from its silent resting place in the sepulcher; they had seen the winds and the waves lie hushed beneath his word; they had witnessed his power over the animate and inanimate creation; and having seen all this they had followed him onward to the end of his earthly career. They had seen him betrayed, arrested, mocked, scourged, crowned with thorns, and led out to die; they had seen him crucified upon the rugged cross; they had watched the anguish of his pale countenance, and heard the last wailing cry that was wrung from his breaking heart; they had seen the sepulcher where he was laid, and had mourned for him as dead; they had seen him again, risen from the tomb and walking forth amid the sons of men; their hearts had thrilled with his words as he opened to them the Scriptures: they had walked with him and talked with him; they had listened to him and spoken with him; they had handled him; their fingers had found the nail prints in his hands, and they had thrust the hand in the spear wound in his side; they had seen him—more than five hundred of them at one time—after his resurrection; and they had followed him, until standing on the heights of Bethany, they received his parting blessing, and saw him wafted upward to the skies.

And these and other similar facts which came beneath their notice of which they were eye-witnesses, and concerning which they could not possibly be mistaken, were the facts that they were commanded to testify among all nations. They were to go to earth's remotest bounds, not to spread some vague theories, or to inculcate some mysterious dogmas; they were not to busy themselves with things beyond their reach; but they were simply to testify to those around them concerning the things they themselves had observed. They were to tell how God's message had reached their hearts; how God's messenger had unfolded the divine mind to the lost world; how in patience, and compassion, and in tenderness and long-suffering he had won their hearts, and the hearts of humanity around him; how he had called those that labored and were heavy laden to come to him and find rest; how he had triumphed over pain, and conquered disease, cast out demons and vanquished death.

Freemasonry Means Peace.

"Freemasonry means peace—the Gospel of Christ means peace—and hence there is no antagonism between the two." So says the Suspension Bridge Journal. Wonderful argument! Who can defeat such a conclusion? How truthful is the old proverb, "A drowning man will grasp at a straw." When men try to support error, every effort but sinks them the more in difficulty, and proves the more conclusively the unsoundness of the system. The argument before us is about as sound as the corrupt institution it is employed to support.

The Confederate army of our late rebellion sought peace; the Federal army sought peace; so, of course, there was no antagonism between the two. Notwithstanding they were continually warring one with the other, cutting one another down like grass before the sickle. The South sought peace with slavery, while the North sought it with freedom to all men, whether black or white.

Christ seeks peace, and the devil seeks peace,—hence there is no antagonism between them, so our Masonic defenders would have it. What school-boy cannot see the fallacy of such an argument. Satan, like Freemasonry, seeks peace by letting all his children act out their evil nature in every sin and crime, while Christ in the Gospel seeks peace by removing sin out of the heart. This always has caused war between the elements of sin and righteousness, and always will. Freemasonry means darkness; the Gospel of Christ means light. Freemasonry means bondage, the Gospel of Christ freedom to do right. Freemasonry means murder, the Gospel of Christ means life. There is as much antagonism between Masonry and the Gospel of Christ, as there is between light and darkness, life and death.

Christ came not to send peace but a sword. The Gospel is at peace with all righteousness, but at war with all iniquity. Freemasonry like the old Jewish prophets, cries, Peace, peace, when there is no peace. It is wondrous how brazen-faced men are to claim a union between Masonry and the Gospel of Christ, when they have turned Christ out of doors and placed a "tyler" at the door with a drawn sword to guard it, lest he might enter. All who will not stoop so low as to disgrace their manhood, and consent to worship an "unknown God" like their brother heathen of old,—consent to believe all the vagaries and tomfooleries of ancient forms and ceremonies, the delight of "the dark ages" but denounce the same, "are subverting Christianity," "me n war." May God add to their number!

Our prayer to God is, that the reader may never have the sad lot of entering "The Grand Lodge above;" which interpreted means: The Bottomless Pit.—Free Methodist.

Reform News.

Missouri Lectures.

To the friends of the Christian Association opposed to secret societies:—By a unanimous vote of the convention of Christians and friends opposed to secret societies held at Chillicothe, Missouri, August 30th 1876, the Rev. E. G. Cooper of the M. E. Church, was chosen General Agent and Lecturer for the Association. For some time after the adjournment of the convention Mr. Cooper addressed himself with vigor to the work, and satisfaction of those for whom he labored. On account of severe illness he was compelled to leave the field for a season. But now he is in good health and is ready to respond to calls that may be sent him in any part of the State. The friends of the reform are too apt to think that with the passing by of the election that efforts in this direction should cease. But that is a mistake. If there has ever been a time in the history of this government when true reform was needed, that time is now. We are about to realize the fact, that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap" as a nation—seeds of corruption that have been sown in other days have grown up and a harvest of trouble is likely to be gathered, and happy will be the man that comes out of the field in safety. Now, while the corruption of the political parties is so apparent, and while the decline in godliness is too painfully apparen generally in the land, is time for men of true hearts and strong purposes to do right, to come forward, and in the name of God set up their banner, and strike for reform that means more than a parade of empty words, or even fair promises. And now, let all who feel the need of assistance in the work open a correspondence with either the Corresponding Secretary, G. W. Needles, or with E. G. Cooper, Agent and Lecturer at Albany, Gentry county, Missouri.—American Freeman.

To the State Convention and Back.

Albion, Ind., Jan. 10, 1877.

On the 15th of Dec., 1876, I started to "hold the fort" of truth and righteousness and although the odds are fearfully strong and the intense cold placed me at a disadvantage yet I still am firm, and if all the friends in Indiana would shout "Hold the Fort," the Lord in his own good time would bring victory, and bring it to stay. Being in my own conveyance I faced the coldest weather I ever saw, stopping with and trying to encourage the friends in Whitley, Wabash, Miami, Howard, Tipton, Hamilton and Marion counties, and in those counties we have thousands of friends to our cause: many of them have full faith, while others are discouraged because they do not see error tumbling all at once. Truth makes its way slowly; the masses do not receive it readily. The history of the world shows that reforms move at times, and at others scarcely seem to move. My friends, let me say to you, stand firm. Let us move under Gen. Leminowski's marching orders, Forward! brethren, forward! The cause is gaining strength, in many places where the subject has not been publicly discussed, the people are talking it and sooner or later this under-current must set itself free and blaze out to give light that will make the surrounding darkness not only visible but dispel it.

It has been my good fortune to find quite a number of persons that have shaken off the lodge fetters and I am satisfied that many preachers are quietly dropping out, with perhaps not enough moral courage to publicly say so. Friends, stand firm, for these will sooner or later speak out and give us moral aid. Another fact should encourage us is that most places where Christians have stood firm for a whole and pure Gospel have been enjoying revivals in their churches. Do not be baffled or deceived by the cant phrase, "You are disturbing the church." The history of the world shows that disturbances have often preceded the most glorious revivals the church has ever had. Let every church that has a rule against secretism stand by the rule and those that have not give no peace till they get one. Let every church member who desires to be consistent utterly refuse to pay preachers or sustain them in any way who have the mark of "image of the beast" upon them. The way to bring them to their senses is to make them believe you are in earnest.

And now, my friends, I got to the State Association after many hardships and many pleasant encounters. One of the latter was the meeting of Bro. Hinman at Plainfield. Bro. H. manifests great industry and tact in his work and unlimited faith in the Lord's doing everything for him; but if the Lord had anything to do with his books being stolen from the post-office, Bro. H. will certainly agree with Cowper, "He moves in a mysterious way." I believe that he will be blessed for his faithfulness. I found Father Whettson at Valley Mills in full faith and ready to reprove those who chew tobacco. I also found Presten Allen who has fought and suffered for truth's sake, but was glad to see that he faints not by the way; his family are in harmony with him. I was much pleased with the kindness and uniform tenderness shown to the aged father by the whole family. I believe that correct principles mold the whole character; I thought I discovered this in the regard with which he treated his old horse and a cat twenty-two years old that moved about as though he felt himself an important appendage to the family.

I made other very pleasant acquaintances in the vicinity of West Newton, and I think the local effect of our meeting was good. Revs. Rieytch, Hinman, McNary, myself and others made addresses, and Past Master Ronayne as usual did good work in his department. Peter Rich was also there, who by his quiet and earnest presence helps us very much.

And now, dear friends, in every part of the State, come to the rescue; sustain the work in every way you can. Write to me. Open the way for work in your several places. Work yourselves; get others to work. Don't send for me to go a hundred miles without any compensation. Let the coming year tell against the works of darkness. If you will correspond with me I will supply you with lectures, either myself or by others. Indiana has a dozen good lecturers who ought to be kept busy. Hoping to meet you either personally or through the Cynosure, I am yours truly.

S. L. Cook.

The Seceder's Convention and Anti-masonic Churches.

S. Edwards, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y.

Editor of the Cynosure:—This is the first article that I have written directly for your paper; not that I have not been interested in the cause it advocates, but some how my work has seemed to lay in other directions. I have time now for but a few lines.

1. Bro. Ronayne's call for a seceder's convention. I think the idea a good one, but for one am not much in sympathy with the working of the degrees any more in public than in the secret chambers of Masonic imagery. I know that with some, at least, it produces an opposite effect from the design intended. A very intelligent lady said to me at one time, who had seen some of the degrees worked, "Do you suppose that elder B. and C. etc., ever went through that performance? I wouldn't believe it. Why, I was never so disgusted in my life." Such was the result on her mind. But I answered her in this way: "I do not know whether what you saw was true Masonic ceremonies or not, but I presume that brethren B. and C., etc., in joining the Masons went through ceremonies as foolish as anything that you saw." She seemed astonished, very much, for she knew that I had been a Mason. Very likely the result is not the same with all; but as to the practice of such ceremonies, I can only say for one, to me it is disgusting whether had in public or private.

2. A brother in the last issue of your paper in connection with his endorsement of the idea of such convention suggests the forming of an Anti-masonic church, i. e., as I understand him. Here, too, I differ with many; we have altogether too many sects now. Making churches I think, belongs to the Head of the church, and not to man. But, it is a mistake to suppose that I either endorse or in any way help the cause of Masonry by being a member of a church, that has no rule, and as yet has taken no action against Masonry. On the contrary, I am enabled to act directly against the institution, by holding the torch of truth immediately before the eyes of Masonic ministers in public places, and they have to see it. No, dear brethren, let us not throw away vantage ground. Are you a Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian or member of any church which allows its members to be Masons. Stay where you are and hold up your Anti-masonic light. Masonry can't endure light. It talks about, "Going East" for more light, but the candidate gets more darkness. Light dissolves darkness. Masonry is only darkness, and light will destroy it, and the nearer you place the light to it the quicker the work is done.

But brethren, hold the convention. Work the degrees of Masonry if the Spirit of the Lord so lead, but let us know that it is God who directs. E. W. Wheeler.

Notes of Travel.

Varick, Seneca Co., N. Y., Jan. 11, 1877.

Dear Cynosure:—In looking over our portfolio we find "Notes of Travel" addressed to you under date of Oct. 30, which we had not the time to finish in the blessed interval that brothers Stratton and Lyon have been proclaiming the truth as it is in Jesus, in a schoolhouse near by. We have passed through many revivals, but never have we heard such earnest, stirring sermons, or witnessed the Spirit of God so copiously poured out, or converts so ready to pray in public, or exhort sinners to flee from the wrath to come. Seventy-three have expressed a desire to live for Christ, and about sixty have found him precious to their souls. A deep seriousness pervades the entire community, and we hope the work will continue until the adjoining churches catch the spirit and arise to a higher standard of piety and usefulness.

We venture to send the "Notes of Travel" at this late hour.

Monday, Sept. 19th, 1876, found us en route for Philadelphia on the Geneva, Ithica & Lehigh Valley road. We were familiar with the quiet beauty of the famed Seneca Lake (N. Y) scenery, from its foot at Geneva to its crowning in Watkins, of hills, deep ravines and gorges; but to us Mauch Chunk, Pa., far surpasses it in wild grandeur. Deeply did we regret the approach of darkness when the brakesman pointed out what seemed in the distance a group of mountains and told us we would have to go eighteen miles around to get to the highest peak, three miles distant. How we wished for a Joshua to command the fast-retiring sun to stand still. Alas! it would grow dark, and our spirits were shadowed too, as we moralized, "Thus it is in this life, we lay our plans ever so carefully and some event unexpected (a broken bridge) will disarrange or change the whole."

We may be excused for our sadness perhaps when we say it was to see this handiwork of the Creator that induced us to undertake the journey perhaps more than anything else. In looking out of the car window to take a mournful leave of our blasted hopes, we saw what appeared in the deepening shadows far below us to the left a deep valley in which twinkled innumerable lights, in groups and scattered, indicating villages and farm-houses below us; and ahead, and to the right, high hills loomed up one above another which we seemed to wind around and among in a wonderful manner. How we enjoyed watching the engines belching forth such streams of fire and smoke as they rounded the curve ahead, and noting the different colored lights sparkling from the windows of the coaches in the rear. Often the curve was so great that the head engine and some of the back cars were hidden by the hills we wound around. It was simply grand, and compelled us to acknowledge a well-known truth, "That what our Heavenly Father seems to take from us in some anticipated pleasure, he most always makes up in some unexpected way."

We stopped at Mauch Chunk for the night, not willing to be wholly disappointed. We saw from the piazza of the Mansion House next morning the falls, the entire width of the stream in front of the hotel, and back of the falls Bear mountain, covered with evergreens to its peak, as perfect in shape and semblance as a mammoth hay stack. At its base lies the railroad track whose meandering course had pleased us so much the night before. To the right towered up other peaks hundreds of feet, and back of the hotel and opposite Bear mountain lies the highest peak of all, the famed Mount Pisgah. How the soul goes up to God when viewing such scenery! What a sense we get of his greatness, and contrasting our puny strength we can say "What is man that thou rememberest him!"

At our boarding place in Philadelphia we formed the acquaintance of a United Presbyterian gentleman and wife, and never did Master Mason grip or signs give a more immediate fellow feeling and friendship than did their U. P. title. If this Crawford county couple are a fair sample of what this branch of Zion sends forth to do battle for Christ and his kingdom, would that all the Presbyterian churches in the land were U. P's! We were reminded of Dr. Kane's memorable query when he first came back from his three years' stay amid the glaciers of the North Pole; eagerly inquiring what the world had been doing all this time, he was informed as the latest bit of news, "Sevastopol is taken." "Sevastopol!" exclaimed the doctor, "Who is he?" as a friend was telling him of the Christian Association, the Cynosure and Ronayne (our Anti-masonic institutions) which was glad, very glad news to this staunch Anti-mason, who had nothing but Finney's works to convince him of the great wrongs of secretism. We think the Cynosure and Ronayne will hear from Crawford county this winter.

Our feelings were exactly expressed by this U. P. lady when we were comparing notes in the evening, after wandering for hours mid the works of art, the most exquistie that enlightened man can produce, she said, "When I was coming here in passing that delightful scenery around Mauch Chunk, my heart was lifted up toward God; but I havn't felt so one bit to-day. Everything is very nice, but I kept saying to myself all day, 'Vanity fair,' 'Vanity fair.'"

We lingered long before the statue of the "Daughter of Zion lamenting on the ruins of Jerusalem," represented as repeating those memorable words of Jeremiah: "Zion spreadeth forth her hands and there is none to comfort her! Behold, Oh Lord, for I am in distress. I weep, mine eye runneth down with water; because the comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me." The tears would start as we thought, "What is the good of all this?" "Will the thousands go home better prepared to do battle for the right?" Man had exalted himself enough before, and the goddess of Liberty so beautifully executed before you, typifying equality, is in reality in very many places a mere sham, and not only in New York State but all over the land the typical bondage that encircles the eyes of the goddess of Justice, thus enabling her to weigh out impartially to all alike "according to law and testimony," has turned into a veritable hood-wink, "murder and treason not excepted." Churches are closed to those who are striving in the fear of God to enlighten the people on the cause of the increasing infidelity of the age. What will be the final result is known only to Him who sees the end from the beginning.

Thus the days wore on. We did not take the pleasure we had anticipated in looking at the perfection of beauty in the "many inventions man had sought out," and the exquisite workmanship of his hands in the Art Gallery. Saturday dawned drear and cold and a drizzling rain set in. Thinking it would be a good time to hunt up brother Hodge, we took our way towards the Bible department. Early as it was, he was at his post folding tracts and getting ready for his day's work. We, unobserved by him, stood partly concealed by book-cases observing him for some time. The crowd soon began to stream by and he to hand out his tracts. When I saw how eagerly most of the people received them my heart thrilled with joy. I almost exclaimed aloud, "I see it now. These tracts are the winged seed of truth that are being so faithfully distributed throughout the whole world, and will yield a rich harvest by and by. This is one redeeming feature of the Exposition. Here is a moral influence that ——but we are observed by brother Hodge, and step forward and he offers us tracts. We tell him we read the Cynosure, which is a sufficient introduction. He paused in his sowing to attend to some business and we instinctively caught up the folded tracts and began sowing the seed in his stead, not willing to have one vacant or unsown furrow in this vast moral field, experiencing more real pleasure than we had before on the grounds. Not willing to hinder him in the good work when he was ready to take his place again, we started to look at Whitfield's pulpit near by, when we heard brother Hodge exclaim, "Oh! when we find one so very sick we do as the doctors do—give them a double dose." On turning around we saw him handing two packages of tracts to a Mason, who, judging by his loud tone and words, seemed to think the whole thing uncalled for. "Masonry was a good thing, a very good thing." "It had never done him harm but good, in fact it was the turning point in his life when he joined."

We could not hear all the argument that ensued from the din around us, but heard the Mason's replies as he very loudly exclaimed, "It is not a religion." "Mackey is not reliable authority." When others claimed the sower's attention we could not resist the temptation of saying to him, "We have been very much amused while listening to your conversation. You say Masonry is not a religion," and "Mackey is not reliable authority;" but talk with another Mason and he will tell you, 'It is a religion; Mackey is authority.' Now, what are we to conclude?" He looked a little puzzled and we continued, "I will tell you of what I was thinking when I heard you talking. It was of the old Masonic adage so much in vogue just before the French Revolution, 'Masonry is anything or nothing, just as you like.'" He laughed heartily and repeated (I thought understandingly) "anything or nothing," and we left him to his meditations.

MRS. H. BALDRIDGE.

A Humbug Boxed up.

SEEMLY, Ill., Jan. 11, 1877.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I had the pleasure of entertaining at my house last week quite a distinguished evangelist in eastern Illinois. He is a seceding Mason of three degrees, but he is in such fear of the lodge he says but little about or against it, yet says privately that the whole thing is a humbug, and is as correctly exposed and published to the world as it can be. To strengthen his faith I have ordered the Cynosure to his weekly reading matter. In speaking of the humbug and secrets of the lodge he compared it and them to a peculiar box or boxes within a box. Opening the box you behold another box. Opening the second box you find a third box. Opening this you find it all hollow. So with the degrees you are led on and on with promises that something wonderful will be found or learned, but to find in the end one is only sold, hood-winked and tricked. The box he said conveys the idea that the big end comes first, with nothing but humbug at the last and all through, and yet these secrets (?) are conveyed in the lodge to the initiates with death penalties attached. From his language we inferred he was a cripple (Masonically) and that the lodge finds it takes a great deal of time to carry them, as there is getting to be so many of them. Let the Cynosure keep on crippling Masons until the well ones can't carry the disabled, and then we will see the end of this swindle.

Prof. Blanchard will remember the Baptist Masonic minister that crowded him out of his appointment at the Leemon school-house. This Baptist minister persuaded his folks to build a good church three-fourths of a mile south of the school-house referred to. I gave fifteen dollars towards that building with the promise that the Anti-masons could have a lecture occasionally in this church. They went square back on their promise and locked the door in our face about sundown of the evening on which the lecture was to be given. It was done to please this Masonic minister, which "squarely" illustrates how the lodge does business on the "square." But the worst is yet to tell. The society ran down and last week this excellent building was razed (not "raised" as Masons do in the third degree) to the ground and then "raised" on wagons and hauled to Loda, fourteen miles west..

This seceder says the lodge is not now, as formerly, held in such high repute, but it is gradually running down. In fact, he says, first-class men are everywhere quietly dropping out. If such is the case, and we think he is correct, it is only the beginning of the end. May the "Keystone" drop out soon and the whole fabric be "razed" to the ground.

Two Great Exhibitions.

Bolivar, O.

My beloved, honored and very highly esteemed Cynosure:—I am again permitted to write you, and wish to say by all means continue your very welcome visits. I cannot see how I can do without you. Through the providence of God I was permitted to visit the great Centennial exhibition, and was very much gratified to behold the position you occupied and the effect you produced there. As I predicted from your first movement in that direction, it will doubtless have a powerful and salutary effect for good all over the land. God bless especially those dear brethren who stood up so nobly and manfully in defense of our rights in that great exhibition, the greatest the world ever saw. I am so glad that I was permitted to behold it,—the best spent time and money of my life. I never expect to witness anything like it for grandeur, beauty and glory, until the fulfillment of the prophecy, when time shall be no longer; when Gabriel shall blow the trumpet of God, to announce the second coming of Christ Jesus, who will descend from heaven in the clouds, accompanied by tens of thousands of angels in white robes, and we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. I have often thought of that awful day, of its grandeur and power. The dead will be raised from sea and land, all that have ever lived on this earth. Every eye shall see him, they that have pierced him, persecuted and denied him, all will be present at this great exhibition. Think of it, friends, and prepare for the judgment day.

I have been very much edified by the articles you published relative to Mr. Moody's position against secretism, especially the "latest and best." "'But, Mr. Moody,' some say, 'if you talk like that you will drive all the members of secret societies out of your meetings and out of your churches.' But what if I do, better men will take their place. Give them the truth any way." That, to our mind was striking the nail on the head. The publications of our accomplished and very able workman, Ronayne, are doing wonders and I am with him with all my heart in recommending the circulation of the Cynosure as the best thing we can do to push forward our grand reform. In short the Cynosure is the paper for honesty, truth, morality, virtue, temperance, economy, industry, religion and true reform; yes, I will vouch for all this. Then, friends, let us work for it. Its articles on holiness and holy living are rich,—and upon this I wish to say a word. Holiness is essential to happiness. Suppose the happiness of an immortal state to be derived entirely from music. Then the degree of enjoyment in such a world would be exactly in proportion to one's musical capacity or talents. He whose perceptions in regard to melody and harmony were obtuse, could not experience the same bliss as his neighbor, possessed of musical powers of the highest order. Now the happiness of heaven comes from holiness. Of course the higher its inhabitants rise in moral excellence, the greater will be their enjoyment. If this is so, dear brethren, let us live for God.

St. Paul had three wishes and they were all about Christ—that he might be found in Christ, that he might be with Christ, and that he might magnify Christ. "Abide with us, for it is towards evening, and the day is far spent."

Joseph Keel, Sr.

The Christian Sabbath.

Thompson, Conn.

The seventh or the first day of the week, which is the Christian Sabbath? Let us examine the New Testament, and see what light it will give us on this subject. We believe it is admitted by all Christians, that the Lord Jesus rose from the dead on the first day of the week. We learn from John 20: 10, that Christ appeared to the Apostles on the first day of the week, and in the 20th verse we learn that on the first day of the next week he met with them again. And now what was the practice of the Apostles, for if we can know what their practice was it will be safe for us to follow it. From Acts 20: 7, we learn that the disciples came together to break bread in the first day of the week and that Paul preached to them, ready to depart on the morrow. Now why did not Paul preach to the disciples on the seventh day, and depart on the first day of the week? and why did not the disciples come together to celebrate the Lord's Supper on the seventh instead of the first day of the week, if that was to be the Christian Sabbath? In 1st Cor. 16: 2, we find Paul directing the disciples to take up their collection on the first day of the week; why did he not have this done on the seventh day if that was the Christian Sabbath? Surely the time when the disciples came together to hear the Gospel preached by Paul or other of the ministers of Christ, would seem to be the time to take up this collection for the benefit of poor churches. In Rev. 1: 10, John says, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." It is plain he here refers to the first day, as being the Lord's day, as the Christian Sabbath. Now we turn to another class of passages, that we think will help us to understand this subject. In Acts 13: 14, we find that Paul and Barnabas went into the synagogue on the Jewish Sabbath day, and if we read from here through the chapter, we learn for what they went into the synagogue, and the result of it. And in chapter 14: 1 we find them both in the synagogue, and the result of their being there. Again in chapter 17: 1-4 and 18-4, "And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks. Here we learn, that when Paul preached to the Jews he went into the synagogue on the seventh day, as that was and is the Jewish Sabbath, and the day on which, as we learn from chapter 15: 21, that "Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogue every Sabbath day." Now we submit that nowhere in the New Testament it is said that the church of Christ came together to hear the Gospel preached, or to celebrate the Lord's Supper on the seventh day. But on the other hand it is said they did so come together on the first day of the week. And it appears to be the best, if not the only way in which those who believe in the resurrection of Christ, could commemorate this glorious event. As the Lord's Supper shows forth his death, so the day shows forth his resurrection from the dead. Here too, I think we have a glorious truth brought out, namely, Christ lay in the grave on the seventh day which was the law Sabbath of the law dispensation. He thus buried the law on the Sabbath. And he rose from the dead on the first day of the week, which was henceforth to be the Sabbath of the new dispensation. Thus the ceremonial law was ended on the Sabbath, and the law of grace to commence on the Sabbath. Now I submit that those who believe in keeping the seventh day as the Sabbath, ought to keep all the old ceremonial law. J. S. Perry.

The Redeemed will Soon be Home.

To be redeemed by the precious blood of our Saviour and to have that blessed assurance of eternal life; to walk day by day in communion with our God in heaven, is a glorious thing; and happy is every one who has been redeemed, and is now walking in full assurance and communion with the Master. Ah, cheer up, pilgrims to that Celestial City, your pilgrimage will soon be ended, for sure is your reward if you do the will of your Father in heaven.

Consider, O happy heir of heaven, the shortness of this present life, and give thanks to the blessed Son of God who came that we might receive eternal life! It ought to make us rejoice with exceeding great joy, and to render heart-felt thanks for his lovingkindness, and to ever have our affections set on things above.

The days are fast passing away, O happy child of God! Soon in the New Jerusalem you will enter; the Son of God will be there to meet you, for you "will see him as he is." Unspeakable is the joy which our Father in heaven bestows upon us here; but it is not to be compared with the joy which shall be revealed to us when we shall see him as he is. Levin Johnson.

A Woman Freemason.

We never heard of but one woman who was made a Freemason, and her initiation became a matter of necessity, as she became by listening possessed of some matters which none but a Freemason should know; but we see on the authority of the London Freemason that the Countess Hadich, has been received as a Freemason in a Hungarian lodge under the Grand Orient of Hungary. The Countess is a highly educated lady, and having studied and become well versed in Masonic literature, she was regularly proposed and seconded in open lodge, balloted for, and in due course of time was duly initiated. The Grand Orient of Hungary, however, declared the initiation to be null and void, on the ground that a woman is disqualified from being a Freemason; and the question now arises, as the Countess was actually initiated, can she be refused admission to her lodge?—Western Rural.

It is claimed in the above that the Countess Hadich, in Hungary has been regularly initiated. Now every man who is a Master Mason has sworn that he will not be present at the initiation, passing, or raising of a woman:

"Binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having my body severed in twain, my bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes and the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven, so that no more trace or remembrance may be had of so vile and perjured a wretch as I, should I ever knowingly or willfully violate this my solemn obligation as a Master Mason. So help me God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same."

Furthermore she could not disguise herself because she would be stripped of most of her clothing in the preparation room, then furnished with a pair of drawers which she must put on, which must be rolled above her knees, and a point of the compasses applied to her naked breast, and in this way, with her eyes blindfolded and a rope three times around her waist she would enter the lodge.

Now it is not likely that a whole lodge of Masons would be willing to surrender their bowels just to be at the initiation of a woman. The account says that she is a highly educated lady, while you see she could only be intiated on conditions which would show her to be coarse, common-place and vulgar.

It seems that the Grand Orient decides the thing to be unmasonic, just as any one would in view of the oath from which I have quoted.

The publication of such articles as the one alluded to may have an effect with some to give dignity to a system which the Countess, as being well versed in Masonic literature, must know is hopelessly vulgar and profane. J. W. Wood.

Our Mail.

Richard Green, Lagrange, Indiana, sends a club of ten subscriptions, and writes:

"I have spent some time in getting them. I have the cause at heart. There ought to be ten thousand subscribers the present year."

Geo. Clark, Oberlin, Ohio, writes:

"If the Cynosure could be placed in every family in the land for one year it would revolutionize the nation on the subject of secretism. But such sins die hard. Reforms that embrace moral principles, that go behind mere political expedients, can move only as they educate, and so of necessity move slowly and hard in their early stages. We have had no 'Bull Runs,' but we are in the 'battles of the Wilderness,' and must 'fight it out on this line.' Bless God for Moody's testimony."

Rev. J. U. McClenahan, Winterset, Iowa, writes:

"Secret orders have it all their own way here. I will have almost the entire community to oppose, but they that be with me are more than they that be against me."

Jane Liggett, Mt. Ayr, Iowa, writes:

"We are twenty-five miles from a rail road. If any of the Anti-masonic lecturers should find it convenient to give us a call and stir up the people a little on this subject, we would be glad. It might save some young men if it did not reclaim the old. I know one young man that the Cynosure has been the means of saving from the lodge."

L. B. Lathrop, Hollister, California, writes:

"I am trying to lecture some, and have the prospect of one column in our town paper each week. I wish I could get something that would prove that secret orders are to blame largely for our present political troubles."

Can any of our readers supply this want?

C. G. Coffin, Laporte, Indiana, writes:

"I rejoice to learn of the bold stand Mr. Moody has taken in our cause. I had looked for it for some months past. I pray God to bless him and all the faithful laborers in the good cause of Christ."

Mrs. A. J. Miller, Millbury, Ohio, writes:

"I have taken the Cynosure for six years, and expect to take it as long as I live, if God gives me money to pay for it. My heart is in the work. I am praying for the cause daily."

R. M. Conway, Xenia, Iowa, writes:

"I have taken the Cynosure one year and have distributed every copy I have received."

Chas. P. Paget, Smithdale, Illinois, writes:

"I voted for Walker and Kirkpatrick, and I have not felt so well over anything I have done in the way of voting since I voted for Lincoln. I was at Streator when Mr. Ronayne was so shamefully insulted and egged at that meeting. I was thoroughly baptized into the faith that all secret, oath-bound societies are the work of the devil, and I think it is time that all good, patriotic men and women should take Christ for their pattern, and say, 'In secret have I said nothing.'"

N. R. Luce, Clymer, New York, writes:

"There were four votes polled in the town of Clymer, New York, for Walker and Kirkpatrick, and the tide is rising with men of moral worth, and we expect to do still better at no very distant day. May the blessing of God attend the Cynosure and all the workers in this noble cause of emancipation from the Christless lodge slavery that so fearfully infests our land."

E. G. Cooper, Lecturer in Missouri, Albany, Mo., writes:

"We are making the war interesting for the secret orders. There is a trembling and a melting away. The more penetrating seem to be gradually throwing off the vile cloak, and wish their friends to so understand it. The pressure of enlightened sentiment is being felt, especially by the ministers, who should lead the way of thorough reform."

A. O. Howell, Champaign City, Illinois, writes:

"If Christ be for us, who can be against us successfully? So may we ever labor and pray on till the Master calls us home."

L. S. Buell, Middlefield, Ohio, writes:

"Every friend of God and of the human race should learn enough of this hydra-headed monster to take the right side and speak out in all suitable ways."

A friend subscribing himself "An Humble Worker," writes:

"We have made up a club of ten. Enclosed find $15. Rev. Wm. M. Richie did much toward making up the club. He is a man of deeds more than words, gentle as morning sunshine, yet effective as solar heat. One element of his power is the entire absence of slang phrases and railing accusations. Many true-hearted men in their struggle with evil fall into this habit and incur this weakness, and when spread in print greatly depreciate the character and influence of the paper. Additional to brother Richie's work, the club has cost me two days' hard work and the price of one subscription above the number that comes to my family. This means the hardest times we ever knew. Many of the club are entire new names from last year. This change is not owing to dissatisfaction with the paper. I have heard but one individual complain. All commend. I only criticise, and that in love. The Cynosure should aim at becoming a good family paper in every respect, as to style and elevation of thought and spirit. Every name of this club, or nearly so, is an expression of conscience and principle, a sense of the importance and value of the reform. The weight of every dime paid is felt. They have not a surplus penny to spare. They gave to forward this Christian and deeply needed work. Take then the club as a heart and hand expression of appreciation of the reform work, and of confidence, affection and sympathy for and with the workers. May God be with this work, and all the workers until it is consummated in a blessed triumph."

John Torrans, Manistee, Michigan, writes:

"Nearly every man I gave a platform to said it was the best there was. I think it is fear that keeps men from voting their principles. They do not seem to have anything to fall back on only their fellows. What they ought to have is Christ; then they would be free. There is a stopping up of the old paths, and the new ones are not what they are advertised to be. The pall of silence seems to have settled down among men on the real issues of life. It reminds me of the deaf and dumb spirit which the disciples of Jesus could not cast out and he told them that kind only went out by prayer and fasting. Would not some of that abolish this one? Let us fast a day and apply the proceeds with our prayers to its overthrow and I know it will come out. May the Lord give us wisdom to fight the good fight of faith and come off more than conquerers through him who first loved us."

The Sabbath School.

LESSON V.—FEB. 4, 1877.—ELIJAH AND AHAB.

SCRIPTURE.—1 Kings xviii. 5 18. Commit to memory verses 15-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And Joshua said, Why hast thou troubled us? The Lord shall trouble thee this day. Josh. 7: 25.

5 And Ahab said unto Obadiah, Go into the land unto all fountains of water, and unto all brooks: peradventure we may find grass to save the horses and mules alive that we lose not all the beasts.

6 So they divided the land between them to pass throughout it: Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself.

7 And as Obadiah was in the way, behold, Elijah met him: and he knew him, and fell on his face, and said, Art thou that my lord Elijah?

8 And he answered him, I am: go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

9 And he said, What have I sinned, that thou wouldst deliver thy servant into the hand of Ahab, to slay me

10 As the Lord thy God liveth, there is no nation or kingdom, whither my lord hath not sent to seek thee: and when they said, He is not there; he took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that they found thee not.

11 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

12 And it shall come to pass, as soon as I am gone from thee, that the Spirit of the Lord shall carry thee whither I know not; and so when I come and tell Ahab, and he cannot find thee, he shall slay me: but I thy servant fear the Lord from my youth.

13 Was it not told my lord what I did when Jezebel slew the prophets of the Lord, how I hid a hundred men of the Lord's prophets by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water?

14 And now thou sayest, Go, tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here: and he shall slay me.

15 And Elijah said, as the Lord of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, I will surely shew myself unto him to-day.

16 So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him: and Ahab went to meet Elijah.

17 And it came to pass when Ahab saw Elijah, that Ahab said unto him, Art thou he that troubleth Israel?

18 And he answered, I have not troubled Israel; but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim.

LESSON NOTES.—5. And Ahab said unto Obadiah: Only when a public calamity reached its height did the king himself and his prime minister go forth to seek relief. Into the land: Through the land. Fountains: Springs. Peradventure: Perhaps, possibly. 7. Fell on his face: From reverence for God's prophet. 9 What have I sinned: What sin have I committed. To slay me: For the occasion of his fear, see verse 12. 10. No nation or kingdom: Of those bordering on his dominions. 15. As the Lord of hosts liveth: Elijah served the living God, while Ahab and his kingdom were followers of Baal, a dead and powerless deity. I stand I serve. 17. Troubleth Israel: By bringing drouth. 18. Thou and thy father's house: A bold but truthful charge. See Deut 11: 16, 17. Baalim: The plural form of Baal.

Why did idolatrous Ahab retain the devout Obadiah as his prime minister? Why had Ahab sought so diligently to find Elijah? What reason had Obadiah for fearing that the spirit of the Lord would carry away Elijah? Why had Elijah avoided Ahab until now? Why was he now willing to meet him? Why should God permit the animals to suffer for man's sin? How do the facts of this lesson accord with the words of Jesus in Matthew v. 45? Are we to suppose that calamities of nature are now ever sent as special judgments? If so, how are we to discover their meaning?—Scholar's Quarterly.

BIBLE COMMENTARY.

Elijah.—And Elijah the Tishbite who was of the inhabitants of Gilead. 1 Ki. 16: 1. And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, Luke 1: 17. And behold there appeared unto him Moses and Elias talking with him, Matt. 17: 3.

V. 12.—Let them go we pray thee and seek thy master: lest peradventure the Spirit of the Lord hath taken him up and cast him upon some mountain or into some valley. 2 Ki. 2, 16. And immediately the Spirit driveth him into the wilderness, Mark 1: 12. The Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, Acts 8: 39; and the hand of the Lord was on Elijah; and he girded up his loins and ran before Ahab, 1 Ki. 18: 46; also 19: 7, 8.

V. 13.—He that receiveth you receiveth me and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me, Matt. 10: 40-42. For I was an hungered and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger and ye took me in. Matt. 25: 35 40. And the woman took the two men and hid them, Josh. 2: 4-21 and 6 17; So the priest gave him hallowed bread 1 Sam. 21: 6 9; And the disciples took him by night and let him down by the wall in a basket, Acts 9 25

V. 14.—Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul, Matt. 10: 28.

V. 17.—And Joshua said, Why hast thou troubled us? Josh. 7: 25; Art thou come to call my sin to remembrance? 1 Kings 17: 18; These men, being Jews do exceedingly trouble our city, Acts 16: 20; Wherein I suffer trouble as an evil doer. 2 Tim. 2: 9

V. 18.—And Ahab said to Elijah, Hast thou found me, O mine enemy? And he answered, I have found thee because thou hast sold thyself to work evil in the sight of the Lord. 1 Ki. 21: 20. What have we to do with thee? Hast thou come to torment us before the time? Matt. 8: 29. Many good works have I showed you from my Father; for which of those good works do ye stone me? John 10: 32; Whereas they speak evil of you as of evil doers they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ. 1 Pet. 3: 16.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JAN. 25, 1877.

THE SUBSCRIPTION WORK does not lose its importance as the New Year grows older. Read the Publisher's department and see why. While it is as necessary, and more so, to work for the paper than ever, the interest of the reform and in it deepens daily. Let each reader ask "What have I to do in this matter?"

THE LODGE AS PEACEMAKER.

It is not so many years ago as to be out of the memories of some of our readers, that the United States ship of war "President" was proceeding down the Potomac with a pleasure party; and when passing Mount Vernon the great gun "Peacemaker," speaking its deep-mouthed salutation to the peaceful shores and the last resting place of Washington, burst, scattering around sudden and terrible death upon distinguished victims. The event is recalled by reading the boastful harangues of Odd-fellow orators at their Centennial parade last September. Four representatives of the order, from Massachusetts, California, Minnesota and South Carolina (East, West, North and South) from four different stands simultaneously addressed the assembly, and then, marshalled to the center, together joined hands in ceremonious solemnity, typical of the national fraternity restored by this secret lodge.

The following extracts from the addresses show sufficiently the temper of this lodge display:

"No good Odd-fellow can become a pauper or a criminal, and the community in which he lives pays no money for his charitable support or his criminal prosecution. As Odd-fellows we are no politicians. While we acknowledge allegiance to our several governments and obedience to their laws, the subject of politics is never mentioned in our lodge-rooms. There has been a Northern political party and a Southern political party; there has been a social society South and a social society North; there has been a Northern commercial interest and a Southern commercial interest; and finally there has been a Northern and a Southern church; but, thank God, there are not, there never have been any Northern or Southern Odd-fellows. We are national, our principles universal."

"This order and kindred noble fraternities were among the earliest influences which, upon the termination of the late war in the United States, were brought to the healing of the wounds produced, and the reuniting of the separated sections into a common country. The ties which had been created by Odd-fellowship and Masonry were quickly reconnected, the tender memories of loving services by word and in deed rendered on each side during that struggle caused a rally around the standard of brotherhood, and in full, frank and perfect equality the Odd-fellows and Masons of the North and the South, the East and the West, re-met and resumed a common march in the cause of humanity."

"With the conscientious convictions of the South, it would be utterly impossible to expect of it to say that it repents of that war. To do so would be to brand itself as recreant to the principles derived from the patriots of the Revolution; it would be beneath the contempt of the other sections of the country, should it prove so false to the memories of its sons who fell in the defence of such convictions of that great bill of rights. Whatever may be the difference of opinion as to the correctness of the judgment which led to that contest, I have so abiding confidence in the instinct of the American people, that I feel sure the people of the North would have felt shame if the people of the South had quailed in submitting such differences to the arbitrament of battle, from fear of any consequences which were to result."

Let us allow, for the sake of argument, that these statements are true; that the line of loyalty to the government and Divine law was drawn upon the churches, upon trade, upon society, while no such demarcation was known to the secret fraternities. Or, grant with another speaker that there was a separation, but these orders were the first to reunite and give their influence toward bringing together the other fragments. Grant that it would be "utterly impossible to expect" of the South any repentance for the Rebellion and its cause, slavery, under the reign of the lodge. What have we then? Simply, that if the secret orders are our peacemakers their work when tested is the basest fraud. The late election has developed the same hatred, the same antagonistic causes that flamed out into war sixteen years ago under the propitious administration of a Freemason, James Buchanan. Few will deny that did the same circumstances now exist at Washington, war would again gape upon us from the cannon's mouth. What has been the history of our lodge peace? Every year the black race has been pushed backward toward their former bondage. Every year the demands of men who took arms against their country, that their treason shall be recognized as the equal of loyalty, that it shall have the same wages and rewards, have been more arrogant, until the monstrous proposition has almost reached reality.

We believe the claims of the lodge should be granted. It was the first agency in patching up a so-called peace. Holding, as an organization, no principles of righteousness or justice over which the devil could get up a quarrel, its members busied themselves in managing the affairs of the nation from their false standpoint; and instead of securing that justice and righteousness which all honest tradesmen, all Christian citizens, all loyal men demanded, and the humbled party were ready to accept, with a Knight Templar President to urge their plans, they fastened upon the nation that ruinous policy of which we are reaping the harvest. "Peace at any price" reversed the law of the land and the word of God. That Divine law commands the seeking first of what? not peace, but "the kingdom of God and his righteousness;" and as a sequence "all these things," peace and national prosperity among them, should certainly follow; "for the throne is established by righteousness;" "and the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever." But such has not been the peace established on the principles of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship, which justified rebellion and condoned with violators of God's law. These institutions are such peace-makers as was that great engine of war, which rewarded the confidence of men with death.

—Our foreign correspondent after a pleasant sojourn in London, has gone on to Italy, and will remain in Rome for a time during the severity of the winter season. Letters from that center of history, and of ecclesiastical formalism may soon be expected.

—A friend asks for the grange "pass-word" for the present year. Can any one furnish it?

—Notes of the daily prayer-meeting in the Carpenter building will be found in the "Gospel Meeting" department.

—During his present trip Bro. Hinman has lectured in Morrison and Round Grove, Ill., and preached and lectured in De Witt, Iowa, in the Congregational church, whose pastor, Rev. E. P. Whiting, died on the 9th inst. He also spoke in Colo and State Center last week, with appointments in Albion and Marshalltown.

—An Iowa correspondent of the Fredericktown, Ohio, Free Press says that the expositions of Masonry at Albion, Iowa, a while since were very near being followed by unpleasant results to one preacher who was found upholding the lodge, to the disgust of the honest members of his own and other churches.

—Friend Lathrop of Hollister, California, has succeeded in opening an interesting discussion of the merits of Freemasonry in the San Benito Advance, which promises to be a benefit to the readers of that paper. He has found a secret society advocate who attempts a reply, but only aids in putting the subject in a clearer light before candid people.

—The Catholic Review is reviewing the reports from the United States foreign service in a series of articles under the title "Our Masonic and Methodist Diplomats." The charge implied in the denominational term we believe is unjust, but the lodge has insinuated itself too much into the well-paid service of the foreign bureau to escape notice or be undeserving of rebuke.

—In six years, says the Masonic Jewel, "we have seen twenty-two Masonic journals yield up the ghost and wind up their earthly estates. We know of but eleven purely Masonic journals in America now living and the prospect is dark and gloomy for several of these." This is a mistaken and Masonic view of the case. The labor and money put into those twenty-two Masonic journals was worse than wasted until it was released from the treadmill of the lodge and put into respectable employment.

—The Sabbath Recorder criticizes the Cynosure for objecting to President Grant's visiting the Centennial on the Christian Sabbath, and wishes to know the Scripture authority for regarding that day. We have permitted a correspondent on another page to give most of the references, adding only Matt. 28: 1, and Hebrews 4: 1-11. In the first passage the original Greek reads: "In the end of the Sabbaths as it began to dawn toward the first of the Sabbaths." The able exposition of the second passage by Rev. Dr. Milligan was published in these columns some time since. It is only necessary to refer to it, without repetition. These passages are conclusive of the practice of the early Christian church.

—Mr. T. J. Melish, a 32 degree Mason, says that Mr. Moody "wrests" the Scripture in applying the term "unbelievers" in 2 Cor. 6: 14 to Freemasons. This is the kind of Bible interpretation taught in the lodge, which presents its salvation without an atonement or change of heart.

—The late ex-President Johnson, of whose "policy" the nation is now reaping the bitter fruits was made a Knight Templar in Nashville, Tenn., July 26th, 1859. This fact throws yet more light on the character of that intemperate executive, and explains away much of the difficulty many find in explaining why his disastrous plans were ever so successfully carried through Congress.

There is a reaction setting in against the fanaticism for secrecy, and there is a powerful movement in the country against the whole system of secret societies. This movement has a national organization, and also State and local organizations. Those engaged in it are pressing forward like men in real earnest. The aim is to save and rescue the churches and individuals from the wild rage of the secrecy excitement. A number of religious journals are enlisted in the reform, and numerous lecturers are in the field. It should not be thought strange that the great popularity of secrecy meets with an opposition in a determined form. So far as we know, most of the opposers of secrecy can give a reason for their action, and have no cause to stop to inquire whether they should move forward. The greatest evangelist of modern times, Mr. Moody, has enrolled himself among the promoters of this anti-secrecy reform. With his outspoken words great encouragement has come to many doubting Christians in all the churches. May we not also take heart from him?—Telescope.

Religious Intelligence

—Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins took charge of the revival movement on Wednesday last. They lead in the noon prayer meetings in Farwell Hall, and last week conducted a series of meetings in Plymouth church in the south part of the city.

—On Friday last the subject of Gospel Temperance was before the daily prayer-meetings in Farwell Hall and the Carpenter building. In the evening a Gospel union temperance meeting was held in Farwell Hall by the Society of Reformed Men. On Sabbath afternoon Capt. Henry Bundy held a meeting of the same nature in the N. C. A. rooms, 221 W. Madison street.

—Rev. F. S. De Hass, consul at Jerusalem, has recently made some curious observations. Under the old sea wall of Jaffa, he saw the uncovering of a great cedar beam, which had probably been floated down from Lebanon for Solomon's Temple. At Gaza, he found a representative of the seven-branched candlestick cut on a wall. Its shape corroborates that shown on the arms of Titus. He also mentions the fact that marble and porphyry pillars from the old temple are frequently to be identified in the mosques. There are twenty-eight porphyry columns of undoubted authenticity in the Mosque of Omar alone.

—"The Queen of England," says the Christian Guardian, has again shocked the lofty church people of England by receiving the communion at the hands of a Scotch Presbyterian minister. With the Princess Beatrice she recently attended Crathie Church, when the Lord's Supper was dispensed, and partook of the Sacrament with other parishioners. Queen Victoria is a Presbyterian when in Scotland, being the head of the Established Church in either part of Great Britain. Besides, she is a Christian woman who does not put the Church of Christ above its divine head."

—The First Presbyterian church of Chicago, Dr. Mitchell's, has taken a new departure and a wise one in respect to its Sabbath evening meeting. It will hold services from four to five o'clock each Sabbath afternoon, instead of the usual evening service, which is discontinued. This is to be a permanent arrangement. The benefit from it to pious hearers cannot be slight.

—The Presbyterian church of England has pledged itself to make a united effort to raise a "Thanksgiving Fund" of a million and a quarter of dollars during the next five years in commemoration of the union recently effected.

—The General Conference of the Mennonite church, which was held recently at Elkhart, Ind., after a lengthy discussion resolved that those who voted at the recent election should be admonished, and that every minister should try to induce his church members to abstain from voting. A resolution prohibiting church members having anything to do with secret societies was also adopted.

—Rev. Hugh H. Blair died lately at his residence in New York. He was forty-one years pastor of the First U. P. Church of New York city. The deceased was a graduate, about 1830, of the Western University of Pittsburgh. He studied theology at the Associated Presbyterian Seminary at Canonburg.

News of the Week.

—The severity of the snow storms in New York State may be estimated by the following statement from the railroads: "The number of east-bound cars that have been embargoed, so to speak, by the blockade in New York, is estimated at 20,000. Even with unobstructed tracks it will take some days to haul these 20,000 cars into New York city, and not until these are entirely out of the way will there be a general forward movement from Chicago. With a clean track the New York Central can dispatch trains of 40 cars each every ten minutes until the accumulated freight is got out of the way, but some allowances must be made for the impaired condition of the motive power, 10 per cent. of their 500 locomotives being in shops undergoing repairs, or turned bottom-side up in the ditch.

—The special committees of the Senate and House on the electoral count, after three weeks of arduous work have agreed upon a bill the principal provisions of which are as follows: The two houses of Congress are to meet in the Representative's hall at noon on the 14th of February. The President of the Senate is to open all certificates received by him, and submit them to the two houses. All votes which both houses agree to count shall be counted, and all votes which both houses concur in rejecting shall be rejected.

Cases in which both houses disagree shall be referred to a tribunal consisting of five members of the House, to be elected by that branch; five members of the Senate, to be elected by that branch, and four justices of the Supreme Court, namely: Clifford, of the First Judicial Circuit; Strong, of the Third Circuit; Miller, of the Eighth Circuit, and Field, of the Ninth Circuit. These four Justices are to complete the tribunal by electing, in whatever manner they see fit, a fifth Justice of the same court. This tribunal of fifteen is invested with power to examine and take testimony on all votes upon which the two houses fail to agree. Having done so, they are to report to the two houses what votes, in their judgment, are right to be counted.

This decision is not to be final or binding upon the two houses, but the returns which the tribunal decides ought to be counted are to be considered as prima facie the lawful votes, and are to be counted unless both houses concur in rejecting them. Senator Morton was the only dissenting member of the committee.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 18.—The grand council of the Turkey met to-day. Midhat Pasha then made a long speech, in the course of which he gave an account of the Turkish counter proposals and the concessions which the Porte, in a spirit of conciliation had made upon the points where the constitution would not thereby be infringed. He dwelt upon the gravity of the situation, spoke of the departure of the plenipotentiaries, the possibility of war, the horrors attending it, the injury it would do the internal affairs of the country, the impossibility of procuring funds for a war, and the fact that Turkey could not rely upon any alliance. Several speeches followed, the most noteworthy being made by Greek and Armenian patriarchs. All the speakers repelled the idea of accepting the European proposals. Midhat Pasha again pointed out the gravity of the crisis and the distress which would result from war. After hearing all the speakers the council unanimously rejected the proposals amid shouts of "Death before dishonor."

—It is said that Gortschakoff has issued a circular to the Russian representatives abroad, expressing his belief that Turkey will reject the conference proposals, and declaring that Russia cannot undertake a warlike policy, because Europe would not support her, and might form a coalition against her.

—A special to the Chicago Tribune thus announces the election of a Senator in Massachusetts on Friday: Charles Sumner used to say in the closing years of his life that could he designate his successor to the United States Senate he should name George Frisbie Hoar. The Massachusetts Legislature this forenoon gratified one of the latest wishes of Sumner by electing Hoar to the Senate. This fact soon became known in the House, and Hoar received the earnest and sincere congratulations of a large portion of the Representatives of both parties. A significant fact connected with Hoar's election is that he has not lifted a finger to secure it.

—A Vienna correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says: "It is a fact that the Porte on Tuesday last informed Servia that it would, on no consideration, renew the armistice, but would march on Belgrade if Servia did not treat directly with Turkey for peace before March 1. Prince Milan is known to have expressed himself strongly in favor of such peace.

Our Ain Countree.

I am far frae my hame, an' am weary often whiles
For the lang'd for hame-bringing an my Father's welcome smiles,
I,ll ne'er be fu' content until my een do see
The gowden gates o' heaven, an' my ain Countree.

The earth is flecked wi' flowers, mony-tinted, fresh and gay.
The birdies warble blithely, for my Father made them sae:
Bnt these sights an' these sonn's will as naethling to me be,
When I hear the angels singing, in my ain Countree.

I've His good word o' promise that some glorious day the King
To His ain royal palace, His banished hame will bring,
Wi' een an' wi' hearts running ower we shall see
The King in His beauty, in our ain Countree.

My sins have been mony, an' my sorrows hae been sair,
Bnt then they'll never vex me, nor be remembered mair;
His blnid hath made me white, His hand shall dry my ee,
When He brings me hame at last to my ain Countree.

Like the hairn to its mither, a wee birdie to its nest,
I wonld fain be ganging noo, into my Savlour's breast;
For He gathers in His bosom, witless, worthless lambs like me,
An' carries them Himself to His ain Countree.

He's faithfn' that has promised, He'll surely come again;
He'll keep His tryst wi' me, at what hour I dinna ken;
Bnt He bids me still to watch, and ready aye to be
To gang at ony moment to my ain Countree.

So I'm watching, aye an' singing o' my hame, as I wait
For the soun.inge o' His foot fa' this side the gowden gate,
God gie his grace to lika one, who listens noo to me,
That we a' may gang in gladness to our ain Countiee.

The Highlander's Prayer.

No man can live in the constant habit of prayer, without acquiring a familiarity with the spirit of devotion, which will clearly indicate to others that he is a praying man. A true Christian can generally infer, both from the language and manner of prayer whether the suppliant is in the habit of daily communion with God. I have even thought, that after preaching to a congregation for a few times, I could infer from the expression of the countenance and the manner of attending upon ordinances, what heads of families are in the habit of regular family prayer.

The celebrated Hugh Miller gives a striking illustration of this in his work on the "Headship of Christ." A Scotch Highlander, who served in the first disastrous war with the American Colonies, was brought before the commanding officer one evening, charged with the capital offence of being in communication with the enemy. The charge could not well be preferred at a more dangerous time. Only a few weeks had elapsed since the execution of Major Andre, and the indignation of the British, exasperated almost to madness by the event, had not yet cooled down. There was, however, no direct proof against the Highlander. He had been seen in the gray of the twilight stealing out from a clump of underwood that bordered on one of the huge forests which at that period covered much the greater part of the United Provinces, and which, in the immediate neighborhood of the British, swarmed with the troops of Washington. All the rest was mere inference and conjective. The poor man's defence was summed up in a few words. He had stolen away from his fellows, he said, to spend an hour in secret prayer.

"Have you been in the habit of spending hours in secret prayer?" sternly asked the officer, himself a Scotchman and a Presbyterian. The Highlander replied in the affirmative.

"Then," said the other, drawing out his watch, "never in all your life had you more need of prayer than now; kneel down, sir, and pray aloud that we may hear you."

The Highlander, in the expectation of instant death, knelt down. His prayer was that of one long acquainted with the appropriate language in which the Christian addresses his God. It breathed of imminent peril, and earnestly implored the divine interposition in the threatened danger—the help of him who, in times of extremity, is strong to deliver. It exhibited, in short, a man who, thoroughly conversant with the scheme of redemption, and fully impressed with the necessity of a personal interest in the advantages which it secures, had made the business of salvation the work of many a solitary hour, and had in consequence, acquired much fluency in expressing all his various wants as they occurred, and his thoughts and wishes as they arose.

"You may go, sir," said the officer as he concluded, "you have, I dare say, not been in correspondence with the enemy to-night."

"His statement," he continued, addressing himself to the other officers, "is undoubtedly correct. No one could have prayed so without a long apprenticeship; fellows who have never attended drill always get on ill at review."—United Presbyterian.

Ask for the Print of the Nails.

A certain manly, unconscious, somewhat careless self-reliance appears often to be held before us as the highest pattern of the Christian life. I find no trace of anything in St. Paul which recommends this theory to our acceptance. Never was Christianity, in any of its phases of which we have yet had experience, really efficient without the presence of an ascetic element. Beware, my brethren, of counterfeits. Christ must be crucified in his members. Sin will never die out naturally. There is a legendary story that to a saint who was praying the Evil Spirit showed himself, radiant with royal robes and crowned with a jeweled diadem, and said: "I am Christ. I am descended on the earth, and I desired first to manifest myself to thee." The saint kept silence and looked, and then said: "I will not believe that Christ is come save in that state and form in which he suffered; save with the mark of wounds of the cross," and the false apparition vanished. The application is this: Christ comes not in pride of intellect or reputation for ability. These are the glittering robes in which Satan is now arrayed. Many spirits are abroad; more are issuing from the pit. The credentials which they display are the precious gifts of mind, beauty, richness, depth, originality. Christian, look hard at them, with the saint, in silence, and then ask for the print of the nails.—Howson's St. Paul.

Why are Holy Believers Tempted?

None are so persistently or severely tempted as those who are sanctified. Why is this?

A reason is, that the experience of one who is truly sanctified is, in itself, an unspeakable provocation to the devil. Such an experience is a standing affirmation of Satan's discomfiture. It tells, by its triumphs over sin, how literally and truthfully Jesus saves His people from their sins. It is the veriest humiliation that the devil can encounter, to be put, as it were, at the mercy of a triumphant saint. Nothing hurts him like this. It is killing to him. He doesn't know how to endure such bruising. And for very revenge he assaults God's saints. It is a kind of malignant seeking to plague where he may not prevail, to annoy where he may not destroy. Not that the holy Christian is impeccable, for he is not. Perhaps the devil knows this. There may be in his assaults an inspiration of hope, as well as revenge. He may move the saint from his stronghold. He may overcome him. But if not, he will have the devilish satisfaction of roaring at him, and showering his fiery darts around him.

Formal and carnal church members, who make a profession of religion, are not much troubled with a tempting devil. Why should they be? They are doing him no harm. Why should he turn upon them? Nay, they are rather doing him a service. For through their carnality and worldliness, and irreligious example, many others are either continuing openly in sin, or are decoyed into their own smooth and easy-going kind of piety which most likely is without any saving influence whatever. Will Satan trouble such as these? Why should he? Better that he should leave them where they are. And so he does, for the most part. At least, he does not set upon them very violently. But let one of these cold, dull, formal, carnal, dead professors obtain the reclaiming and quickening grace of the Holy Ghost. And then let him get the purifying baptism of the Holy Ghost. Let him find salvation enough to make him busy for Jesus. Let him become an active, ardent, earnest, zealous, bold, incessant worker for the salvation of others, let him become a strong and constant opposer of Satan's kingdom, and a dispensation of temptation will set in, that will be characterized by assaultings and soul-testings that will reveal, as never before, the rage of the tempter.

God be praised that there is no sin in being violently tempted, in being furiously set upon by the arch enemy. If temptation be not yielded to, no harm will come of the temptation. And it need not be yielded to. The good Lord will, with every temptation that He suffers to come upon His dear saints, make a way for their escape, that they "may be able to bear it." He will see to it that when the power of the temptation falls upon His children, there shall be an adequate counteractive grace within them, that will enable them to "stand in the evil day." He is fully able to "keep us from falling." Because Himself was tempted "like as we are," the dear Saviour knows how to succor." And He keeping you, dear saint, in and through the hour of temptation, can make, and will make, even your sorest and most terrific temptations to compass your own good, and show forth His glory. And through these frequent and earnest conflicts with the tempter your Father will cause all the graces of your souls to be exercised and strengthened, and the precious fruits of the Spirit to be developed and matured, and their excellency and beauty shown forth in your Christian life.—Banner of Holiness.

Some of our readers will remember the enterprise of ex-Governor Slade, of Vermont, some thirty years since of sending female teachers to the West. Hundreds and hundreds of young women of culture from the best Christian families of New York and New England went. But "Slade's girls," as they were called, could not resist the blandishments of the young farmers of the West. They would get married. They began by teaching other people's children, and ended by teaching their own. Northern Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa, were especially benefited by this immigration of teachers who became wives. Rev. Dr. Ide used to tell with gusto a story of the war. He had a relative on General McPherson's staff. As the army of the Tennessee was fighting its way from Chattanooga to Atlanta, on a certain day McPherson was very hard pressed, the fighting unusually severe. His line wavered at times, but on the extreme right he noticed the extraordinary fighting qualities of a regiment that never wavered, but held its position with indomitable pluck until reinforced, and thus saved the day. At night this relative of Dr. Ide's was sent over to that "ironsides" regiment with the general's thanks, and to make special inquiries as to who they were. He found it was an Iowa regiment, all young men, and but a short time in the service; and afterwards addressing Dr. Ide said, "They were most of them Slade's girls' boys!"—Examiner and Chronicle.

Some of the members were discussing the question of getting an organ for the church. Old Si remarked: "When yer passes 'round de hat fer dat 'musement jes skip me!" "Whaffer we do dat?" "'Kase I don't want none ob dis heah bellus music in de church dat I'se 'pendin' on fer salfashun!" "What kin' of music do yer want?" "I wants de same ole music dat de good Lawd wound up in the nigger's so'l, and dat biles out in streams ob praise dat wakes de naborhood f'om solid slumbers!" "Jess plane singin', eh?" "Plane singin', yer idget; do yer call dat plane singin' when de kongergation jess flings back its head an' sings Send down de charryut f'm de bottom ob bo'f lungses at once?" "I calls dat plane singin'." "Den yer all better stick ter plane singin', too, 'kase I'm tinkin' dat de only win' organ dat yer needs ter look arter is de horn ob de Angil Gabril." They concluded to drop the organ question.

Evening Hymn.

Have us in thy holy keeping,
Jesus, through the darksome night;
Guard and shelter us while sleeping,
Bring us to the morning light.

Let us on thy love reposing,
Fear no evil, fear no care;
But with wearied eyelids closing,
May each conscious thought be prayer.

How Big.

One day not long ago, while the teacher of the infant class was telling her scholars about Jesus, she asked them this question: "How big must you be to give your heart to Jesus? Must you be as big as I am? All that think so will raise the hand." Quite a number thought they must be as big as their teacher.

"Well, all who do not think so will raise the hand." A good many hands were raised in response to this invitation. "Well, Lizzie, how big do you think we must be to give our hearts to Jesus?" "Just as big as we are," answered the little girl. —United Presbyterian.

"Grandfather."

"Grandfather" is the name of an old parrot, owned by Mr. W. H. Seward, Jr., of New York. This parrot has been a great traveler in his day, but now lives quiet at his home on the Hudson River. His master is very fond of him, and so are all the family; and he is the pet of all visitors who go to the house.

Several years ago, when there was a dreadful war in our beloved country, Mr. Seward lived in Washington, where his father, a great statesman and patriot, then held the office of Secretary of State.

At that time, the well-known "John Brown Song" was all the rage. The very boys in the streets would sing, as they went along,—

"John Brown's body lies mouldering in the grave," and several other lines, ending with the chorus,

"Glory hallelujah!"

"Grandfather" would listen, and try to sing it; but all he could learn of it was the "Glory hallelujah," which amused the family very much. After a while he seemed to forget even this; for he dropped it altogether, although he learned many new things.

Many years passed. Mr. Seward had gone to his own home on the Hudson River. The war was over, and the old campaign song of "John Brown" had passed out of people's minds.

The aunt of Mr. Seward, who had lived with him in Washington, and had not seen the parrot since, came to make the family a visit; and in asking after the health of all of them, said, "Don't tell 'Grandfather' I've come: I want to see if he will remember me."

Then she went into the room where the parrot's cage hung, and, going up to it, said, "Good morning, 'Grandfather.' How do you do? Do you know me?"

"Glory hallelujah!" said the old fellow.—The Nursery.

A Bad Book and a Sad Tragedy.

It was the "Pirate's Own Book," with a tragical execution at sea for attempted mutiny and conspiracy. The circumstances may be briefly told. The chief character in the drama was only nineteen at his violent death. Brought up in the lap of wealth and indulgence, accustomed to wine in his father's house, and sometimes employed, when a child, by his brothers to abstract a bottle from the wine-cellar for their drinking-bout with boon companions, he early acquired a relish for stimulating drinks.

He began his education when quite young, at the village academy, and finding that he could cross his eyes for the amusement of his comrades, he continued the habit till he had a slight cross-eyed look. As he advanced in study he was made by his teacher perfectly familiar with the Greek letters, so as to write and spell Greek as easily as English words. From this academic course he went to college. There he became master of the "Pirate's Own Book." It filled his fancy, and he became a leader in dissipation and revelry. To raise money for his expensive habits beyond the necessary parental allowance he resorted to various shifts. At one time he feigned a disposition to become pious, and so far deceived a poor, pious student as to obtain from him five dollars, on the plea that he could not be a Christian till he had paid a debt of that amount. But no sooner did he get the money than he rallied his companions in dissipation, and resorted to a saloon to spend it, never intending to make any return to the lender. At another time he proposed to buy a case of instruments, and had them laid aside by the merchant till he should call for them. Watching when the principal was out, he called and told the clerk he would take the instruments which the proprietor had just set aside for him; and thus obtaining them, without payment, he sold them at a reduced price to get the means of further dissipation. Leaving this institution of necessity, he went to another, bequeathing to one of the college societies his "Pirate's Own Book," and after a short residence at the second college he formed a new secret society. Thence he went to sea; and as his father was Secretary of War at Washington he procured his son a midshipman's commission on board of a man-of-war. It was a trial ship, manned by a few old sailors and officers, but mostly by apprentices in the navy. The captain was a timid officer, and soon suspected trouble with the crew. His suspicion fell on this youth of nineteen. He ordered him and two others to be put in irons, and a court-martial to try them for mutiny and piracy. A list of names in Greek letters found with the young man, the peculiar cross look of his eyes and other suspicious circumstances, were the chief proofs of a conspiracy. But the three were condemned to be hung. The chief person in the final tragedy was the youth of nineteen—Philip Spencer, the youngest, proudest son of Hon. J. C. Spencer, Secretary of War. Of the others, Cromwell was an old sailor, and may have been aforetime engaged in piracy; and Small was an experienced mariner. They were the only three of the crew, aside from the officers, who could navigate the ship. Hence Captain Mc Kenzie ordered their execution. With only an hour's warning they were hung at the yard-arm of the United States Brig Somers, and when drawn up "all hands were piped down to dinner."

After dinner they were taken down and committed to the deep sea. Lieutenant Gansevort, a friend of the Spencer family, offered his chest in which to deposite the body of young Spencer, which, being heavily loaded with cannon shot, was thrown overboard.

When Philip Spencer was told his sentence he said to the Captain: "Are you not too fast?" The Captain replied: "You have but one hour to live." "Oh!" exclaimed Spencer, "Oh! it will kill my mother!" And well-nigh it did; for her cards were out for a levee in the city of Washington when the evil tidings came. They were recalled and she was confined to her chamber.

Captain McKenzie was tried by court-martial and cleared, but was never placed in command of a vessel again; and everybody regretted that Philip Spencer, so young, and the others were not brought home to have a fuller trial for their lives. The Captain soon after died, and the U. S. Brig Somers, at a later period went down during a gale off Cuba, with eighteen of her crew.

The writer of this sketch taught young Spencer the Greek letters with which he registered his picked men of the crew. At thirteen years he did not seem to be a vicious boy; and it seems impossible to conceive how he could grow so fast in crime as to meditate mutiny and piracy. His habits of dissipation, with the spirit rations then on shipboard, together with the scenes depicted in his book of piracy, may have inflamed his imagination and excited him to make a roll of a part of the crew with some interest. But the "Pirate's Own Book" will be always associated in the writer's mind with that tragical death. The last hour of that young life was spent with the Episcopal prayer-book. What a contrast!—S. S. H. in Herald and Presbyter.

Home and Farm.

Wet Boots.—A friend writes from Europe: What an amount of discomfort wet boots entail, to be sure; and how well we all recall the fretful efforts we have now and then made to draw on a pair of hard-baked ones which were put by the fire over night to dry. Damp and adhesive within, they are without stiff and unyielding as horn. Once on they are a sort of modern stocks, destructive of all comfort and entirely demoralizing to the temper. The following simple device will rob the cold, wet barnyard of a slushy winter or spring evening of half its promise of discomfort for the next morning: When the boots are taken off fill them quite full with dry oats. This grain has a great fondness for damp, and will rapidly absorb the last vestige from the wet leather. As it takes up the moisture it swells and fills the boot with a tightly fitting last, keeping its form good and drying the leather without hardening it. In the morning shake out the oats and hang them up in a bag near the fire to dry, ready for the next wet night, draw on the boots, and go happily about the day's work.

Minnesota Tree Planting.—The State Forest Association of Minnesota has awarded some 200 premiums for tree-planting last year. The awards include $800 in silver and copper medals struck by dies and machinery manufactured here, subscriptions to newspapers, and for one family in each prairie county along its line a free pass for this year from the St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Company. Fairbault is the banner county, 1,804,776 trees being planted in that county during the year. The Delano premium of $50, with a Pioneer-Press for the year, was awarded to Geo. F. Pixley of Martin county, who planted 79,200 trees, of which 52,755 are reported in healthy growth. The Hon. Geo. L. Becker planted 60,000 on his farm in Stevens Co. Returns received, being from fifty counties, show over 1,500,000 trees planted in the State on Arbor Day, May 1, and over 10,000,000 during the season. One man alone set out 15,411 cuttings out on Arbor Day, of which over 13,000 survive. One lad of 14 years planted on Arbor Day 7,500 cuttings, and another of 11 years 5,280, of which last 2,937 are now growing healthily. Most of the trees planted are cottonwood and white willow, but large plantations have been started of maples, white oak, walnut, etc.

Penny Wise and Pound Foolish.

There was never a more glaring exemplification of penny wit and pound foolishness than is exhibited by the almost universal practice of spending the winter and especially such a winter as this promises to be, with only single windows in our houses.

The general objection to double windows is the expense. They can't afford it. But whoever will use them during one such winter as this, will make up his mind that he can't afford to do without them. They will save fuel enough every winter to pay for themselves, besides making your family twice as comfortable and far more healthy.

I am using triple windows in a part of my house, this winter, and am thus far well pleased with the experiment. I think the third ones will pay a large percentage on their cost. At any rate I would not do without them for three times what they cost me. Three of my nearest neighbors have furnished their houses with double windows this winter, after having been exhorted thereto for at least nine years. They never thought till now that they could quite afford the expense. They now think they can't possibly afford to do without them. In fact they say they would not do without them for ten times their cost.

If all who ought to have double windows would order them at once, it would do much toward making better times. It would certainly make good times for the window makers and furnish the buyers an opportunity to invest a little of their surplus greenbacks, where they would draw about one hundred per cent. per annum. THE GOSPEL MEETING.

The Farewell Meeting.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey's special services are ended. The last meeting of this remarkable seres took place last night. For three months these men have stood up night after night on the Tabernacle platform and preached and sung the Gospel of Jesus Christ as they understood it. They have tried to show the multitude the love and compassion of Him who has, by his death, atoned for the sins of the world; they have tried to instil into the lives of their hearers better principles and motives; they have used their best endeavors to show the superiority of virtue over vice—to make men understand that the ways of God are ways of pleasantness and peace, in which are only happiness and joy here, and everlasting bliss hereafter, whereas the ways of the devil are those of sorrow and suffering. Many have been influenced by the powerful preaching of the evangelists, and a new life has been commenced within them. Many more, however, have heard the words of love and pity, the doctrine of grace expounded, and the perils of rejection set before them with all the force of evangelical preaching; many have heard all this, yet are unaltered in their course of sin.

The fault lies not with Messrs. Moody and Sankey, who have worked diligently and faithfully toward the consummation of what is evidently the one wish of their lives—to arrest men in their wild rush to ruin.

The doors of the Tabernacle last evening were opened at 6 p. m., and by seven o'clock there were 9,000 inside and fully as many outside the building. The condition of the streets presented no obstacle to those who came to the sanctuary last night. A thermometer freezing mercury would not have diminished the streams of pilgrims who, with hymn books under arm and shining evening face, walked briskly to the Tabernacle.

Around the building were still the evidences of mourning for the deceased singing evangelist. The main floor was completely packed with young converts, who must have numbered at least 4,000. This is a large force who have acknowledged to have been brought directly under the influence of Christianity through Mr. Moody's teaching. The galleries contained those who had not yet entered into the fold, but lingered on the ragged edge of uncertainty, among them several members of the Board of County Commissioners and Aldermen, who it is to be hoped, were induced to enter the inquiry room at the close of the meeting and forsake the error of their ways.

Mr. Moody's farewell words were very tender, and his young converts, to whom he has become endeared, were completely overcome. He had a kind word for every one with whom he had been associated—the clergy, the press, the ushers, the choir. He commended all to the care of God, and bade them not farewell, but good-night, and hoped to meet them all on the morning of the resurrection.

The choir was very fully represented, and sung their hymns with even more spirit than usual. The airs of the gospel hymns are attractive enough even with indifferent singers, but rendered with a well-trained choir, as they were last evening, the real beauty of the compositions become more apparent.

The clergy of the city were out in full force to once more testify their hearty co-operation with the evangelists. Among many others on the platform were the Rev. Messrs. Atkinson, McChesney, Parkhurst, Williamson, D. B. Cheney, Kittredge, Chamberlain, Adams, Post, C. L. Thompson, Donald Fletcher, J. H. Walker, J. Monro Gibson, E. P. Wells, C. M. Martin, N. F. Rawlin, Forsythe of Englewood; W. W. Everts, R. C. Morgan of London, England; Wyckoff of Portage, Wis.; Dr. W. W. Patten, Dr. Fisher, Dr. Goodwin, Davis A. Youker, Granger, J. Donelly, Bishop Fallows, D. W. Whittle.

The laymen on the platform were represented, among a great number of others, by the following gentlemen: C. F. Gates, J. V. Farwell, James H. Walker, Shepherd Johnson, Sabin Smith, Marshall Field, Henry Field, C. M. Henderson, R. T. Lincoln, Norman Williams, Col. Averill, Arthur Caton.

The introductory song service being concluded, Mr. Moody announced the opening hymn:

"O think of the home over there,"

An invocation was offered by the Rev. Dr W. W. Everts, after which the congregation sung the hymn, "What a friend we have in Jesus."

Mr. Moody then announced that this was the evening appointed for the thank-offering in aid of the Young Men's Christian Association. They wanted to raise the sum of $80,000 to-night. No contribution had been taken up since the meetings began, with the exception of the contribution on behalf of the children of Mr. and Mrs. P. P. Bliss, and to-night the evangelist wanted them to give as much as they could, if they could give five cents they were to do it; if $5 or $500, they were to give it. He expected some gentlemen would give $5000. The hat would now be passed round, but previous to this Mr. Sankey would sing, "What are you going to do, brother," during which the audience could make up their minds what they would give.

Mr. Moody read out at the conclusion of the above hymn a number of contributions, whose amounts he said, would foot up to $41,000, which was about half the amount needed. The congregation would please throw into the hats the moiety, either in cash or in demand notes. The collection netted nearly $60,000.

Mr. Moody then addressed the converts, old and young, taking for his text the word "Able." At the close of his address to this special class, he spoke to all these earnest, farewell words:

I hate to say farewell. I cannot tell you how I have enjoyed myself here during the past three months. When we came back from Europe I wanted to come here first, but to be honest with you, I was rather afraid. I was afraid the ministers would not come together as they did in London, Edinburgh, Glasgow and other places we had visited; but since I have been here I have never had such a band of ministers standing so close by me. The first Sunday morning I had a perfect host of ministers come to me and shake me by the hand, and when my brother was taken from me they gave me the kindest sympathy. I want to thank God for the co-operation of the ministry, for if we had not had such co-operation our work would not have been near so great. While in Boston there will be many a prayer going up for the ministers in Chicago. Let me thank you, dear ministers of God, for your sympathy and prayers.

The next class I want to thank is the press. I cannot tell you how grateful I feel toward that body. I have to hear the first unkind word said against me by the daily papers. May the blessings of heaven rest upon every member of the press in Chicago. Thank God that the daily papers are assisting in the spread of the Gospel and I hope that the day is not far distant when the people of the northwestern country will look to the daily papers to see what is doing for the cause of Christ.

The next class Mr. Moody thanked was the choir, who had taken their places night after night upon the platform, and done such a noble service for the cause. The committee, he considered, was the most efficient they had yet had in any city visited. Then the business men of Chicago received words of gratitude from the evangelist, for the excellent building that had been provided.

I don't want to forget the ushers, who for three months have so unremittingly been at the post of duty; nor the committees of arrangement; nor the choir, who, through all weathers, have so constantly been at their posts.

Twenty-one years ago I gave myself to work for souls and bring them to the Lord Jesus Christ. And I tell you from experience, do not neglect private or public prayer; only so can you fit yourself for work to become effective Christians. This is my experience. By this power we have done what we have in this city; and by this power we look for a more wonderful work in Boston. Let me say in closing, go on to higher and higher things. Continue to get nearer and nearer to God. I remember a few years ago a little child died, and just before his soul went home, he asked his father to lift him up, and the father put his hand under the head of his child and raised it up. But the child only said, "That is not enough; that is not what I want; lift me right up." The child was wasted all to skin and bones, but still its father complied, and lifted the dying child out of his bed. But the little fellow kept whispering, fainter and fainter, "Lift me higher, higher, higher!" And the father lifted him higher and higher, till he lifted him as far as he could reach. Yet still the barely audible whisper came, "Higher, father, higher," till at last his head fell back, and his spirit passed up to the eternal King—high at last. So my dear friends, let your constant cry be higher, more near the cross of the Son of God. Now, as an old gentleman attending a convention in the western country could not bring himself to say farewell to his beloved hearers—the word seemed to choke him—and could only manage to falter out, "I bid you good-night," just so I cannot say good-bye, farewell to you—and yet we must part. I must leave you, and in his words I merely say to you "Good night." A dawn will come up yonder, and though never perhaps before that, I expect to meet you all there in the resurrection hour. So I bid you "Good night," and by the grace of God we will meet in the morning.

"Old Hundred" was sung by all at the conclusion of the services. Then several meetings were held in the adjoining rooms. In the hall thousands of people lingered for fully an hour after the close of the meeting, and engaged in conversation, and indulging in pleasant partings. It was like the breaking up of a large family who had become bound to one another by a common love, and who desired to linger as long as possible around the spot where they had found so much happiness and spent so many happy hours. By and by, however, the night grew old, the lights were turned down, and the curtain dropped upon this the most remarkable series of religious meetings ever held in the Northwest.—Inter-Ocean.

The West Side Daily Prayer Meeting.

As we announced last week, the daily prayer meeting in the Carpenter building, 221 West Madison street, was opened on Wednesday last, and under the most promising circumstances. The only drawback being lack of room for the crowd that came in. The efforts of Mr. Delight of the First Congregational church, a man rescued from intemperance, were of great assistance in bringing about the meeting, and getting in the large number present on the opening day.

The room, which seats about 100 people, was crowded, as many ladies as gentlemen being present; a good many were unable to get in, after all the standing-room was taken.

Maj. Cole led the meeting, which was opened with "Sweet hour of prayer." As the Scripture lesson, Maj. Cole read a number of passages from both the Old and New Testaments, illustrating the nature and objects of prayer. Christian people should not pray only at stated times, but should have a spirit of prayer always in their hearts. He believed that one reason why Mr. Moody had been so wonderfully used in Christian work was because there were thousands of prayers constantly going up for him. Christians do not sufficiently realize that God's word is truth, and that if they ask in faith they will surely receive. He would as soon ask God for a pin, as for 1,000 souls. No true prayer was unanswered, and unless men received the kingdom of God as little children they could not enter therein.

Prayers were requested for a brother who was a drunkard; for a nephew and wife; for an only son; for two young friends; for a brother in Colorado.

After several short prayers the meeting sang "Just as I am, without one plea," which was followed by prayers from Mr. Tony Delight and others. Mr. Delight then said that the preparation for these West Side meetings had been left partially in his hands. He had been fearful that there would be but small attendance, and on his knees that morning, with his wife, he had asked God to send the people to the meeting. His prayer had been answered and so many people had come to the meeting that the room would not hold them. God always answered his prayers. He had taken him out of the paths of sin and enabled him to consecrate himself every day to God's service. He thanked God for what he had done for him.

Several made remarks and exhortations of interest and profit. One brother spoke of the students' weekly prayer meeting at Wheaton College, which it had been his privleege to attend the evening before. A good work seemed to be in progress among these interesting young people. Several spoke of a new hope in Christ, others asked prayers that they might experience the same blessing. There was hope of a good work among the students of the Institution.

Another brother, Rev. W. E Holyoke, said that twenty years ago he attended the noon-day prayer-meeting in Chicago, which was then held in a smaller room than that in which they were assembled. It was the first time the speaker ever saw Mr. Mooly, who was even then distinguished for his zeal in the cause of Christ. The gentleman believed that the West Side meetings ought to be greatly successful. It would afford a great many brethren a chance to take part who could get no opportunity in the larger meeting on the South Side.

A recent convert said that thirteen weeks ago he was a wanderer and an outcast, and the victim of strong drink. He had been redeemed, and now rejoiced in salvation. He had been saved, he believed, through the prayers of his pious parents, who had for many years prayed for him. He and his wife were to start to-morrow for his parents' home in Virginia, and he asked the prayers of all Christians.

One young man expressed a desire to be a Christian and asked for prayers.

A few more prayers and hymns filled up an hour that was felt to be a blessing by all present; and those most interested in the meeting had fresh courage for the work.

On Thursday, Rev. E. P. Goodwin led the meeting, choosing for his subject, "Work," a suitable theme to dwell upon following the topic of the day before, which be illuminated by the reading of numerous scripture passages. He thought that every Christian should be alive to the fact that the fields were now ripe for the harvest. Christians didn't have faith enough that they would succeed in their work. They ought to be bolder in the service of their Master. Every one knew many, in his own circle of acquaintances, with whom he had influence, and whom he might win to Christ. He thought that in this revival season every Christian ought to try to lead at least one soul a week to the Savior.

Several experiences were related, and among them a few interesting remarks by a reformed saloon-keeper who, with his wife, had been converted at the Tabernacle meetings, and relinquished the liquor traffic, which he had followed for many years.

—On Friday the temperance prayer-meeting was well attended and the large upper room occupied. A number of most interesting testimonies were given of saving grace in lifting the speakers from the pit of intemperance. Several yet without God or hope were brought into the meeting and requested prayers.

P. P. Bliss.

MEMORIAL SERVICES IN THE FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

The services at the First Congregational Church, corner of Ann and Washington streets, Sabbath evening, January 14th, were intended as a tribute of respect for the memory of Philip P. Bliss and his wife, who were both members of this congregation. The auditorium, galleries aisles, pulpit and choir were packed and at least a thousand people were obliged to go away on account of the lack of standing-room. The church was draped, and on the pulpit platform were several stands covered with trailing plants, and surrounded by flowers arranged in different designs—harps, crosses, etc.—the contributions of friends.

Addresses were made by the pastor, Dr. Goodwin, and Major Whittle. The latter was thus reported in the Tribune:

Major Whittle spoke at some length, and the tears of sorrow in his eyes, when alluding to his deceased associate, made many of his auditors weep. He said he was glad to meet those who knew Mr. and Mrs. Bliss. His absence had prevented him from being present at any memorial services, and he had had no opportunity to present such a tribute as it was in his heart to present. When he returned he found a hundred letters from all over the country—from places where they had labored in the past. He read several of them, and the writers expressed their deep sense of the loss the church has sustained. To those who knew him intimately the memory of him would be of one who was indeed the chosen instrument of the Lord. He was an humble man, with a very modest idea of any power in himself. It was not him, but the grace of God through him, that did the work. The church and the world had lost one used of God as a great blessing. He himself had lost a companion in labor. Mr. Moody, when in Scotland, desired them to go out into the Gospel work. It was a great deal for him (Bliss) to give up his business and his home. After prayer they started. At Wankegan they gave themselves to God, and he showed them by unmistakable answers to their prayers that it was his will that they should go forward. That was April 1, 1874; and they had been together since in Gospel meetings, in prisons, with the poor, by the bedside of the sick and the dying. He could not tell them how he loved Bliss, how he grieved for him, as he looked forward to the future of the work to which both had been jointly called, and in which they were so intimately connected. He knew it was the will of the Master, and he would go forward relying for strength from on high. There was no pride about him. He was always wondering that his songs should be used—wondering at the goodness of God to him, going along like a little child with his hands full of gifts, wondering why they were bestowed upon him. He was sensitive to the feelings of others, and did not take the decided position in some matters, which perhaps would have been better, simply because of this sensitiveness. He was the purest man the speaker ever knew. Grace made him what he was. His life ripened the last three months as he came nearer to God; and his wife's life also. They had all been together since October, praying and singing and planning to go to England. Until the last six months Mr. Bliss had hardly enough income to buy what was needed for his family, and mother and two sisters. Many a time he knew not where the money was to come from to pay his bills. When at last there was a promise of income from the sale of hymns, he sacrificed it, and trustees were appointed to receive the revenue; without a moment's hesitation he gave up $12,000 a year and went on with his work, looking to the Lord for help. This was grace, love of souls, consecration to Jesus Christ. Three things were chiefly in his heart, as clear to him as the sun in mid heaven, as being the Gospel of the Son of God: Jesus Christ and him crucified; Jesus Christ and him risen, a living Savior in heaven; Jesus Christ and him coming again in person. Not a day passed but he thought the Lord might return. All his hymns bore testimony to this truth. Christ's return was the thought and inspiration that thrilled his soul. In conclusion Mr. Whittle expressed the wish that the truth might come home to the Christians present, and lead them to give themselves to God as never before, and made an urgent appeal to the unconverted to come to Christ.

Mr. McGranahan then sang one of the last hymns which Mr. Bliss wrote—one found in his home at Rome, the chorus of which had not been finished. It commenced—

I know not who's before me,
God kindly veils my eyes.

After a brief prayer by Major Whittle, the services were closed by singing "Till he come," and the benediction.

The general results of the Gospel meetings under Moody and Sankey are thus summed up in the Tribune.

Mr. Moody has for a long time refused to give the number of hopeful conversions resulting from his meetings, but the following facts and figures may serve to show the magnitude of the success over which 10,000 or 12,000 of the Christians of Chicago and vicinity met to rejoice last evening. There are 4,500 chairs on the main floor of the tabernacle, all of which were occupied by persons who came in on young converts' tickets. There were also many of the same class in the galleries, besides those who, being late were not able to gain admittance at all. The number of persons already received into the Chicago churches are set down as follows: Baptist, 300; Congregational, 300; Methodist 700; Presbyterian, 750; Reformed Episcopal, 300; besides many received into the German, Welsh, and other smaller churches not definitely reported. It is safe to say that 2,500 new members have already been received into the churches of Chicago and vicinity, with perhaps an equal number known to the pastors, who are expected to join at some future time. About 6,000 tickets were given out for the farewell meeting, of which a careful record was kept; the name, residence, and church membership of every individual being written down, in order to be classified by churches and districts, and the names sent to the pastors of these churches, into whose care they appropriately fall. Thus every one is to be looked after, and as, according to the proportion of several lists already examined, not more than one in ten of the professed converts have yet joined any church, the whole number of conversions, and of persons reclaimed from backsliding, cannot fall short of 8 000, besides uncounted multitudes who have come from other places and returned with a blessing on their souls, whose names, of course, did not appear on the record.

There never was such a really good, substantial, satisfactory, and rapid selling Sewing Machine offered so low as the "NEW FAMILY SHUTTLE," at $20. It surpasses expectations, and fulfills all the requirements of every Family as no other. It will do every description of work—fine or coarse—that any machine at any price ever did, or can do, equally as rapid, even smooth, pent and strong lock stitch—the same on both sides—easy to tear and manage, is serviceable, don't wear out, never out of order, and never gets out of repair. A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAPBOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

THE WORK OF THE HOUR.

What has been DONE about it in the week ending Jan 20th:

Rev. Isaac Bancroft, Belmont, Wisconsin, sends a club of eleven for a year, and one for six months. Wm. Nickle, Nickleville, Pa., sends a club of ten for a year. J. A. Rohrer, Bloomington, Illinois, sends five for a year. J. H. Hanna, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, sends a club of twenty-six for a year, and one for six months, and later sends five more. Such a club will give the powers of darkness a heavy blow and is a fair illustration of what an earnest man may accomplish and at the same time attend to his own business. Pittsburgh is a large city, and will, with God's blessing, send many more such peaceable though powerful weapons for the prosecution of this warfare.

Four weeks from the date of this paper will occur the anniversary of Geo. Washington's birthday. If the ladies will arrange a public supper for that evening, invite some suitable person to give a review of Washington's Farewell Address, some young folks to sing, etc., a profitable and pleasant time might be the result. Especially if during the intervening four weeks you work for the Cynosure. Work as if determined to make the list ten thousand this winter, and then make that supper a thanksgiving occasion. Some realize the importance of circulating the Cynosure and know that ten thousand subscribers cannot be secured without persevering toil, and are joyfully at work "For God and Humanity." Others are beginning to appreciate the situation and are preparing for the labor.

Listen to

WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT THIS WORK OF THE HOUR.

Dan'l Mabee, Spencer, New York, writes: "This is the first new subscriber I have got as yet."

B. B. Salmon, Larwill, Indiana, writes: "I intend to raise a club of ten or more, if it takes all winter."

H. W. Marsh, Elmwood, Illinois, writes: "Although I think I have done very well I do not want you to suppose I am satisfied and content to let the matter rest. The word with me is success, and that means steady work." Dr. Marsh has sent a club of fifty-two since the first of January.

L. Powers, Ashley, Delaware Co., Ohio, sends two subscriptions and writes: "I think I will have more names soon. It seems hard to get subscribers. Money is scarce; times are hard; but the cause is growing here fast. * * * I think I will succeed."

A. T. Wickwire, North Clymer, New York, writes: "I was in hopes to get up a club, but people say money is too scarce. I SHALL TRY AGAIN."

F. M. Thomas, Oakland City, Indiana, writes: "We are trying to secure a club for your paper."

John Macauley, Pittsfield, Illinois, writes: "I am getting up a club of ten for the Cynosure. I have seven now."

Rev. Isaac Bancroft, Belmont, Wisconsin, sends a club of eleven for a year, and one for six months, and writes: "I paid for the paper myself for three months to thirteen subscribers and I am satisfied I shall get the thirteen subscriptions from those that I sent it to or from those that they gave the paper to and so interested them in it. I now make enough on these to pay me back and so I have lost nothing.

"I would say, 'Hold the Fort,' for we are sure to win. * * * Please send me 100 Cynosure Supplements, of December 14th.

"I HAVE MADE UP MY MIND THAT WE MUST ENLARGE THE CYNOSURE SUBSCRIPTION LIST. * * * I have taken the paper almost ever since it was started. I intend to take it at whatever price until I cease to read or the paper ceases to be."

C. L. Blanchard, Hillsdale, Michigan, writes: "Old Mr. Baldwin is trying to get up a club of ten here."

James McCord, Moline, Illinois, writes: "I will do all I can to obtain subscribers to your paper."

These are words which we have received during the past week about this great work.

The next week has an unwritten record. At its close will your name be found connected with an earnest effort to extend the circulation of of the Cynosure? Rev. S. H. Adams, of Chicago, said recently (what every successful worker realizes to some extent at least) that the hardest part of doing work is the getting fairly at it. If you sit down and talk of the hard times and other obstacles, great difficulties may rise before you. A good rule is to "work first and talk afterwards."

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this Slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK.

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after application. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On

TIN ROOFS

our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

BRICK WALLS.

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

CENTRAL KANSAS ASSOCIATION.

The first regular meeting of this Association will be held in Good Will school house, two miles north of Sterling, Rice county, Kansas, February 9 10, 1877. A general invitation is extended to all friends of the cause.

G. W. KELLER, Pres.
WM L. HINSHAW, Sec'y.

TO CONNECTICUT FRIENDS.

Through the zeal of J. A. Conant, Esq. of Willimantic, and a few co-workers, our excellent brother, Philip Bacon, whom many of you know, is now in the field as a colporteur, tract distributer and canvasser for the Cynosure. We bespeak for him the hearty support of all. He is especially desirous to know of neighborhoods where such a canvass would be likely to prove successful, and also to have a list of those persons in each neighborhood on whom such a call would be wise. Address Philip Bacon, Weatogue, Conn.

MR. RONAYNE returned from Michigan last Saturday evening, Jan. 27th, where he had been laboring during the previous week as follows:

Monday evening 22d, at Herrickville, a lecture; Tuesday and Wednesday 23d and 24th, at Homer, first and third degrees; Thursday, 25th, again at Herricksville, first degree; Friday 26th, at Litchfield, third degree. Next week Tuesday he visits Plattsville, Ont.

Friends in Michigan and elsewhere will address him at this office. Friend Remington will also please forward all letters.

Topics of the Time.

A very important effect of the stand taken by the Centennial commission on Sabbath opening is being realized in the new international exhibition now preparing for 1878 in France, the government suspending labor on the works on that day. The observance of the day, say careful observers, is greatly increasing in Paris. The laboring classes are generally in favor of one day of rest in seven; shops are largely closed on the Sabbath, and only places of amusements as a rule are still kept open. Chicago, considering her advantages, is likely to fare ill in comparison with the city of fashion and folly in this respect. The "Sunday lecture" courses" are growing more popular and several theaters are largely patronized by the foreign residents. There is yet room enough for evangelical work here, and Christians are of all men most unwise if they do not with all their energy follow into the breach made by the Moody meetings. The prejudice of the press and of unbelievers as largely broken down, and a steady, valiant charge all along the line will take the city.

The invasion of the Supreme Court in the interest of the partisan politics, as contemplated in the compromise bill, must be a matter of sincere regret to every patriotic American. The four judges already selected by the bill were so chosen because of their supposed political affinity, and five of the seven will be occupied in arbitrating between Republicans and Democrats. A fifth will vacate his seat in the Court to begin an ambitious race for the Presidency through the Senate. The Supreme Court should be above and beyond the reach of the conflicting elements that disturb our political life. Upon that theory it was founded, and though the principle has not always been followed, no violation of it should be regarded but with alarm.

Dr. Monfort, editor of the Herald and Presbyter, Cincinnati, writes to his paper from Syria where he is traveling, that ten thousand soldiers were being drafted from Syria and Palestine by the Turkish government and soldiers were met everywhere on the way from Damascus to Jerusalem. While the conscripts were sullen and desperate and the people generally would be glad to be free from the Turkish rule, yet there is also, he says, a general feeling that the Christians are the cause of the war and ought to be its victims, not only of the Greek church but all others. There is great apprehension among this class of wholesale massacre in case of war with Russia and many are removing from the country. Travelers and missionaries are less in danger than others, yet the latter are sending their families to places of greater security. The Turkish government is aware of this fanatical spirit and has instructed the subordinate rulers to guard against it.

The ability with which the Turk has met the proposals of the European powers and the vigor with which his warlike preparations have been made will modify his title of the "sick man of Europe." Unless we imagine his activity to be simply the frenzy of disease, there is a wonderful amount of vitality left. The probability also that the Porte will conclude its own terms of peace with the revolted provinces and they are more than half willing to have it so, is significant of the termination of the present attempted revolution. Russia yet hesitates to begin war alone and waits it is said for a nod from Olympian Bismarck that Austria shall not interfere for the Turk. The obligations of the English to their Moslem debtors are considered cancelled by the conference. Thus last week closed in as much uncertainty as ever; which might yet be better than the ravages of war.

Rev. Arthur Mitchell, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of this city lately told in the Farwell Hall noon meeting of a remarkable cure in answer to prayer which lately come under his own observation. A Christian lady residing near his church with whom he had been acquainted seven years had all that time been bed-ridden and speechless from a stroke of paralysis. A while since she became impressed with the thought of cure through Divine power and that she must kneel by the bed and ask for healing. She made the attempt with great difficulty, succeeding in getting upon her knees and while in the act of prayer strength came into her diseased organs and she arose and told her astonished friends with her own tongue the wonderful work of God. Another case said to be well authenticated is told in the daily press of a young lady living near Winchester, Iowa, who has for several years been grivously afflicted with a painful disease of the eyes. Her physicians exhausted their skill and gave her up to her fate. In her extremity she determined to call upon the living God for help, and continued earnestly in prayer to him, her faith in his power growing stronger daily A few days ago the family were surprised to see her come from her dark room with sight undeniably and perfectly restored. Such cases, while they excite the wonder and perhaps derision of unbelievers, are a confirmation to the Christian of the words of his Divine Lord, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son."

WORKING FOR GOD.

AN OLD POEM.

Oh, it is hard to work for God,
To rise and take his part
Upon this battle-field of earth,
And not sometimes lose heart.

He hides himself so wondrously,
As though there were no God;
He least is seen when all the powers
Of ill are most abroad.

Or he deserts us at the hour
The fight is almost lost,
And seems to leave us to ourselves
Just when we need him most.

Ill masters good; good seems to change
To ill with greatest ease;
And, worst of all, the good with good
Is at cross-purposes.

It is not so, but so it looks;
And we lose courage then;
And doubts will come if God hath kept
His promises to men.

Ah! God is other than we think!
His ways are far above,
Far above reason's height, and reached
Only by child-like love.

The look, the fashion of God's ways,
Love's life-long study are;
She can be bold, and guess and act,
When reason would not dare.

She has a prudence of her own;
Her step is firm and free.
Yet there is cautious science, too,
In her simplicity.

Workman of God, oh, lose not heart,
But learn what God is like;
And in the darkest battle-field
Thou shalt know where to strike.

Oh, blest is he to whom is given
The instinct that can tell
That God is on the field when he Is most invisible.

And blest is he who can divine
Where real right doth lie,
And dares to take the side that seems
Wrong to man's blindfold eye.

Oh, learn to scorn the praise of men!
Oh, learn to love with God!
For Jesus won the world through shame,
And beckons thee his road.

God's glory is a wondrous thing,
Most strange in all its ways,
And, of all things on earth, least like
What men agree to praise.

Muse on his justice, downcast soul;
Muse, and take better heart;
Back with thine angel to the field;
Good luck shall crown thy part.

God's justice is a bed where we
Our anxious hearts may lay,
And weary with ourselves, may sleep
Our discontent away.

For right is right, since God is God,
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin.

HOLINESS.

BY J. B. SLIGHT.

Holiness is an attribute of God, and as his people should be like him; so far as it is possible for the human to imitate the divine, they are required also to be holy. "Be ye holy for I am holy." Christian sanctity, or holiness, takes in the idea of moral purity; purity of motives, purity of faith, and purity of practice. If I would succeed in becoming assimilated into the likeness of God, my motives must be pure, I must loose sight of selfish ends, and consecrate myself to him at all hazards; policy must not be an incentive or I shall surely fail. If questions like the following are suggested to the mind will my avowed principles meet the approval of the masses? or shall I modify and assent to some things on account of their popularity, that my influence may be the greater? What disposition should I make of these suggestions?

One writer in a public journal not long since, said, "You would do wisely to secure respectful attention, and win the confidence of those who have another standard erected." If I do this, knowing at the same time that God says, "Come out from among them"; are not my motives impure, and shall I not fail? Most assuredly I shall. Holiness implies purity of faith also. But the question is, on what basis does the faith of Christians rest? The Gospel of the Son of God is the true standard of Christian faith. Paul says, "that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men."

Some one has recently made the discovery that conscience is a sufficient guide to direct in the pathway of holiness, and says, "The National Association wisely left the question of connection with all secret societies to individual conscience." Whether the Association referred to [the National Holiness Association] has or has not left the question of secrecy as the writer states we have not time to look after just at this time; probably he has made a mistake. But he says, "they did wisely". Does reason and revelation teach that holy men should open the doors of God's temple to selfishness, hypocrisy, falsehood, profanity, and licentiousness, with other abominations, connected directly and indirectly with secrecy, and expect to succeed in the work of promoting holiness? Surely not. Paul says, "if any man defile this temple him will God destroy." Yet the writer alluded to above says "it would be wisdom to leave the question of connection with all secret societies to individual conscience." Why not leave other evils to be settled by conscience, which the Association have emphatically forbidden, such as jesting, joking, evil speaking, tobacco-using and whisky-drinking, none of which gather around them more evil than organized secrecy? And if the Bible standard can be wisely laid aside and let a perverted conscience take its place on the secrecy question why not on the other evils, and let every man's conscience be his guide to holiness and his test of membership in the church of God? Why bind mens' conscience in some things which are evil in their nature and not in the other? Every well informed Christian knows that the per verted conscience of man will not do to set up as the standard of holiness. A few years ago there were men professing holiness whose hands were stained with the blood of their fellow men in the slave trade, and because of their high standing in church and loud professions many persons said the slave institution cannot be bad, or these good men would sever their connection with it. But these good men, so called, had evil consciences.

An old Kentucky Methodist once said, "I used to bend my conscience to suit my business, as all slaveholders had to do, and as Masons now have to do." This reveals the secret. These so-called good men among Masons, have consciences of their own manufacturing; and although they profess godliness their practice is opposed to that profession. They live in daily opposition to that voice that John heard from heaven, saying, "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins." How can one possibly live a holy life whose practice it is to meet in those dens of darkness, associated with Jews, heathen, skeptics, and drunkards?

A few years ago an interesting revival of religion took place in one of our towns, several good citizens became awakened. One of them one day went to a class leader, saying, "I hope you will attend the meeting this evening, for I am seeking religion, and I feel that your prayers and instructions would be a great help to me." The leader coolly said: "Not this evening; the lodge has special business to attend to and I must be there." "Well," said the penitent, "come out to-morrow." "Can't," said the leader, "I am an officer of the Odd-fellow lodge and must attend to my official duties." "Well, come the next evening said," the anxious inquirer. "George, you astonish me," said the leader, "you know the Templars meet that evening, and you should be there yourself. We cannot afford to let the temperance interests go down, if there is a revival meeting in progress." This convinced the man whose soul was burdened with sin that secretism was in antagonism to Christianity; and although he had been joined to that little harlot, he severed his connection, and I do not suppose that any form of organized secrecy can ever ensnare himagain.

Lodge Logic and Mr. Moody.

West Unity, O.

Editor Cynosure.—In your paper of Dec. 28, I find an article from "A Minister," censuring Mr. Moody for daring to speak against secret societies, without even consulting the Masonic "Mrs. Grundy." He seems to think that one of the prime elements of a minister's success is the ignoring of all questions at all controversial, as between the widely differing denominations of Christians. This being the case no minister who wished to be successful would dare teach what his conscience, or his Bible told him to, until he had first consulted the opinions of all the widely differing denominations of Christians; if they all agreed, he could go on, if not he must hold his peace, no matter what the God of Heaven said about it.

Let us suppose a case: "A Minister" accepts a call, or is sent by his conference, (as the case may be) among entire strangers. According to the above rule he goes to work to find out how low the lowest member of the lowest church has got, and then he must never rise above that, lest some controverted question spring up, and the peace and harmony of the churches be disturbed. We can think of no hypocrisy so base as for such a minister to get on his knees and ask God to direct him.

We have had quite a number of revivalists within the last hundred and fifty years, probably none greater than Whitefield, and anyone who will read his biography, or his sermons will find that he did not ignore all controverted questions, by any means. But let us examine the state of society and of the churches when he commenced his labors and learn what questions "A Minister" would have had him ignore. We are informed that the highest personages in the land then openly lived in ways contrary to the laws of God, and no man rebuked them. Profligacy and irreligion were reputable and respectable. A gentleman might have been defined as a creature who got drunk, gambled, swore, fought duels, and violated the seventh commandment, and very few thought the less of him for it. The clergy were usually sons of the gentry, and accustomed to their sporting, drinking, and riotous habits; they passed at once from college to ministerial charges, and again mixed in all the dissipation of the districts where these lay. A good old Methodist describes the situation thus: "The morals of the country were very corrupt, and in this respect there was no difference between high and low, layman and clergyman; gluttony, drunkenness and licentiousness prevailed through the whole country. Nor were the operations of the church at all adapted to repress these evils; from the pulpit the name of the Redeemer was scarcely heard." Another tells us, "Sterne and Swift then wrote their talented, but obscene books; both of them were clergymen, but the public saw little inconsistency in their conduct." And Toplady informs us, "At that period a converted minister in the establishment was as great a wonder as a comet."

"A Minister" would probably have advised Mr. Whitefield something as follows: "Study the situation thoroughly before you start, and then be careful not to tread on anybody's toes." How often he would have whistled down the brakes, lest good old C. G. Finney's firery zeal and much plainness of speech might ruin the churches.

But suppose Mr. Moody had answered the question something in this way: "I am in wonderful sympathy with secret societies; they (particularly Masonry) teach morality, charity, and brotherly love, and I have no sympathy with this effort to break them up; hope it will come to naught. Brethren, I long to see the day when all the inhabitants of the earth shall be gathered into the Masonic fold, except the poor, the blind, the lame, the halt, the diseased, the aged, and particularly all women, and those who were so untortunate as not to have been born free." Would "A Minister" have denouned that course as "simply unfair, and every way reprehensible, not to say unchristian?" In charity to him we will say, we guess he would; for how could he be honest if he would'nt? But if it is a minister's duty to ignore all controverted questions, then he certainly ought to ignore both sides of them. This being the case we think "A Minister" made about as many points against himself as against Mr. Moody.

A few years ago when the master's interest demanded it, the poor slave was separated from his companion, and the church did not venture to open her mouth, and whoever it was that said "What therefore God hath joined together let not man put asunder," would doubtless have been denounced by "A Minister" as simply unfair, and every way reprehensible, not to say unChristian." Of course it would not be safe for any minister to say in his presence, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise;" for the churches are divided on that question. How he would have plead with good old Josiah for the high places, the groves, the carved images and the moulten images of Judah and Jerusalem, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3. Why, don't nearly all Jerusalem and Judah worship these things? Of course they did; still Josiah did not "ignore" the question as his father Amon had. Jeremiah would doubtless come in for his share for writing, "Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture,' Jer. xxiii. 1; or Jer. vi. 13: "From the prophet even unto the priest every one dealeth falsely." No doubt Jeremiah's course was denounced as "simply unfair, and every way reprehensible," by the pastors, the prophets and priests of his time, but he gave his opinion nevertheless, and we are very thankfut that there are still a few like him.

If "A Minister" had written the Revelations he had doubtless "ignored" the doctrine of Balaam, and the Nicolaitans in writing to the angel of the church of Pergamos. Why not? Some of the churches held to it, and some didn't and how could he do otherwise and be consistent? But he informs us that the Baptist church and the Methodist church are "mere human organizations." I know it is getting to be a common way for secretists to reply to our objections to Masonry and Odd-fellowship by saying "they are as good as the churches." But how "A Minister" could join in singing "Hail Masonry Divine" without setting the lodge above the church we fail to see. Again, he asks, "By what authority does Mr. Moody sit in judgment on the lives and essay to keep the consciences of his brethren? Forgetting that he is sitting in judgment on the life, and essaying to keep the conscience of Mr. Moody. We think it a very poor defense of secretism, yet it is considerably better than rotten eggs, brick-bats, rail-riling, shooting, throat-cutting, or poison. J. G. MATTOON.

BOTH WAYS.

It is a poor rule that won't work both ways! Masons tempt young men by presenting the social advantages everywhere they go as Masons, and "Oh no, nobody dislikes anyone for being a Mason;" consequently the Mason has every advantage of the common citizen or Christian, and in addition, the charm of his own secret circle ever assured to him! Now it is evident that when a band of men are known to be associated together under oath, (as Masons and some other secretists are) the other members of the community are necessarily conscious that they not only do not participate in any benefits of such societies but that they are regarded rather as fair spoil, and at least are ignored if not injured. Thus it becomes a matter of self-defense for non-secretists to demand from applicants for employment or office or social enjoyment or church membership, whether or not he is or is not a Mason. For it is clear as a sunbeam that when a man recognizes his obligations to obey a power which waves its rod of authority in secret, and in utter irresponsibility to public sentiment either politically or religiously, or socially, that man forfeits his rights as such citizen, or church member, or social companion in the same way as when a soldier is enlisted, his orders from his officers take precedence of every former duty. When some dire calamity happens people open their eyes and say, "Why was not the cause guarded against? why was not more attention given to that Ashtabula bridge? why not one engine for two small trains instead of two heavy ones for one train?" How easy to avoid a visible danger! But let the potato bug alone and the crop will be lost! Let smooth-tongued hypocrisy have its way and good-bye to honest worth. Let secret societies obtain the supremacy in our land and farewell everything for which our country is worthy of regard. Farewell liberty in the state, and farewell to the supreme authority of Christ over the heart and life of our people. Young man halt! Beware of the Masonic trap!

FAIR PLAY.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

The able and influential Baptist weekly, the Watchman and Reflector, said a while since of these societies, We have long been convinced of their immense evil. Our knowledge of them is based upon a very intimate acquaintance, having ourselves been members of two or more of them. We object to them for various reasons. They are exceedingly costly, exposing students to temptations, and involving their parents in expenses which it is hard for them to meet. They are in spirit in direct opposition to republican and Christian principles. Their tendency is to create and foster a feeling of caste among students. We happened to belong to a society which prided itself upon its very superior character. It was exclusive and severely select. It raised its claims, not upon any moral or individual excellence, but upon its social and pecuniary condition. Its members, in the excess of conceit, looked down with pity and contempt upon men of other societies and those of no society. This prejudice rendered it impossible to appreciate those qualities in others which might justly claim the highest respect and even a tender friendliness. No doubt these same feelings were shared by the others in respect to this particular society. But what an idea! A hundred and more of young men living under skies where wealth and lineage count for nothing, dividing themselves up into orders and ranks, where the rampant spirit was that of intense hostility and a deep-seated contempt of each other! The effect produced upon a young man by this constant exaltation of "his society" and of "his men," and this constant belittling and depreciation of those of rival societies is certainly bad. It often takes years for a graduate so far to get free from the power of these old prejudices as to be able to recognize the sterling worth which belongs to classmates who, while in college, wore other pins. Some men never break through these associations, but live and die in the old spirit of pride and intolerance.

But there is a more serious evil than this. In these colleges there are always certain literary societies, where these secret societies meet on a common basis to contend for honor and office. Each secret society here works and plots to carry the day for its man. The party spirit here rages far more intensely than it does in any ordinary political campaign. The worst passions in human nature aroused; jealousy, hatred, favoritism are all aflame. These prompt the eager contestants to the use of unscrupulous and dishonest means and methods for insuring victory. The meannesses, the knaveries, the hypocrisies, the unblushing falsehoods which are resorted to in some of these contests, are really appalling.

We recall instances of ballot-repeating and box-stuffing which no ward in New York could execute with greater skill or success. Worse than this, we recall instances where the foulest hypocrisy was practiced, where religious conversion was feigned by a candidate in order to win to his support one or more members of a religious society whose votes were necessary to win the day. And men drilled in such an arena of party strife and "measures" graduate into the great political field outside, making the most skilled, and effective wire-workers, the most adroit and unscrupulous manipulators of men which are there found. Many of the most consummate political tricksters who figure so conspicuously on party platforms, at the caucus, and in Congress, got their vicious education in their "classic days," when they fought and schemed under the stimulus of these secret societies for these literary offices. We do not know how these secret societies, which are multiplying so fast in our colleges, are going to be abolished, but of their enormous evil we are fully convinced.

THE ORIGIN AND RISE OF THE ALBANY LODGE.

Masonry was not known in Albany before the Revolution. About 1790 a clever Dutch lawyer, who wanted to multiply his clients, and a shrewd Yankee tavern keeper, willing to increase his bar-room circle, put their heads together to see what could be done for the craft. Shortly after (in 1791, '92) says Southwick in his "Solemn Warning:"

"A very ingenious brother Yankee of mine, with whom I had been slightly acquainted before he settled here, who worked in leather and pasteboard on some occasions, at paper staining on others, and like many of our sun-rising brethren, knew how to make an honest penny at the same time in several other ingenious but lawful pursuits. To do him justice he had a versatility of talent, and nature had bountifully endowed him with sagacity and foresight. He had read Jachin and Boaz, honest Samuel Pritchard's "Masonry Dissected," the "Three Distinct Knocks," and several other luminous treatises, and none the more luminous for being true portraits of Freemasonry. He perceived at a single glance, that those who could believe for a moment, in the utility of such trash and mummery must be fit subjects for him to speculate upon: hence he was not long in making up his mind to join the aforesaid lawyer and publican, that a trio might be formed who could very adroitly aid each other's views. The coalition was no sooner conceived than it was consummated, and our hero was elevated (being a rare genius) in the twinkling of an eye, to the highest or one of the highest niches in the Temple of Wisdom. He now commenced in earnest the plan he had formed before he exchanged the mysterious grip with is new associates. My brother Yankee, as I said before, was an ingenious workman in leather and lamb skins; and as every new-born babe in Masonry would want a bib or apron, the more "blind candidates" he ushered into the marvelous light of Bro. ——'s mysterious garret, the more aprons he sold. He employed at one time half the young seamstresses in the city, at stitching on the borders and finishing off these bibs for the babes and sucklings of the mystic tie. * * He was also a paper-stainer, and consequently the more lodges that were chartered, the more of his colored paper was called for to decorate their altars and their walls. What universal charity! What expanded benevolence! Shylock was a simpleton to this speculator in Masonic decorations, signals and symbols!

There was a very ingenious painter, also one of my sun-rising brethren, who then instituted a gloomy retreat in a narrow lane, where he enjoyed scarce light enough by which to mix his colors; and where like Shakespeare's apothecary (between whom and my friend there was a striking resemblance) he would languish, almost without hope, if not in absolute despair week after week, if not month after month, without having his dark hole, though it was the retreat of genius, illuminated by the smile of an amateur, much less a patron. The reader, therefore, will not be surprised to learn that this son of genius and obscurity soon discovered that the lamb skin bibs or aprons were not complete—not fit to adorn the persons of the sons of light—till, by the aid of the pencil and pallet, their spotless and virgin white was made to yield, in part, to the colored and gilded forms of certain sublime hierogliphics, at the sight of which a new-born babe in Masonry (as well as the optics of an old Noodle) will glisten like those of a cat in a coal barrel. Our worthy painter found it the best thing he could do—seeing the solitary state of his shop, to join the grand trio, who had already got their sublime vocation in the full tide of successful experiment.

Before the painter's eyes were opened to the marvelous light which shines on and about the altars of the craft, there was another worthy sun-rising brother of mine, who, as the old song says,

"Made hats upon blocks, for blockheads to wear."

This honest adventurer, who had been journeyman to the publican before the latter left off handling fur to retail Madeira and manufacture Freemasons, was quick to perceive that if Freemasonry did not make blockheads, it took in, slick enough, all it could catch ready made in the natural way. He had emerged from journey work and opened a shop on his own account. The main chance occupied his thoughts, as it does that of all pains-taking men. He had a room full of blocks, for which, in the infancy of his business he had but little if any use; and which, as they were ranged round his shelves, in silent and solemn order, very naturally put him in mind of a lodge in session—

"Where one fool lolls his tongue out at another
And shakes his empty noddle at his brother."

My good friend was quick to perceive that to find heads for his blocks, the Masonic lodge was the place to resort to, after the toils of the day. He entered, with a lively hope that his idle blocks would soon start from their resting shelves, and be seen to bloom and flourish in the richest of beaver, to deck the noddles of the Entered Apprentices and Fellow Craftsmen and Masters and Graud Masters, and Graud High Priests, and Grand Kings, and other illustrious diguitaries, who swell the catalogue of the Noodle nobility of the self-created order.

These were the Five Scribes and Pharisees, who carried on, for a long while, the old Noodle manufactory in North Pearl street, and afterwards in Court street. * * Under the auspices of the little five headed monster the work went bravely on. Every publican who came to town was sure to find his way to the Union Lodge, happily so called, from the generous and noble spirited union of so many various and disinterested interests. A Dutch lawyer, and a shrewd one too; a Yankee tavern-keeper, who knew something more than "a hawk from a handsaw"; a Yankee book der, who had studied mankind as ll as "Masonry Dissected," and ew precisely when and where to nmence the art of making lamb- n aprons; a Yankee painter, who ew how to make them shine with insignia of the Ducal Order, and Yankee hatter, who knew where find block-heads to suit his emp- blocks – these formed altogether are "brotherhood of hope," as ll as of "mutual help."

To the Grand Master of Illinois.

Nauvoo, Ill., Jan. 1, 1877.

To Joseph Robbins, Grand Master of A. F. & A. Masons of Illinois,

Greeting:—On the day when most men are passing the compliments of the New Year, and uttering countless wishes for their mutual prosperity, it is fit that as a Freemason, I should pay my due respects to the Grand Master of Illinois, and through him to the fraternity. And this particular attention cannot appear but perfectly natural to the man who has been a prominent and active instrument in openingmy eyes to the deceitful fraud called Freemasonry, and the untold dangers which its continued existence must entail upon the free institutions, and the religion of our country.

This, my dear sir and Grand Master, is an occasion which I have long sought and patiently waited for, though I do not intend to give, nor can you require, a lengthy detail of the numerous causes which have brought the change upon me. You are, or should be, well acquainted with the facts; your high position, for a number of years, has secured you the privilege. Nor is it really necessary that I should refresh your memory with your singularly partial and powerful favor towards the Worshipful Master of Reclamation Lodge No. 54, whose vices and Masonic crimes I had arraigned and proved before you and your chosen friends, by the most authentic, though reluctant, evidence; a partiality and injustice that has ever since subjected me to all sorts of indignities, cowardly insults, a social ban, ruin, and even to the repeated threats of death, making of my life one of the most wretched that human imagination can conceive.

You, and your confederates, no doubt relied upon arts which, while they abused the confidence, deceived the inexperience of the Grand Lodge; and furthermore, on the peculiar delicacy of my situation as a Freemason. You knew that my obligations deprived me of the defence I might otherwise make against the insidious attacks of malignant and persevering enemies. You knew that I could not combat their slanders and calumnies, however injurious, without disclosing the secrets of Masonry, important to conceal; you knew that doing otherwise I would be exposed to the resentment of a considerable and active institution; to the censure of the most liberal, which is seldom the far-seeing and most reflecting postion of mankind; and to the ignominy which, in every age and country, has attended the character of an informer. Knowing these things you and your friends, accomplices, relied on them to perpetrate an act of injustice which must for ever stand the eternal shame of Masonry, and cause to blush the yet honorable men—and there are many, who have been, through weakness or curiosity, allured into the society, and fail to see an honorable way out of it. Your conduct disclosed to my astonished vision Grand officers who could ignore, or sacrifice, without reluctance the laws of Masonic justice to the dictates either of their interest or of their passions; who, in their anxiety to shield the guilty, could even forget that when courts of Masonic justice pervert their brotherly mission, and lend themselves to the accomplishment of party ends, they cease to be respectable and become infamous, and that loyalty to Masonry, as to anything else, is to be won only by even handed justice, by that alone!

In a moment of great thoughtlessness, which might be excused by a greater curiosity, I took several obligations, and, under pain of unparalleled penalties, a most frightful and cruel death, I promised fidelity and obedience to the laws of Masonry and mandates of the Grand Lodge. But these obligations were mutual; Masonry had likewise promised to assist, protect, and defend my person, and my interests from all enemies, whoever they were. You, sir, first, your predecessor Jas. A. Hawley next, and the Grand Lodge since, when I asked only not to be condemned unheard, have been guilty of treason and desertion, have connived with my enemies, in the perpetration of the most cruel injuries that can be inflicted upon an innocent, honorable man; a man whose only guilt, if guilt it must be, had been to fondly believe in the noble principles claimed, and so well neglected by Freemasonry. The secret voice of God, my conscience, tells me that an impartial world will sustain the conviction, and the assurance, that the base desertion dissolved my obligations; I owe nothing to Masonry!

The mischiefs that flow from thoughtless or injudicious action are seldom removed by the application of sham severities. I shall forever deplore that a body of men, who claim to be guided by the highest principles of virtue, and the strictest impartiality between their members, have by their want of nerve, and the imprudent neglect of their Masonic duties, given countenance to the repeated injuries and threats of their bondsmen, sufficient to change a peaceful attitude to a threatening one. Would that their motto had been "Let no guilty man escape"; henceforth it shall be mine! The childish toys, the ridiculous baubles that once amused my fancy and enslaved my soul, all the tools of a Master Mason, I return, unsullied, into your hands. The shackles that fettered my mind to a dangerous, to an infamous society, I tear off, and throw at your feet! Henceforth I resume my manhood! Happy, thrice happy to be once more a man, a true man, a free man! You will please take due notice thereof and govern yourself accordingly.

No longer fraternally,

Emil Baxter.

Reform News.

From the Illinois Agent.

Dear Bro. K:—From central Indiana to central Iowa, such has been my field of labor during the present month.

On Dec. 31, I had the privilege of speaking to a good audience in the Seventh Day Advent church at Rochester, Ind. No one had ever lifted his voice against the lodge there. The pastors of three of the churches were Masons. The Baptist pastor was chaplain of the lodge and the chapter. Masonry ruled. The Most Excellent High Priest and the Worshipful Chaplain were among my hearers and were evidently astonished; as much so as the Philistines that David should come against Goliah. The effect was all that could be expected and the way was opened for the inflow of light instead of darkness.

A brief stay at home, a Sabbath and two sermons with the Free Methodist brethren at Ashton where I found them battling for a pure religion with untiring zeal; a visit with Bro. Stoddard at Morrison; the privilege of hearing him and lecturing myself in the Methodist church at Morrison. Thence to Round Grove, where I lectured and thence to De Witt, Iowa, where I had a most pleasant visit with our earnest friend R. L. Smith. I preached in the Congregational church whose pastor had just been called to the "Better Land," and lectured in the Free Methodist church, and thence went on to Colo, where revival meetings were in progress; thence back to State Center, where I lectured in the Seventh Day Advent and preached in the Presbyterian church, and then passed on to Albion.

Here I was met by Rev. M. Falcimer who took me to the Presbyterian church, where on the evenings of the 22d and 23rd I spoke to full and attentive congregations and felt that for once at least I was heartily endorsed by the great mass of my audience. Two brethren from Marshalltown gave valuable testimony as to the influence of secretism in that place and of the power of Christianity to destroy Masonry. The pastor of the church made most excellent remarks, most heartily endorsing our reform. We have hosts of friends here who have enlisted for the war, and will never give over the conflict while there is an enemy in the field.

By invitation of the friends at Stanford I went last light to Union in Hardin county. The Masons and Odd-fellows here have defied any one to come there to speak on this subject, saying that they would pay for a hall and claim the right to speak half the time. The Hall was well filled with a motley crowd. The Masons and Odd-fellows were in full force, but no one offered any argument except to disturb and interrupt as much as possible. I spoke over two hours, and trust the Lord will bless his truth.

My plans are now to speak five times more in this county and then go to Story county.

Following up the Indiana Convention.

West Newton, Ind., Jan. 22, 1877.

The excitement here produced by the State Convention has comparatively cleared away, and the real effects are more plainly to be seen. Some broken snags are still standing against the wind, but nature will soon have her course with these and we think the new growth will be more nearly pure from the effects of the gale.

Several incidents have sprung up from the influence of the Convention that are worth while to notice. Brother Allen has relieved me of the pleasant duty of recording one, the case of Mr. McNaughton which I can confirm as true. It was told by one of the Masons that he preached a very impressive sermon in the lodge that night which melted them all to tears; "and," said he, "you know we have some of the hardest cases about here in our lodge." He evidently had forgotten himself, for a few moments before he had said, in arguing his case "We have the very best men in this whole country in the lodge."

Mr. Ronayne, while here, in speaking of the benevolence of the institution of Masonry said there was no real benevolence in it. This excited the liberality of a Mason who lived next door neighbor to a poor man whose family were suffering for food and clothing. Perhaps he had never thought of his neighbor in this condition before, but to prove the claims of their institution he went immediately to the store and procured clothing etc., to the amount of five dollars, and took to the distressed family. We think surely Mr. Ronayne has done good here. But it is now whispered around, and it is not at all improbable, that this same Mason had his bill charged to the township trustee, who is himself a brother Mason.

The Mason who became so liberal so suddenly complained that if the Quakers here would attend to their own business in providing for the poor, instead of fighting the Masons, they would be more nearly in their own sphere. He does not seem to be aware that the so-called Quakers have been caring for this same family right before his door for the past two years.

The Masons having exhausted everything else now say that Ronayne was to pay the candidate whom he initiated here the sum of fifteen dollars with which he (Ronayne) absconded leaving the poor fellow without his pay. They say that the Chicago lodge has Mr. Ronayne hired to work for money for the use of the lodge, and that money is all he is traveling for. but we are inclined to think that if this is his motive he had better stop for he is certainly injuring his cause. They also say that they have written to the Chicago lodge to find out whether this strange man Ronayne was ever in Chicago or not, and that by and by they will be able to tell us all about him. We hope Mr. Ronayne will be on his guard and not be defeated by the little one-horse lodge of West Newton.

We hope the work will go on. The way looks as bright and promises as fair for success as any reform that was ever inaugurated. Reforms are not completed in a day, and are never without their persecutions. Yours truly,

Boaz.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

We have an Anti-masonic Association with about one hundred names enrolled on our books, meeting once a week. Our exercises consist of speaking. essays select reading and confessions of those who have forsaken the lodge and are seeking light where it may be found. One man, T. J. Burnidge. a seceded Odd-Fellow, says he left the lodge because he felt condemned every time he attended the Christless and heathenish institution. He says he don't believe any man can be an adhering Odd-Fellow and be a Christian, and much less a minister of the Gospel. We have some men who claim to be ministers that belong to the devil and the lodge, so I verily believe, and then we have another class of popular men who think more of other men's favor and influence than they do of principle or the souls of mankind.

Correspondence.

Another Confession of the Morgan Murder.

Manamuskin, N. J.

At the time, and ever since the Masons murdered Morgan, they have persistently maintained that he was not killed, but had gone to foreign lands. But from the day that diabolical deed was perpetrated till now, evidence has been accumulating until it amounts to positive proof. One actor after another in this horrible drama, before bidding adieu to earth, has confessed. It's a fearful thing to meet death with sin in the heart, and a lie in the mouth. So many who after a long life have kept the secret inshrouded in darkness have halted at the gate of death and disrobed themselves of the disguise, in exchange for the truth, hoping thereby to avert the wrath of God, and gain his favor.

About eighteen years ago, I lived beside a Mr. B. who had been a popular physician and business man in the county of Orleans, in the State of New York, and who at the time of Morgan's abduction and murder was a prominent member of a lodge at Holley, about twenty miles from Batavia, the home of Morgan at the time of his abduction. Mr. B. lived a neighbor to me at the time of his death. Many times during my long acquaintance with him I tried to get some facts I knew he possessed in regard to Morgan, but his answers were always evasive, and I could glean nothing from him in that regard. He would neither affirm or deny any thing in regard to the abduction or death of Morgan until a short time before his death. But not many days before that time he said to me as follows: "In my younger days I took a terrible oath, an oath of which had I known its character I never would have taken. But I took it, and I have up to this time kept it, although often tempted to reveal some things I know. I have never revealed, but have kept concealed the secrets of Freemasonry. But I feel that my departure is near, and I desire before going to tell what I know about the fate of Morgan, and as you have always had a desire to hear from me what I know, I will now tell all I do know about it. Some time before Morgan was abducted the lodges of western New York were greatly agitated concerning rumors afloat, that Capt. William Morgan was writing out the secrets of Masonry. Sim. Jewett came to our lodge in Holley, and lectured us for an hour on the great crime of divulging the secrets of Masonry. He was a fine speaker, and being a lawyer of note his speech had a powerful effect on the members of the lodge. They were worked up to a state of phrenzy. When he got through speaking, the question was asked, 'What shall be done with the traitor Morgan?' A brother moved that he should suffer death as prescribed in his oath, the motion met with opposition; an amendment was offered that the manner of death should be left to those whose lot it should be to execute him. The question as amended was adopted by a large majority. I opposed the original motion and the amendment. I counseled them against the shedding of blood. I told them if they killed Morgan the sum of Masonry would set behind a storm cloud that would burst upon their heads; that no cause, however just it might be, could prosper with bloody hands. But my words were treated with derision. I and the few others that took their stand with me, were warned that we stood on slippery ground. I saw that Morgan's fate was sealed and all I could do was in vain. So I said no more, thinking it discreet for me to not say too much, or I myself might be made to suffer. I attended the lodge as usual. This is all I know of the killing of Morgan. We all knew to a moral certainty that Morgan had suffered the penalty fixed upon him by the Masonic oath he had taken. His death was made a jest in the lodge. One would ask, 'Where is Capt. Wm. Morgan?' Another would answer, 'He has left Fort Niagara, and has gone fishing for trout at the bottom of Niagara river.' These and like expressions convinced me of the nature of his doom. It's now more than thirty years since I entered a Freemason lodge, and I am now sorry that I ever was foolish enough to have joined them; it's an institution fruitful in sin, and fraught with danger to our fre stitutions. My advice would let the dead bury their dead.

I do not propose in this to review
e past, and tell of the execution
Wm. Morgan, and others by Mao history.

The knowledge of the past and the perience of the present all point un-stakably in one direction, viz., to ret societies, as the great fordable hydra-headed monster of monsters. Not to speak the havoc that secretism in various forms and phases makes

The next secret society we meet our political history is the Ku-ux, having for its object to be ob-ned through secretism, the con-
l of that palladium of our libers, the ballot-box. Its sanguinary rse was marked by bloodshed and murder and rapine—deeds that would disgrace the history of the most savage tribes, much more the annals of a civilized people.

And now in our centennial year, just passed amid rejoicings and pompus festivities, we hear the rumbling sound of that volcanic crater which is to open under us at any moment through the secret operation of the White League. Already the stately pillars of the Republic are trembling; ominous sounds are heard; deep-rolling thunder overhead; above, below and all around seems to be lit up with the glare of an impending storm. Every gale that sweeps from the south brings with it the tidings of murder and other acts of lawlessness perpetrated through the operations of the White League.

Americans, let us try by every lawful means within our power to put down and banish from our land everything that would hinder the free diffusion of correct intelligence among all our people; then and not till then shall we have performed our duty to those that shall come after us. B. W. HUSTON.

CARPENTERS AND MASONS.

ELLIOTA, Minn.

While in Carpenter's Hall in Philadelphia, where the first Congress met Sept. 5, 1774, I saw the seal of the Carpenter Society, which consists of a shield with three compasses and a square. I asked the man in charge, a member of Carpenter's Company if these symbols, (the compasses and square) were connected with Masonry? He said, "No, these are our tools." He then told me substantially that a Mason had said to him, "Ah! you have our symbols here?" to which he replied, "No, these are our tools;" and then asked, "How old is Masonry?" The answer was, "Solomon, who built the Temple was a Mason;" to which the carpenter replied, "We built the Temple." Query; who has a right to use the square and compass as symbols? W. A. DEAN.

RENOUNCE AND EXPOSE.

YORK, Pa.

It is cheering to see so many Freemasons giving up the lodge and becoming free American citizens. It shows that Freemasonry cannot overcome true manhood. Indeed, it is really true that the more manhood an American freeman possesses the more difficult it is to transform him into a Masonic knave or fool or both.

It is the plain duty of all honest men to renounce and expose the vicious institution of Freemasonry immediately. They should leave it at once and warn the public without an hour's delay. Not to do this is criminal as well as sinful. Freemasonry is not merely a crime, it is a great crime. And all who aid it in any manner are criminals. To keep its secrets and to help in its concealment is to aid it.

We write these thoughts hoping that they may help some conscientious men to resolve to renounce and expose the most villainous secret society that has ever cursed this wicked world. Every Freemason who has the requisite amount of manhood should do this duty at once. Delays are dangerous. Now is the time to act. Don't put it off. Do your duty like a true American freeman! E. J. CHALFANT.

OUR MAIL.

S. E. Orvis, of Waukesha, Wis., writes.

"I have just begun and mean to push this matter to the attention of all classes in this locality. I thank God and take courage for all that is being done in these stagnant times."

Mr. S. H. Spencer, Cortland, O., writes:

"I remember when Lovejoy was shot at Alton, and Garrison was dragged through the streets of Boston with a rope around his neck, for slavery was wrong. Thank God I have seen freedom and right triumph. and if I live four years more I expect to see the anti-secret party come into power at no very distant day."

J. M. Scott, Alexandria, Licking Co., O., writes:

"We are making an advance along our lines. Our paper in the city of Newark has opened its columns, and we are now discussing the character of the old handmaid."

B. H. Chadwick, E. Cleveland, O. writes:

"It is in my power to join a lodge free of expense. Are not Masons magnanimous? If I had not met Mr. Thos. Hodge in the Main Building last August I think my Masonic education would have entitled me to pay my own expense in case I wished to join the lodge, as that education was very much limited."

Rev. A. Musselman, Sacramento, Cal., writes:

"There were nineteen votes east in this State for Walker and Kirkpatrick."

J. S. Turnbull, Wichita, Kan., writes:

"Have you any tracts upon the secret society of the 'Orangemen?'"

We have not. Rev. R. T. Cross' address on "Secretism" discusses the general subject very ably.

A. Hutsinpiller, Cerro Gordo, Ills., writes:

"God grant that men will learn to be men irrespective of lodge influence."

J. M. Fry, Ligonier, Ind., writes:

"I am now at home and can devote the balance of the present month and February to the work of lecturing. Am waiting for calls and shall do what I can for the Cynosure."

Benj. Ulsh, Silver Lake, Ind., writes:

"Can it be that the Cynosure is bending to the faith? An old minister tells me anciently there were six points, three that bear record on earth, and three that bear record in heaven, and these three are one. The six-pointed star shows our faith in God. Then please see A. G. Mackey's Masonic ritualist page 121. He says the five pointed star, differing from the blazing star, is a symbol of the five points of fellowship. Now, how many points had this blazing star? and since when was the five-pointed star introduced?"

The five-point star is on the coat-of-arms for the State of Texas. That accounts for its being used in the advertisement Mr. Ulsh refers to. Masons, however, should not be allowed to monopolize this star. They have no more right to it than the rest of mankind.

A. Osgood, Lostant, Ills., writes:

"You know what Masonic hatred means to professional and business men engaged in this reform, but we stand firm. The young and talented M. E. minister of this place has promised never again to enter a Masonic lodge; and we all feel strengthened when such men as Moody is not afraid to come out and defend the right. May the Lord raise up more such men is our prayer."

Hiram Summy, Pleasantville, Ia., writes:

"We are going to have Ronayne here when we get able."

J. B. Cressinger, Sullivan, O., writes:

"I have not voted for a secretist since I had the right to vote, unless it was unknowingly, and I am now sixty-five years old. Capt. Wm. Morgan's case made an Anti-mason of me. I distributed some of the tickets you sent me, and some of them were voted I am told. I made it a business on my way to the Centennial and back, to distribute leaflets and tracts, also the Cynosure with Masonry at a Glance, and sold a number of the Hand-Book, and Odd-fellowship Illustrated, the Grange Exposed, etc. I got some grum looks, sharp words, and curses without number, but I gave them in turn the word of God, the Sword of the Spirit, by which some were brought down; yea, and all that oppose the Lord's Christ will be finally vanquished by the above means. The cause of truth is making itself felt in our town."

Hannah D. Chapin, Sarpy County, Neb writes:

"May the Lord give you wisdom never to cater to worldly popular tastes, and grow trifling to please poor unsaved children, or other friends or foes."

Geo. Ely, Juda, Wis., writes:

"The longer I read the Cynosure the more I like it. It utters no uncertain sound. It deals heavy blows against popular crimes as well as against those which are less popular. I pray that its circulation may be much extended; that our young men, the hope and pride of our country, may be enlightened and saved from the despotism of those dark dens of oath-bound secrecy which are now so prevalent in this country. I am truly glad to find the Cynosure outspoken against all schemes gotten up to catch money for the Lord's work, which (schemes) address only the animal propensities of men. For myself I confess I cannot discern much increase in spirituality and holiness in Christians from habitually attending oyster suppers, church fairs, and such like things, which minister to the carnal appetite."

Walter Collins, Salina, Iowa, writes:

"I think oath-bound secrecy is the greatest evil that this or any other country can be afflicted with, viewed from a religious or a political standpoint. I was for some time during the first years of this anti-secret movement somewhat vacillating, but now I am fixed in my purpose. I see it takes valiant fighting and perseverance. I was much surprised and also afflicted at some of our friends who were in favor of supporting Hayes. We have got to meet this question fairly, squarely and firmly. I voted for Walker although sneered at and only three others in the county voted with me. I never felt so good in voting in my life. I am proud of that part of my record. Friends, let us go to work with a will. The omens are good."

Augustus Soper, Tilsonbury, Ontario, writes:

"I live in a town of about two hundred and fifty inhabitants, and it is well spotted with Freemasons, Odd-fellows and Orangemen, which in my opinion is no great credit to the town."

Thomas Vickers, New Diggings, Wis, writes:

"My son and myself voted the American ticket here. I had to fight my way through un-Christian slang to vote, but glory to God, I shall stand to the truth while I live. This place is full of secret societies."

Susan G. Reed, North Hannibal, N. Y., sends a new subscription and writes:

"I have but a few crumbs to scatter by the wayside. If they don't take root and bring forth fruit they may do the birds of the air some good."

Wm Babcock, E in Center, New York, writes:

"A preacher of the Gospel who is a Mason in Erin Center asked me to come and hear him preach. I told him I could not hear a Mason preach. I believe as Mr. Moody we ought to separate and have no fellowship with them."

Francis H Ewing, Angola, Ind., writes:

"My object is to do what good I can for the rising generation. I think there is plenty of chance to reform in the church and in the affairs of the government also."

Mrs. David Edwards, Baltimore, Md., writes:

"The Cynosure comes next in our affections to the dear Telescope, our church paper."

T. J. Muzzy, Wilton Center, Illinois, writes:

"The supplement is an excellent doeu' ment to give to people who will read it.'

E. M. Curtis, Bristol, ———, writes:

"I feel that this reform will go on as sure as God lives, until Mas nry dies. It is the work of the devil. If we irust in God he will accomplish his work in his own good time."

SCRIPTURE.—1 K xviii, 19-29. Memorize 25-29.

will serve.

19 Now therefore send, and gather to me all Israel unto Mount Carmel, and the prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the groves four hundred, which eat at Jezebel's table.

20 So Ahab sent unto all the children of Israel, and gathered the prophets together unto Mount Carmel.

21 And Elijah came unto all the people, and said, How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord he God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word.

22 Then said Elijah unto the people, I, even I only, remain a prophet of the Lord; but Baal's prophets are four hundred and fifty men.

23 Let them therefore give us two bullocks; and let them choose one bullock for themselves. and cut it in pieces, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under: and I will dress the other bullock, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under.

24 And call ye on the name of your gods, and I will call on the name of the Lord: and the God that answereth by fire, let him he God. And all the people answered and said, It is well spoken.

25 And Elijah said unto the prophets of Baal, Choose you one bullock for yourselves, and dress it first; for ye are many; and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under.

26 And they took the bullock which was given them, and they dressed it, and called on the name of Baal from morning eveu until noon, saying, O Baal, hear us. But there was no voice, nor any that answered. And they leaped upon the altar which was made.

27 And it came to pass at noon, that Elijah mocked them, and said, Cry aloud: for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked.

28 And they cried aloud, and cut themselves after their manner with knives and lancets, till the blood gushed out upon them

29 And it came to pass, when midday was past, and they prophesied until the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that there was neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regarded.

LESSON NOTES.—1.—Ahab was dumb before Elijah. The man of the world could not assert himself in the presence of the man of God. Much more shall every sinner be speechless when he comes into the presence of God himself. Ezra 9:15; Job 41:10; Ps. 76: 5-9; Is. 13: 6-9; Mal. 3: 2; Matt. 7: 22, 23; 12: 37; 22: 12; Luke 19: 22; Jude 14: 15; Rev. 6: 17.

2 —God's cause is never lost. Though there be only one left to testify for him, that is enough. "God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." Judg. 7: 2-7; 1 Sam. 14: 6; Joh 9: 4; Ps. 8: 2; Is. 40: 29; Zech. 4: 6; Matt. 3: 9; 1 Cor. 1: 25; 2 Cor. 4: 7; 10: 3, 4; 12: 10.

3 —In any fair test God is sure to come off victor. He pledges himself to prove his divinity to all those who honestly seek him. "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." Is 1:18; Hos. 6: 3; Mal 3: 10; 4: 2; Matt. 6: 22; John 7: 17; 16: 7, 8; Rom. 12: 1; 1 Cor. 2: 14; Rev. 3: 20.

4.—'How long halt ye?" Long enough, frequently, to lose all opportunity for salvation. Ps. 95:11; Prov. 1: 28, 29; Is. 1: 15; Matt. 25: 10; Luke 13: 24, 25; John 7: 34; 8: 21; Rev. 22: 11.

5.—One cannot be partly for and partly against. He must he either the one thing or the other. "Because thou art lukewarm. and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth." Ps. 1: 1; Is 52: 11; Ezek. 20: 39; Matt. 6: 24; 12: 30; 1 Cor. 10: 21; 2 Cor. 6: 15; Eph. 5: 6-11.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

Elijah directed the king to summon three classes to Mt. Carmel, viz.: "All Israel," the "prophets of Baal," and the "prophets of the groves." By "all Israel" he doubtless meant chiefly all the governors and leading men of the tribes. 2 Ch. 1: 2; 1 Ch. 13: 1, 2, without, however, excluding the common people. The word "groves" in Hebrew is asherah, and means undouhtedly the idol of Ashtoreth, that goddess which was usually worshipped in conjunction with Baal.

The gathering itself seems to have included all the classes above named, except the prophets of Ashtoreth, who were douhtless kept away through the influence or authority of Jezehel, their special patron and supporter, v. 19. Had they been present they would almost certainly have been mentioned in the rest of the narrative and been slain with the prophets of Baal, v. 40.

Mt. Carmel—the word meaning a park —is a beautiful, well-wooded mountain several miles in length, and from 1,200 to 1,800 feet in height, jutting out into the Mediterranean Sea in the northwest part of Palestine. From its summit is one of the finest views in the whole country. Philistia, the sea, Acre, the mountains of Lebanon and Hermon, Gilhoa, Jezreel, the plain of Esdraelon, and that ancient river Kishon, are all visible. The exact spot where the assembly met has been clearly identified with a point on the northeast side called now Maharrakah, ("the sacrifice.") Here once stood an altar of Jehovah, v. 30 Near by is a perennial spring of water, and not far below is the Kishon, known now by a name signifying "river of slaughter." This spot was selected partly, perhaps, as Poole says, because "it was a convenient place;" but prohably, also, hecause of its altar, its spring and its magnificent surroundings. Where else could be found a place hetter fitted by nature for the Titanic conflict between truth and error, between Jehovah and Baal?....The word "opinions" means primarily "parties;" i. e., divisions of thought or sects of worship; the word "halt" means either to "limp" or "to skip ahout" (like a bird,) from one side or limb to the other. The prophet rates them for their double-mindedness. Sometimes they offered sacrifices to one deity, sometimes to the other, just as their mood or opportunity or interest determined. They were trying to do what the Saviour condemns, Matt. 4: 24—to serve two masters, ...There was nothing unfair in this proposition towards Baal. His worship, as well as Jehovah's, involved the offering of sacrifice. He was the sun-god, and, therefore, emphatically a god of fire. His prophets were four hundred and fifty —Jehovah's only one. They, as the event proved, were allowed the first trial and the longer time. Every advantage then was given that could be given. Nor was there any presumptiou on Elijah's part. God had not only authorized sacrifices in his worship and manifested his approval of them hy sending fire from heaven for their consumption, 2 Chron. 7: 1, even when offered apart from the tabernacle, the temple and the priesthood, Judg. 4: 21; 1 Chron. 21: 26, but what is more to the point, as in similar instances before, the prophet undoubtedly had special direction from heaven in regard to the matter, and was now clothed with extraordinary powers, v. 36.....Had the prophet made trial first and succeeded, the representatives of Baal would either have excused themselves on some pretext, or have employed the interval in securing means of secretly setting fire to their sacrifice. Their failure, therefore, would not have heen so striking if manifest at all, and the people would still have been in douht...."Elijah mocked them," v. 27. Previously feelings of pity aud indignation may have alternately filled his breast, but now the extreme silliness and absurdity of their course force themselves on his attention. Partly, therefore, to express his own holy contempt, partly to provoke the prophets of Baal to do their best, and partly to exert a salutary influence on the people in general, Elijah burst forth in a strain of mirthful irony and cutting sarcasm. "Cry aloud," he says, "cry with a great voice," for he is a god," and there is no doubt of his answering; perhaps "he is talking" (or rather "meditating"—in a brown study;) or, may he, "he is pursuing" (rather, "he has withdrawn himself;") or likely "he is in a journey; or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked." These thrusts were all the more pertinent, since the heathen often ascribed such actions to their gods. Parallel instances of irony are rare in Scripture, but not entirely wanting. Is. 44; Mark 7: 9. They should be just as rarely imitated.

REMARKS.

Learn the folly of double-mindedness, v. 21. "A douhle minded man is unstable in all his ways." Matt. 4: 24; 12: 30.

Learn the folly of procrastination, v. 21. "How long halt ye between two opinions." "Behold, now is the accepted time."

Truth in religion is not determined by majorities, v. 22. Elijah was one "only;" Baal's prophets, four hundred and fifty; the people, a great multitude. So the soundness of a religion, a doctrine, or a practice cannot be proved by the numbers that uphold it. Infallibility does not rest with the majority of even God's people, in any one age, or in all ages, any more than it does with a Pope.

The advocates of truth are not afraid of appealing to evidence in its support, v. 24. It is error which shrinks from a test.

Learn the degradation of the heathen, vs. 26-29. See how long they howl, rant, leap and cut themselves, in the vain hope of being heard by a god that is no god. See Is. 44; Ps. 125, etc. What mingled stupidity, cruelty and wretchedness!

Learn, therefore, to love and support foreign missions. Who would not wish to deliver men from such a state?

Observe the courage and majesty of heavenly truth and faith. What a serene and magnificent carriage was that of Elijah on this occasion! Though alone in the midst of enemies, his was the only fearless heart, his the only unruffled brow. Like a solitary rock he stood, while the billows were foaming and dashing around him. His very laughter was a sign of perfect confidence and assured victory. So truth has ever stood in the person of Daniel, Stephen, Peter, Paul, and especially of Him who was Truth Incarnate. So faith has ever subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, and stopped the mouths of lions.

Let Elijah be an example to believers, and especially to ministers. Never compromise; never falter.—Evangelical Repository.

Berea College, Kentucky.

It is well known that this is the only school in Kentucky where colored persons can receive education on equal terms with others. From here students are willing to teach colored schools with the view to replenish their means so as to enable them to return and resume their studies. But the great difficulty is, the colored people are too poor to pay them. The Legislature has appropriated only 30 cents a scholar, while to the whites it appropriated $1.00 a scholar; thus the poorest people in the State receive only one-sixth as much for education as the white people do. President Fairchild has sent out a circular, of which the following is a part:

"A colored school of fifty scholars receives hut fifteen dollars a year of the public money. Whatever more is necessary must be raised hy subscriptions; yet the school must he free two months, if there are less than sixty scholars, and three months if there are more.

"The consequence of this state of things is, that many of our students who would he glad to teach colored schools during our long vacation, not being able to find schools that would pay, have proposed to seek other employments by which they might earn means to continue their studies. To prevent this we requested them to find districts where good schools could he gathered, to open free schools, receive the public money and collect from the people what they can and make a full report to us, and we promised to solicit money from Sunday schools and others to add, if necessary, to their collections, sufficient to give them a moderate compensation.

"We send you this circular to invite you to aid in this good work. The amount needed will average ahout twenty-five dollars to each teacher. If you will undertake to aid one or more of these teachers, please send the money to me soon and you will receive the name and a brief description of the teacher or teachers to whom your contribution is appropriated.

Yours truly,
"E. H. Fairchild,
Pres. Berea College."

The Christian Cynosure

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEB. 1, 1877.

THE EXTRA EFFORT for the Cynosure appropriate to the season is being made with a noble energy by numerous friends of the reform. See their encouraging words in the Publishers' Department, last page. There is yet room for volunteers, honest and zealous men and women, boys and girls, who can bring into our number of readers many who will forever rejoice that this reform has been begun and has an exponent in the Cynosure.

TROUBLES AT WHEATON.

Two or three Chicago dailies have lately published statements concerning "scandals" and college troubles in Wheaton. It is due to those readers of the Cynosure who read or hear of these reports, to give them a succinct statement of the facts.

"Unclean spirits" are not limited in the field of their operations to one city or spot. The Word of God tells us that three unclean spirits like frogs—men, perhaps, equally at home in church or world, as the frog is in two elements—"are the spirits of devils," which deceive and rally the kings in the realm of mind, to the battle-day of God. (Rev. 16: 13)

Whatever special interpretation and explanation God shall put, by events, on these high prophesies, we know, if we believe the Bible, that these frogs are devils, and that they revel in uncleanness; and that they are to affect "the whole world!" See the text cited above.

If this be so, and if we are in the latter part of the "last days," as Moody and Cummings and a host of good men teach, then these devils are, at least, a possible explanation of the Brooklyn deluge of scandal-mongering, and of the Wheaton troubles, stirred up and aggravated by a vile and venal press, and by deluded men who swell the deluge of scandal till they make our young people believe that all are unclean especially in the churches; and—then—if virtue enough is found in the churches to attempt discipline for the honor of Christ and the protection of imprudent—but innocent persons—that press and those men and women who quietly heard, shared, and spread the scandal, will cry out with horror against those good men who attempt to silence the tongue of exaggeration and falsehood; to protect the innocent; to correct the erring; and wipe the spittle from the forehead of the "body of Christ which is his church."

The Wheaton facts are these:

Some year or so ago reports of vile conduct in a member of the Methodist church, led to a trial before the presiding elder and a committee, which resulted in acquittal. After that a trial was had in the Baptist church, which resulted in confession and expulsion. Then the Chicago Times or some miscreant wanting bread, for it, reported scandals in the College church and showed the animus of the report by telling the public that President Blanchard would probably, in his zeal against secrecy, stifle and suppress investigation. This stirred the town to its center and let loose that multitude of tongues,

"Like village curs that bark
Because their fellows do"

When the thing became intolerable, and many honest people knew not what to believe, the elders of the First Church instituted investigation; when lo! many whose mouths were reeking with insinuation, statement of professed facts, etc. etc., were suddenly "not at home," they knew nothing; could testify nothing. This of itself showed the wisdom and necessity of the action of the officers of the church, and but for a human-carrion loving press, and its penny-a-liners, guilt, if there was any, would have been punished; folly and imprudence would have been checked; slander and foul exaggeration would have been quelled and silenced, without noise or turmoil. But this was too good an opportunity for Satan to smirch the good people of Wheaton, and the principles of the College, to be let slip. Hence the noise and bruit which has occurred.

About the Baptist and Methodist cases, I know, personally, nothing but from hearsay concerning their church trials. In our own College church, after some follies and errors which were easily confessed and corrected, there was not proof enough, of a scandalous nature, found by good and fearless officers, to have convicted a man if the crime charged had been stealing a chicken: and one of the largest and most excited church meeting ever held in Wheaton disposed of the whole matter without a divided vote. I have seldom attended a more august or proper meeting, or one guided more, as I believe, by the Spirit of God.

Along with the above matters, and giving their hue to it, there has opened an attack on the College; and one trustee, in other respects a worthy man and friend of the College, who has lately resigned his trusteeship at my request because as one of the proprietors, he has built, furnished and now rents rooms to the Masonic lodge, and who has at each annual meeting listened to the fullest possible report of the funds, has along with others in our village paper, called for a statement of the finances of the College. The treasurer properly replied to a similar request the week before, that he would publish whatever the College authorities ordered and that he had always given friends of the College all the information they desired.

Having given, as accurately as I am capable, the above facts, I now give the following opinions:

1st. That the roots of this, as of former difficulties in Wheaton, are in the Masonic Lodge. That if there were no lodge here, there is not a jar in churches or College but would be promptly and easily adjusted.

2d. The utmost pains should and will be taken to satisfy the anxieties of any just men which this tumult may excite. A very few such men have signed the call on our treasurer to make a report of the funds not to the men who are the Board of the College, but to an excited crowd in a village paper; a thing no other college or corporation was ever known to do. I saw one of the signers of the call, last week, apply for a sack of flour at our feed store, and he could not get trusted for it.

3d. I believe the financial state of Wheaton College to be sounder, safer, and more satisfactory than that of most Western colleges; and that this will appear at our approaching annual meeting next Commencement, when the treasurer's report of everything, funds and debts, will be made public as has been our custom.

A paragraph from the Wheaton Illinoian showing the state of the College in these hard times, will be found in another place in this paper.

DREAMS.

"Your old men shall dream dreams" Acts ii. 17.

Coleridge says there are certain truths which lie bed-ridden in the dormitory of men's souls. Such truth is the doctrine of the Bible concerning dreams.

Of these there are three sorts named in the Scriptures: 1st, those produced by bodily states; "As when an hungry man dreameth and behold he eateth;" 2nd, dreams caused by mental occupation and associations, as when "A dream cometh through the multitude of business;" and 3rd, dreams produced by God or angel ministry. Such are the dreams of Joseph; of Pharaoh's butler and baker; the dreams of Daniel and other prophets; the dreams of Joseph, the husband of Mary, by which, "being warned of God," he saved the infant life of Christ; with a multitude of others.

We have received a letter from a German friend, who had been pondering over the 13th chapter of Revelation, and musing on "The Image of the Beast." The first monster, seven-headed and ten horned, came out of the sea. The second, or lamb-dragon beast, came up out of the earth; and he said to men of the world that they should make an image of the first beast to whom the dragon or devil gave his power and his worship, and that no man buy or sell unless he had received the brand of one of these horrible goblins or types of spurious religious monuments.

In slumber, after pouring over these apocalyptic photographs of Satan's devices to deceive and enslave the nations, our friend writes:

"One night, in a dream, I was in Germany, in my former dwelling; and there I saw the following: By the wall of the sitting-room, stood a secretary with a writing desk drawn out ready for use. On the desk lay white paper, ink, and a pen, to write with, a burning candle stood by them. Before the desk was a chair. When I had noticed all these things a loud voice cried behind me the following words: 'That is Freemasonry, write it.'" HENRY LEYK.

Now the writer might, but he probably had not seen the little book, "The Image of the Beast," which we wish was reprinted and put in general circulation. We have no doubt his dream was real, and if he had not seen the above book, it may have been a supernateral communication to an honest man. For though Ezekiel compares the relation of dreams to realities with that of chaff to wheat; it should not be forgotten that chaff is shaped by the wheat; and, before separation, contains it.

That Freemasonry is an image of popery, it needs but slight observation to perceive. Its priests, altars, vain trappings, lofty pretentions and real sorcery all so resemble those of Romanism that an unpracticed eye can scarcely tell the difference between two processions of these orders; and yet, when you assail Masonry it is as difficult to fix it in any one character which it will own as it is to catch and confine an image or shadow on the wall. And still, over the mind given up to it, the lodge has all the power of the first beast, and, like popery too, it kills its dupes who cast it off, whenever it dares to do so; and when it will not lose more than it will gain by it.

A CORRESPONDENT in Wyoming, Neb., asks if Calvin, John Huss, John Knox, Tyndal, Wickliffe, John Wesley, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Jonathan Edwards of New Jersey, Wendell Phillips, Benedict Arnold, Jefferson Davis and the editor of the Inter-ocean can be claimed by Freemasons as members of the order. The first five lived and died before Freemasonry was originated and could not well become members. John Wesley has been claimed, but the proof to the contrary is positive. Of Garrison and Edwards we have no definite information at hand, but there is every reason to believe they were never connected with any lodge. Phillips is openly opposed to secret orders. Benedict Arnold was a Freemason; Davis is said to be one; and Mr. Ham of the Inter-ocean sports his name on the roll of Oriental Lodge of this city.

—The General Secretary has been preparing a tabulated report of the Publishing House fund so that all may see what has been done and who has done it, and what is being accomplished with the means already in hand while the fund is yet incomplete.

A few Words to the Ladies.

BY MRS. EZRA A. COOK.

On the last Sabbath that Mr. Moody was at his church, in Chicago, among other miscellaneous remarks about getting non-church goers into the house of prayer, he said: "Get the people together and have a social tea with them. Show them that you are interested in their welfare and that you can do something besides preach to them."

Immediately after he left the city Christian ladies from most of the churches in the vicinity of his immediately organized a Moody Church Tea Association, and last Thursday evening I attended their first tea meeting. They had prepared for seven hundred persons a bountiful supply of sandwiches. These with pickles, milk and sugar and mugs of tea or cold water, constituted the whole bill of fare. It was a pleasant occasion involving no burdensome amount of expense and labor.

There is a growing feeling that we who are trying to destroy the unfruitful works of darkness must in every Christian way possible cultivate the peaceable fruits of righteousness.

Daniel Mabee, Spencer, New York, writes: "The Christian Association that was formed here two years ago by J. L. Barlow, does not look very encouraging at the present time. Most of the members have left us, but there are a few who still hold on to their integrity and keep up our weekly prayer-meetings." Other associations can tell a similar story. Is not the cause of this decline in interest found in the fact that these associations are not sufficiently active in doing aggressive work for Christ? Electricity has a positive as well as a negative pole, and the tuft of flame from the positive is much brighter than the one from the negative. The reason that our organizations are called Christian rather than Anti-masonic is that they may promote Christ's kingdom in all things, and oppose Satan's in every way.

Tea meetings, properly conducted, we believe may be a means of grace. Would you not like to have them on the 22d of next February? Masons glorify Washington's Masonry with very little reason. Let us with the best of reasons, burn his farewell address into the hearts of all whom we can reach. Make your social life religious and your religious life social. Have a few stirring speeches made. Develop home talent. Have something to interest persons of every age. Some Chicago friends propose having the social meeting without the supper.

Supper or not let us at convenient times invite our neighbors (whom we must love as we do ourselves) to meet with us. Show them that we seek their happiness; that we seek to enthrone grace and truth in our own hearts and in the hearts of others, and to destroy from all, selfishness and dishonesty.

—A correspondent of the Telescope inquiring if the United Brethren discipline applies to Sovereigns of Industry, Good Templars, etc., as well as to Freemasons and Oddfellows. The editor aptly replies, "If any one is authorized to make a dispensation excepting little Masons from the operation of the law against secrecy, we know it not. Our church constitution, as well as the law to enforce its provisions, excludes those nurslings of Freemasonry. The nurseries in which they are reared are the hope of the cherished mother of them all."

—While there is a small local agitation originating with a few persons hostile to the principles of Wheaton College, the following note from the Wheaton Illinoian shows a marked degree of prosperity in the institution for the present hard times: "There are now 125 students pursuing studies in connection with Wheaton College. Of these 71 are gentlemen, 54 ladies. The College Department numbers 43, the Preparatory 31, and the English Course 51. The latter has diminished somewhat lately, while the College proper is on the increase and has good classes throughout."

—The General Agent and Secretary has been hard at work here in Chicago for the past fortnight. He preached last Sabbath in Moody's West Side Tabernacle, formerly Mr. Healey's church of Masonic notoriety.

—The annual collection for the National Association of the First Church of Christ, Wheaton, was taken up on Sabbath, after an earnest reform sermon by the pastor, Rev. L. Taylor, in which the principles of secret lodges which the N. C. A. is established to oppose were thoroughly examined and reproved. The collection following amounted to $27.50. Are there not some other churches that will do likewise?

The College Record published by the students of Wheaton College is one of the best journals of its class that has fallen under our notice. True to the principles of the institution, it is also edited with ability, containing much that is of interest to friends and patrons of the College. Many of our readers would find a profitable interest in the institution arising from reading it. The Record is a sixteen-page monthly, price $1.00 a year. A. R. Dodd, editor, Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill.

A Memoir of P. P. Bliss is being prepared under the direction of his co-laborer in evangelistic work, D. W. Whittle of Chicago, assisted by Rev. E. P. Goodwin, his late pastor, and R. C. Morgan of London. The book will contain a sketch of the life of Mr. Bliss; the portraits of himself and wife, an account of his labors in the churches, and a history of the composition of his best known songs, and incidents of their use by the Spirit of God in the conversion of souls, and the blessing of Christians.

The book is intended as a memorial to the character and work of Mr. Bliss, and will be copyrighted for the benefit of his mother and sisters.

Mr. Whittle requests that any person who has been led to Christ by the hymns of Mr. Bliss, or has been in a special manner blessed by them, or is familiar with any incident of interest connected with their use, should communicate the same to him

Care Y. M. C. A., Chicago, Ill.

Toward the close of his meetings Mr. Moody promised a new book to each of the young converts and inquirers, who would send in their names. The book has just been issued under the title of The Way and the Word, and is a neat little volume in paper cover, containing a treatise on Mr. Moody's favorite topic, regeneration; also his thoughts on Bible study; the whole prefaced with a personal introduction by Mr. Moody.

The work is published by F. H. Revell, Chicago.

Price, post-paid, 25 cents.

Strike when the Iron is Hot.

BY W. O. SLIGHT.

A very good motto for all,
Of every nation o' earth,
The great as well as the small,
The high or lowly of birth;
Infix it firmly, secure,
That it ne'er will be forgot,
'Tis simply this: be sure
To strike when the iron is hot.

Strike when the iron is hot,
With active muscle and brain;
Be right, be steadfast, fear not!
Your labor will not be in vain.
Tho' scoffers may loudly deride,
Friends leave you forsaken, forgot,
March onward in manhood and pride,
And strike when the iron is hot.

Strike when it's seething and red,
With words burning deep in the heart,
Make wickedness fear at your tread,
And demons to tremble and start.
Love justice, speak loudly its praise,
In every mansion and cot,
Proudly your hammer upraise,
And strike when the iron is hot.

A word spoken rightly and kind,
A smile, if cheerfully given,
Will often capture the mind,
Direct the soul unto heaven.
Good deeds, though trivial, small,
By heaven will ne'er be forgot;
But mind th' injunction withal,
And strike when the iron is hot.

The Bible as a Plaything.

I use the words with a most painful sense of their incongruity, and a most sincere regret that they should have any real meaning. But that they have, there is abundant evidence in a large number of recognized religious newspapers and periodicals. Turn to the department in them specially set aside for the boys and girls, and in a very large proportion, biblical puzzles, biblical conundrums and charades are a leading feature.

This is a kind of "familiarity" with holy things that "breeds contempt." It is not that "searching of the Scriptures which Timothy's mother taught him, and certainly is not a search after those things which tend to the conversion of the soul.

If the Bible is indeed the veritable and inspired message from God to man—the tenderest and the most awful expression of his love toward us—is it right to give it to children to make puzzles out of, to construe and torture into all sorts of odd and preposterous connections, to make of it sport and laughter and mental legerdemain?

I am sure that, in the majority of cases where this thing is permitted in God-fearing families, it is rather a passive than an active offence. The parents have not really considered the matter, and the children associate it with the Bible, and therefore reason, if they reason at all, that it must be right.

But it is always wrong to lower the tone of religious sentiment. Suppose that the human being nearest to our love and reverence had left us when "God took him"—letters full of wisest counsels and tenderest love; would we suffer them to be turned into games to while away an idle hour? or riddle into nonsense to tax the ingenuity of a child's mental powers? But how much more holy the covenant of God, the story of the life and death of our Saviour!

There never was a time when it was more necessary to teach children the most profound reverence for the Word of God. Traitors are in the citadel of the church, and open foes are before her gates impugning its authority and denying its inspiration; it is therefore our plain duty to hold it in greater reverence and in higher honor.

Will any parent have just cause to complain, if, after allowing his children to turn the leaves of the Bible to find laughter and amusement, they should in their maturer years turn them to find pretexts for infidelity, and truths to wrest to their own destruction.

Some years ago Scotch fathers and mothers, in no idle spirit, but with the most anxious solicitude to find out the most excellent way, debated in church meetings, and in the religious and civil press, whether the use of the Bible as a school-book was not calculated to lessen the profound respect which it ought to have from mature minds. Without entering here into this argument, it is safe to say that the fear was a groundless one, compared with the danger of using it as a play-book.

By its fruits a tree is known. The Scotch as men and women have a reverence for the Bible which we are apt to call "superstitious," but which has not inaptly been characterized "the backbone of the national character." What feeling toward it will animate the present generation after using it for their "amusement," it is certainly the duty of parents to consider.

"But," said a really good mother to me, "what are the poor children to do on Sabbath?"

It is lamentable to think how many children have this sort of moral training from their earliest years. They are taught, on the one hand that all amusements become wicked on Sabbath, and on the other, that, by a skillful bit of legerdemain, they may get the pleasure without the sin. It is right to make puzzles about Noah, but wicked to make them about Sinbad, and there is the same distinction between the Tower of Babel and the city of Bagdad. The occurence of names connected with sacred history is considered sufficient to change the whole religious aspect of the pastime, or to speak plainly, the child is provided with a sacred amulet, which enables it to breathe without danger the atmosphere of a simple amusement.

It is difficult to conceive a training more likely to result in a combination of bigotry and hypocrisy. It enables a clever lad to eat his cake so long as it is sugared over with a transparent coating of religious platitude, and to believe that everybody who takes it without is committing a great sin. No sight in the whole world is more melancholy than that of a child who has already learned the art of systematically cheating his own conscience.

In my humble opinion, parents cannot too carefully guard against even "the appearance of evil" and irreverence, for it would indeed be hard if this glorious book, the stay, the comfort and the hope of humanity in all ages, should have to make this mournful complaint, "I have been wounded in the house of my friends."—S. S. World.

Conscience and Scripture.

The distinct uses of Scripture, and of natural conscience,—in all that relates to morals,—may be illustrated by the comparison of a sun dial and a clock. The clock has the advantage of being always at hand, to be consulted at any hour of the day or night. But then the clock is liable to go wrong, and vary from the true time. And it has no power in itself of correcting its own errors, so that these may go on increasing to any extent, unless it be from time to time regulated by the dial, which is alone the unerring guide. Thus our consciences are liable to deceive us even to the greatest extent, or to give wrong judgment, if they are not continually corrected and regulated by a reference to the Word of God, which alone—like his sun in the natural world—affords an infallible guide. But while professing to take Scripture as such a guide, we should beware, when we consult it, of acting like a man who, pretending to regulate his clocks and watches by the sun dial, should go to look at it in the night time with a candle which would throw the shadow whichever way he chose.

Mr. Sankey's Musical Oratory.

People are not agreed as to what rank Mr. Sankey shall take as a singer, but they are agreed as to the point that he is just the man to join Mr. Moody in his great work. The methods of the two men are dissimilar, and they appear on the platform in marked contrast. Mr. Moody seizes a crowd at any moment, whether it be noisy or quiet, and asserts his authority.

He never stands on ceremony, but grapples with the giant at once, and with a supreme consciousness that he will not lose his grip proceeds to the business in hand. Mr. Sankey, on the other hand, approaches a great crowd with almost womanly gentleness. He touches the keys of the organ with soft reverence. He waits till the Tabernacle is so quiet that you can hear a pin drop; he leans forward to say a few words in an appealing, musical tone, as though he wanted to be sure that the people were in responsive mood, and then he takes possession and carries the crowd with him. His singing is a sort of musical oratory, and it affects or influences people as an oratorical performance rather than a musical one. That is to say, Mr. Sankey touches the same chords, arouses the same feelings, appeals to the same emotions that would be struck or aroused by a persuasive speaker, and he sways an audience precisely as it would be surged by a man of rare eloquence.

If there be arts in his manner, they are of the orator rather than of the musician. His sentences come to the audience clean cut and ringing with melody. The sentiment lives in the lines and in the tone as well as in the music. He sings as ne in earnest, as one whose heart is full of the sentiment of his song, as one anxious to express all the tenderest and liveliest feelings of the human heart.

Mr. Moody steps on the platform like a blacksmith approaching his forge. He makes no concessions to circumstances, and is not influenced by unfavorable conditions.

Mr. Sankey, on the contrary, commences work when the doors are closed. He understands his mission as well as Mr. Moody understands his, and so works with the same great results. He has studied men and women to good purpose, and in choice of subject, in manner of introduction, and style of execution he shows the results of this study. Musicians may not be charmed; he is not singing so much for them as for the men and women with troubled hearts, for men and women perplexed and tired, for men and women who have hearts and heartaches, as well as ears. He sings now for the mother, now for the father, and again for all. He never makes a mistake. He never promises more than he accomplishes. He never ventures to approach a crowd until it is in the right mood, and he never leaves it until every heart is throbbing responsively. In studying Mr. Moody we are driven forward to the contemplation of the results of his work. In studying Mr. Sankey we linger over the sweet voice, the trembling tones, the tender words. Mr. Moody startles us and arouses us, while Mr. Sankey soothes and comforts. Mr. Moody, earnest as he is, succeeds without the grace of voice and manner. Mr. Sankey, earnest as he is, succeeds because of grace in voice and manner. He is well fitted to be Mr. Moody's companion, and those who hear him do not wonder at his continued success in this peculiar field.—Interocean.

Charles Lamb on the Wine Cup.—"The waters have gone over me. But out of the black depths could I be heard, I would cry out to all those who have but set a foot in the perilous flood. George Wilson.

A STORY FOR BOYS.

Some years ago as Mr. Gallaudet was walking in the streets of Hartford, there came running to him a poor boy, whose intelligent eyes fixed the gentleman's attention. The boy inquired, "Please, sir, can you tell me of any one who would like a boy to work for him, and learn to read?"

"Whose boy are you, and where do you live?"

"I have no parents, sir," was the reply, "and have just come from the work house, because they would not teach me to read?"

The gentleman made arrangements with the authorities of the town, and took the boy into his family. He soon acquired the confidence of Mr. Gallaudet by his faithfulness and honesty. He also learned to read, and was allowed the use of his master's library, whereby he made rapid progress in the acquisition of knowledge. It became necessary, after a while, that George should leave Mr. Gallaudet, when he was apprenticed to a cabinet-maker in the neighborhood. There the same integrity won for him favor. To gratify his inclination for study, his kind master had a little room fitted up for him in the upper part of the shop, where he gave up his leisure time to his favorite pursuit. He made rapid attainments in mathematics, in the French language, and in other branches of learning.

After being in this situation a few years, as he sat at tea with the family one evening, he all at once remarked that he wanted to go to France.

"Go to France!" said his master, surprised that the apparently contented and happy youth had thus suddenly become dissatisfied with his situation; "for what?"

"Please sir, will you ask Mr. Gallaudet to call?" continued George, "and I will explain."

His kind friend was invited accordingly, and at tea-time the apprentice presented himself with his manuscripts in English and French, and explained his singular intention of going to France.

"In the time of Napoleon," said he, "a prize was offered by the French government for the simplest rule for measuring plain surfaces. The prize has never been awarded, and that method I have discovered."

He then demonstrated his problem, to the surprise and gratification of his friends, who immediately furnished the means for defraying his expenses, and also letters of introduction to the Hon. Lewis Cass, then the American Minister to the Court of France. He was introduced to Louis Phillippe, and in the presence of the king, nobles, plenipotentiaries, this youth demonstrated his problem, amid the plaudits of the court. He received the prize, besides valuable presents from the king.

He then took letters of introduction and went to the Court of St. James, and gained a similar prize, offered by the Royal Society. He then returned to the United States. Here he was preparing to secure the benefit of his discovery by patent, when he received a letter from the Emperor Nicholas himself, one of whose ministers had witnessed his demonstration in London, inviting him to make his residence at the Russian Court, and furnishing him with ample means for his outfit.

He complied with the invitation, repaired to St. Petersburg, and became professor of mathematics in the Royal College, under the special protection of the Emperor of all the Russias.

One to-day is worth two to-morrows. Boys, use your spare moments well. Had George Wilson been an idle boy, spending his evenings in the streets, or in bad company, he would never have stood "before kings."—Selected.

An Apt Scholar.

A zealous Congregationalist lady, while on a visit among Baptist friends accepted the invitation of the superintendent to be present at the Sunday school and take a class of little ones just sent up from the infant department. The lesson introduced John, as the disciple of our Lord. As older heads have often confounded him with that John who "came preaching in the wilderness," the teacher felt anxious to bring out his personality clearly. So she asked: "By what names do you know this John?" "John the Evangelist," "John the Revelator," "John the Beloved," answered the eager voices. "Why was he called the beloved?" continued she. "Because Jesus loved him best." 'Why did he love him best?" persisted our friend. Imagine her discomfort when a sweet voice lisped, 'Tos he was a Baptist!"

DEAR MR. EDITOR:—I send you the answer to the enigma in the Cynosure of January 11th: "Peace on earth, good will to men." I will not send any enigma this time. My pa is opposed to secret societies. He gets subscribers for your paper. We all like to read it for it tells about so many good things. I like to work out the enigmas in the Cynosure. I think it is as nice as play. Will you please to print this letter in your good paper. I am eleven years old.

Running in Debt.

I dwell on this point, for I would deter others from entering that of torment. Half the young men in this country, with many old enough to know better, would go into business—that is, into debt—to-morrow, if they could. Most poor men are so ignorant as to envy the merchant or manufacturer, whose life is an increased struggle with pecuniary difficulties, who is driven to constant "shinning," and who, from month to month, barely evades the insolvency which sooner or later overtakes most men in business; so that it has been computed that but one man in twenty of them achieves a pecuniary success. For my own part I would rather be a convict in a State prison, a slave in a rice swamp, than to pass through life under the harrow of debt. Let no young man misjudge himself unfortunate, or truly poor, so long as he has the full use of his limbs and faculties, and is substantially free from debt. Hunger, cold, rags, hard work, contempt, suspicion, unjust reproach, are disagreeable, but debt is infinitely worse than all. And if it had pleased God to spare either or all my sons to be the support of my declining years, the lesson which I should most earnestly seek to impress on them is, "never run into debt." Avoid pecuniary obligations as you would pestilence and famine. If you have but fifty cents and can get no more for a week, buy a peck of corn, parch it, and live on it, rather than owe a dollar! Of course I know that some men must do a business that involves risk, and must give notes or other obligations, and I do not consider him in debt who can lay his hands directly on the means of paying, at some little sacrifice, all he owes; I speak of real debt—that which involves risk or sacrifice on one side, obligation and dependence on the other—and I say from all such, let every youth humbly pray God to preserve him evermore.—Horace Greeley.

A New Plan for Fire Insurance.

I have originated a scheme of fire insurance for farm dwellings and isolated buildings, which I believe will, in time, supersede all other modes of insurance.

The object of this mode of insurance is not merely to get pay for a house when it is burned, but to prevent it from being burned at all.

I procured a policy of this kind on my small dwelling about ten years ago, at a cost of $30 or $40, and instead of being obliged to pay any assessments on it, I have received an annual dividend of at least $50, which has enabled me to build another house in addition, worth full as much as the original one. This is also fully insured in the same manner.

Had that school-house at Minneapolis, that was burned a few weeks ago, been properly insured, it never would have burned in the manner that it did.

The manner of insurance is this: Fill all the walls and other air spaces with some good non-conductor of heat; such as sawdust, tan-bark, chaff, charcoal, or even fine straw or fine prairie hay, well crammed in. The upper ceiling should be well covered with the same material. This will prevent a fire from running all over the house in a moment of time. Also the windows and outside doors should be double. A house thus constructed will never need fire enough to endanger it at all. There will scarcely ever be any necessity of keeping any fire during the hours of sleep, to keep house plants from freezing. You can let your fires go out at bed-time, and go to sleep without any fear that before morning you will be obliged to flee naked from your burning house to your neighbor's, perhaps a mile or more, with the temperature at 20° below zero.

The West Side Noon Meeting.

TEMPERANCE DAY.

The example set by the Tabernacle meeting of giving Friday noon prayer meeting to the subject of temperance has proved too popular and beneficial to be dropped. The same arrangement has been adopted in the West Side meetings at No. 221 West Madison street. Mr. Delight, who is one of the most active managers of this meeting, is himself a man rescued from this human foe, and his efforts in saving others from the terrible snare are quite successful.

Last Friday the meeting was attended by over one hundred and fifty and was of unusual interest. Mr. Sheldon, a reformed man, conducted the meeting, assisted by Mr. Delight.

Mr. Sheldon is an intelligent gentlemen well known in business circles in the city. The story of his struggles with the drink demon, of the fortune spent on the depraved appetite, his efforts to reform, and conversion at the Moody meetings was graphically told. He has been a little more than a month saved from the accursed temptation and with great sincerity and earnestness declares that Divine grace is alone to be praised for the good work. He urged any who might be present to accept the same all-powerful Saviour and be free men in him.

Another, a strong-framed man, said that men who drank were not generally lost to all shame, they did not like to tell their wives of their carousals. He had been a dealer as well as a drinker and had helped many prominent men of the city to their homes when intoxicated. He had often felt the degradation and folly of his course and drank deeper to drown conscience. There was no redemption, no help for any one under the power of this habit but in Christ. He had been sent for by a prominent gentleman who asked him, "Why did you stop drinking? How did you come to give it up?" He replied, "By the grace of God I will never touch another drop. It was only by Almighty power that I was able to stop and I will never go back while the Lord Jesus Christ helps me." He thought reformed men ought to be careful not to think their appetite all gone and trust in that idea for the devil would deceive them and cause them to fall.

The third speaker said it was not pleasant to tell of the follies into which drink had brought him, but the grace of God was sufficient for everything. He had spent many a dollar at Davis' saloon right down here close by; had tried to reform once and again but could not overcome the appetite. He finally got into the Tabernacle and was brought to the cross of Christ and by that grace he felt he was saved. He was sure he could not stand in his own strength. It was fourteen weeks ago that he received this great blessing. He had a brother who was also in the downward road; he had asked God to save him and he believed his prayer would be heard.

The next speaker said that for ten years he had been a hard drinker. He had been a peddler through the country and he used to start in the morning by taking "three sheets in the wind," as they called it, and at every opportunity through the day he continued to drink until at night he would generally have spent all his earnings for the day and sometimes be dead drunk. He was in the neighborhood of Davenport, Iowa, last fall when he read the report of the Moody meetings in Chicago and thought he would come here to see the great preacher, as he could winter as well here as anywhere. A wife from whom he had parted five years before lived here, but he had no particular desire to see her. He attended the meetings and took the pledge on Thanksgiving day in the Woman's Temperance room. He was talked to by Christians and felt that he wanted to be like them. But he could not join a church because of his peddling business, for if he did he could not tell lies to sell his stuff. He fell and got to drinking again. On Saturday night before New Year's he was pretty drunk, and having before found where his wife lived, he staggerd up stairs and fell down at her door and fell asleep. His wife found him, got him in and kept him locked up for a week. He did not object to this treatment but was led to reflect and cast himself wholly upon Christ, and then he had a new hope. Nothing he felt had saved him but the grace of Jesus Christ. He gave me a new heart and took away all the appetite for drink. Before he had joined temperance societies and had been in the Washingtonian Home but it was no use. Only Christ can save a fallen man.

Another was an old man of sixty-three years who spoke with a strong "old country" brogue. He said he could not praise God enough for his salvation. It was twenty-three weeks to-day that he was saved. He had been to the meetings and been asked to "join the temperance," but he said "No, I'll see if I can't stop a week." But he could not, so he thought he would sign, but he went and got a glass of brandy to sign on. He signed and then went home and kneeled down and prayed. He prayed much, went to the Tabernacle and other meetings and was much troubled so that he had little sleep. He had a vivid dream filled with strange and impressive scenes one night. The next day he went praying to the Tabernacle; the text was in John about rolling away the stone. When he heard it he nearly rolled off his chair. Sankey sang "the Ninety and Nine" and he thought he was the lost sheep. But God came to him then and gave him peace. He had been a drinking man for fifty years.

Another, a young man, said he was not ashamed of Christ as his Saviour. He had been a prodigal, and it would take all day to tell what the Lord had done for him in the past three months. He had a Christian mother who prayed for him. He left home quite young and fell into all manner of sin and was miserable though he had good friends who gave him all he wanted. After the meetings began he went to New York and came back sick. Bro. Delight and other friends came and prayed with him and he found Christ. He believed that in Jesus' name he should hold out. He had great faith in his mother's prayers; she had prayed for him fourteen years.

The next speaker said he got down into the gutter six or seven weeks ago. But good men got hold of him and got him to take the pledge. He went to the Tabernacle and went several times into the inquiry room. He asked God for help and God met him and saved him. He now felt new strength and grace every day.

Another young man arose at the general invitation of the leader and wanted the prayers of Christians. He had tried to leave off drinking, but had as often fallen. He fell only an hour ago before the temptation. He wanted to be better but when he got out he always fell. He evidently felt nearly hopeless, but that if there was any help it was in Christ. After the meeting he was surrounded by those who had previously spoken and urged to cast himself wholly on Christ.

Just as the meeting was about to close another reformed man said he wished only to say that if a man depends on his own strength he always falls. Christ is the only hope and help for lost men.

The Coming of Christ.

[The following Scriptures will be read with interest in connection with Mr. Moody's sermon on the same subject.]

"I will come again." John xiv. 3. "I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you."—John xiv. 18. "I go away, and come again unto you."—John xiv. 28. "As the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matt. xxiv. 27. "They shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."—Matt. xxiv. 30. "When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory."—Matt. xxv. 31; xvi. 27. "And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory."—Mark xiii. 26. "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth."—Job xix. 25. "Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar and the fullness thereof----before the Lord. For he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth."—Psa. xcvi. 11-13: xcviii. 7-9. "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory."—Psa. cii. 16. "And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him and he will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."—Isa. xxv. 9. "He will come and save you."—Isa. xxxv. 4; xl. 10. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."—Ezek. xxi. 25-27; Dan. vii, 13-14. "And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel, which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts i. 9-11. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."—1 Cor. xv. 22-28. "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour the Lord Jesus Christ."—Phil. iii. 20. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. iii. 4. He attributes much of his wickedness to these societies. Many have prayed, sung and talked with him upon the subject of which I am speaking; but he would reject all, and adhere to none, holding to the theories of his societies. But he is now a member of the church, shouting the high praise of God."

—Nathan and Esther Frame, the Illinois Quaker evangelists have lately been conducting revival meetings in Salina, Ohio, with wonderful results, some 108 conversions being reported. They are now at Piqua, Ohio.

—The Presbyterian Church of Fulton, Ill., lately received forty-nine members on profession. The evangelist, Rev. H. P. Welton, has been laboring in that city.

—A great work of grace has been going on and is still continued in La Porte, Ind., under the evangelist Brown.

News of the Week.

—The Presidential Compromise Bill passed the Senate last Thursday by a vote of 47 to 17, and the next day the House with 191 ayes to 86 nays. Able speeches were made on both sides by Morton, Conkling, Townsend, Edmonds and others. Anticipating the signing of the Bill on Monday by the President, members of the Arbitration Committee were being picked out last week by both parties, The compromise while regarded by many upright citizens as unfortunate and unconstitutional, will be generally acquiesced in as the quickest means of settling the present difficulties.

—The lumber trade of Chicago last year is represented in the following figures, which show a small reduction from the year before: Receipts: thousand feet lumber 1.027,-122; thousand shingles 536,349. Shipments lumber, thousand feet, 544,270; shingles, thousand, 227,-414.

—The prevalence of diptheria and scarlet fever in this city has caused much apprehension among parents. The doctors have taken up the discussion of the diseases and cures in the daily press, and among all the schools are likely to have enough to say.

—The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has called the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury to the increase of illicit distillation and difficulty of enforcing the revenue laws in several of the Southern States. In North Carolina, Georgia and northern Alabama with south-western Virginia and East Tennessee, there are operated in the mountain gorges and thinly settled districts, not fewer than two thousand illicit distilleries. The loss to the revenue is estimated at $2,500,000 annually.

—The Illinois Legislature after a long contest has elected Judge David Davis of the United States Supreme Court, to succeed John A. Logan in the United States Senate. It is understood that Mr. Davis accepts.

—The Catholic party under General Diaz has finnally triumphed in Mexico. Having failed to effect a compromise with Iglesias, he attacked the latter's forces, under command of General Antillon, in Guanajuata. Antillon was defeated, and surrendered his whole army and all his war material. Iglesias and party escaped and took passage in the Pacific mail steamer Grenada for San Francisco, where they arrived Jan. 25th. It is given out that the party will start for St. Louis, thence to New Orleans, where they will take passage to Mexico, the States on the eastern side being in favor of Iglesias. Nothing has been heard of the whereabouts of Lerdo. It is believed he is somewhere on the coast watching an opportunity to escape from the country. The previous report that he had escaped to a seaport in the State of Guerrero is confirmed.

—Now that the conference has failed, Turkey is fixing matters to suit herself. Dispatches confirm the report that Midhat Pasha has proposed peace negotiations to Servia. The correspondent adds that this fine stroke of diplomacy is to force Russia's hand. The Servians will not dare to refuse the Porte's overtures. unless Russia openly promises to support Servia. Hence Russia will be compelled to declare herself or lose the assistance of the Servian army and Servian territory in case of war.

ROME, Jan. 28.—The Ultramontane organ, the Unita Cattolica, admits that the Pope has kept his bed for two days, and does not deny that he has had more than one attack of senile epilepsy.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—A special from Maderia announces that Lieutenant Young, of the Livingstone Mission to Africa, is coming to England. He reports that the mission has had a great effect upon the slave trade. Only thirty-eight slaves were sent to the coast in 1876, although the traffic had previously amounted to many thousands annually.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHA TED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every o dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TR FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pag tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundred young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of fund supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 15 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostl very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages month, but funds are lacking to meet it.

CLUBS.

John W. Wallace, Oakland City, Indiana, sends a club of twelve subscriptions for a year.

S. P. Poole, Bellevue, Michigan, sends a club of ten and writes: "The Cynosure is just beginning to be appreciated in this quarter. A spirit of inquiry is being manifested and I am determined by the help of Him who said 'In secret have I said nothing,' to put my share of the 10,000 of these burning lights into the field before April 1st. Let every reader of the Cynosure be a worker."

Jno. McCauley, Pittsfield, Illinois, sends $15 accompanied with nine subscriptions, and writes: "I intend to try for a few more."

John Milner, Greenfield, Ohio, sends ten for a year and writes: "There are a great many anti-secret men here, but alas! it seems to me that all or nearly all are afraid to speak their sentiments." The best medicine for the lock-jaw on the subject of secret societies that we know of outside of the Holy Bible, is the Christian Cynosure, taken weekly.

E. C. Spencer, Myersburgh, Pennsylvania, sends five for a year and writes: "Believing your paper to be a powerful instrument in the hand of the Almighty to dispense light and to break down this hydra-headed monster which seems almost to have blocked the wheels of the gospel chariot and is endeavoring to bring us as a nation to blasphemous idolatry; I have therefore prevailed upon some more to take the Christian Cynosure, hoping it might operate like leaven in meal."

Asa Warren, Warren's Corners, New York, sends five for a year, later one more and writes: "We shall continue to do the best we can for the success of the paper."

Increase Leadbetter, Auburndale, Massachusetts, sends a club of five for a year. J. S. Gard, Warren, Indiana, sends six for a year and writes: "We are trying to do something for the Cynosure. Yours for the reform."

Jas. A. Hersey, Lamartine, Wisconsin, sends eight new subscriptions for three months each, with his renewal and writes: "I have distributed over a hundred copies of the Cynosure within six months. I am a poor hand for the business." We wish every "poor hand" would do as well. We call such helpers good hands.

Calvin Marshall, Standford, Iowa, sends a club of six for a year and six for three months and writes: "We mean business and have enlisted for life." C. M. Swan, Union City, Michigan, sends five for three months and one for six months. Rev. Wm. Dillon, Dayton, Ohio, sends eight for three months and one for a year. Samuel Guengerish, Amish, Iowa, writes: "I am trying to get up a club but have not yet got the required number." H. L. Phelps, Le Raysville, Pennsylvania, writes: "I am trying to get up a club." I. K. Morris, Hamilton, Ohio, writes: "I am trying to get some new subscribers." Henry M. Tower, Spencer, Mass., sends a new subscription and writes: "You may expect more in future. I commenced the battle alone with God's help, and he is raising up friends. Praise his name."

C. W. Loney, Fennimore, Wis., writes:—"I am endeavoring to get a club of ten for the Christian Cynosure. I believe it to be the great means under God of enlightening the minds of the people in regard to those works of darkness."

In addition to the above wide awake, cheering report of successful work accomplished we add a few words showing how much there is yet to do.

During the last three months almost half the subscriptions on the mail list have expired, some of these of course are discontinued. We have thirty letters before us now containing discontinuances on account of poverty alone. One of these is from the wife of an earnest and successful minister of the Wesleyan Church, who for the last two years has lain helpless because of a stroke of paralysis. Another a pastor who has a sick wife, a family of four to support and a salary of one hundred dollars a year.

There are discontinuances on account of death also, and other causes.

Ten thousand subscribers are a great many, and the list will not number even five thousand by March next, unless there is a very strong and persevering movement during the month of February on the part of our readers for

SUPPLEMENTS! SUPPLEMENTS!

We have many of those admirable supplements on hand yet. Free for canvassing purposes. Seventy-five cents per hundred postpaid and fifty cents per hundred by express, for general distribution.

Do all the reading people in your town know that you are securing a club for the Cynosure?

A stranger to us writes from Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 19, 1877, as follows:

"Gents, I received the copy of the Christian Cynosure, which you mailed me and have looked it over carefully and find much good reading in it. I encountered a considerable difficulty in finding where the paper was published, for I began making inquiry early in December. I finally wrote to Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co., advertising agents in New York city, who gave me the information. So much time had elapsed before your paper was received that I had made out, and ordered, my reading matter, or at least all that I feel able to pay for, amounting, all told, to something over sixteen dollars for the year. I am much interested in the anti-secret society movement, and will do what I can to help it forward, and hope to be able and intend to include the Christian Cynosure, when I make out my next list of newspapers."

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A r of may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only abont the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On

TIN ROOFS

our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

BRICK WALLS.

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

NIAGARA COUNTY ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Niagara County Association Opposed to Secret Societies, will be held in the Free Methodist church, in the city of Lockport, on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, the 14th and 15th of February, 1877. The lectures will commence at 7:30 P. M. on each evening. A business meeting will be held on Thursday afternoon to commence at one o'clock P. M for the election of officers for the ensuing year; discussion of questions and for such other business as shall properly come before the convention. The Rev. A. F. Curry is expected to lecture. All are cordially invited to attend.

B. S. LAUGHLIN, President.

FREE TRACTS.

How we wish that the demand for them could be fully supplied!

Although Ezra A. Cook & Co. put a dollar with every other one received for the Tract Fund, so that for every dollar sent in 2,000 pages of tracts are sent out, the demand for free tracts still far exceeds the supply.

Our excellent brother, Enoch Honeywell of Altay, New York, has until within the past seven months paid for all of his tracts that we had orders for, but he has found the demand too great, and nearly 60,000 Honeywell tracts have been paid for out of the Tract Fund.

Brother Thomas Hodge whose zeal and efficiency in the tract work at the "Great Centennial" gave every friend of the cause so much joy and whose interesting Centennial letters in the Cynosure gave us all pleasure, is now in charge of the books, tracts and reading-room in the Carpenter Building and will make good use of a large numbre of tracts there. The 20,000 pages of tracts just furnished him will soon be in the hands of readers.

Every mail brings requests for free tracts, but there is not now a shilling in the Tract Fund to pay for them. Have you any of the Lord's money to use for this object?

Topics of the Time.

A year or two since Gen. Pleasanton, brother of the celebrated cavalry leader, published the results of experiments with animal life exposed to a peculiar blue light. His theories were not universally credited by any means, but notwithstanding adverse criticism he has published a book on the subject and the experiments of prominent physicians have popularized his theory and given the glass dealers an opportunity to advertise their genuine wares. Many cases of chronic and nervous diseases are said to be cured, and others are made to yield more readily to medicinal treatment. The patient has only to sit half an hour a day in a window in one half of which a pane of the blue glass is fastened. This result is said to be brought about by some electric action which none of the philosophers are yet clear in explaining. No one doubts that there are yet mighty undeveloped powers in this wonderful natural agent, and several niches of fame are waiting to be filled by industrious investigators into its nature and use.

A suit between a Mr. Graham and the Mutual Assurance Society, of Richmond, Virginia, has thrown new light upon the burning of Richmond after its evacuation by the rebel troops. The old controversy was whether the victors or the vanquished were responsible—whether it was a Jerusalem or a Moscow. It has been proved that the Confederate Gen. Ewell knew something of the matter, a subordinate officer having testified that the city was fired by direct orders from him. Ewell has always refused to give any evidence in the matter, but in the present case a stipulation by the attorneys has been made part of the record, stating that Gen. Ewell caused the firing of the city in obedience to a statute of the rebel Congress, requiring the officer in command at Richmond to set fire to the city whenever it fell into the power of the Union army. The question of the burning of Columbia, South Carolina, which has given Gen. Sherman so much trouble, may some time be settled in a similar way.

The final settlement of the Presidential troubles was fairly got under way last week. The Court of Arbitration having been organized after the election of the fifth Justice, Bradley, is thus composed: Justice Clifford, of Maine, Strong of Pennsylvania, Miller of Iowa, Field of California and Bradley of New Jersey; Senators Edmunds, Morton, Frelinghuysen, Bayard and Thurman; Representatives Hoar, Garfield, Payne, Hunton and Abbott. From their past political standing nine of the Court are Republicans and six Democrats. The ability of the body politically and judicially is of the highest order and on the whole reflects credit on Congress in the appointment. Seven members were on the committee that drew up the compromise plan, and will feel in honor bound to allow no failure from lack of energy in the proceedings of the arbitrators. Eminent lawyers are also employed on both sides to plead before the Court, Wm. M. Evarts, Stanley Matthews, R. G. Ingersoll and Judge Stoughton for the Republicans and Jere. Black, Matt. Carpenter, B. F. Butler and Judges Campbell and Trumbull for the Democrats, an array of oratorical and legal talent equal to any occasion.

Counting the electoral vote began last Thursday in joint session, acting Vice-president Ferry presiding. The electoral votes of Alabama, California, Colorado and Delaware were counted without objection. Then Florida was reached and there being two sets of votes both were met by objections and the case was referred to the Court of Arbirtration, where it was under discussion during the rest of the week, the Senate and House taking a recess until a decision is reached. That was promised on Tuesday. Meantime the tone of the Republican press is growing more hopeful and confident of success, an experience that is not felt by journals of the other party. The exposure of David Dudley Field's scheme for taking the Louisiana vote has also had a depressing effect on Mr. Tilden's friends.

THE CHURCH WALKING WITH THE WORLD.

BY MRS. MATILDA O. EDWARDS.

The Church and the World walked far apart,
On the changing shore of time,
The World was singing a giddy song,
And the Church a hymn sublime
"Come give me your hand," cried the merry World,
"And walk with me this way;"
But the good Church hid her snowy hands,
And solemnly answered, "Nay,
I will not give you my hand at all,
And I will not walk with you;
Your way is the way to endless death;
Your words are all untrue."

"Nay, walk with me but a little space,"
Said the World, with a kindly air;
"The road I walk is a pleasant road,
And the sun shines always there;
Your path is thorny and rough and rude,
And mine is broad and plain;
My road is paved with flowers and dews,
And yours with tears and pain;
The sky above is always blue;
No want, no toil, I know;
The sky above you is always dark;
Your lot is a lot of woe;
My path, you see, is a broad, fair one,
And my gate is high and wide;
There is room enough for you and for me
To travel side by side.

Half shyly the Church approached the World,
And gave him her hand of snow;
The old World grasped it and walked along,
Saying in accents low,
"Your dress is too simple to please my taste;
I will give you pearls to wear.
Rich velvets and silks for your graceful form,
And diamonds to deck your hair."
The Church looked down at her plain white robes,
And then at the dazzling World,
And blushed as she saw his handsome lip
With a smile contemptuous curled.
"I will change my dress for a costlier one,"
Said the Church, with a smile of grace;
Then her pure white garments drifted away,
And the World gave in their place
Beautiful satins and shining silks,
And roses and gems and pearls;
And over her forehead her bright hair fell
Crisped in a thousand curls.

"Your house is too plain," said the proud old World.
"I'll build you one like mine;
Carpets of Brussels and curtains of lace,
And furniture ever so fine."
So he built her a costly and beautiful house;
Splendid it was to behold;
Her sons and her beautiful daughters dwelt there,
Gleaming in purple and gold;
And balls and shows in the halls were held,
And the World and his children were there.
And laughter and music and feasts were heard
In the place that was meant for prayer.
She had cushioned pews for the rich and great,
To sit in their pomp and pride;
While the poor folks, clad in their shabby suits,
Sat meekly down outside.

The angel of Mercy flew over the Church,
And whispered, "I know thy sin;"
Then the Church looked back with a sigh, and longed
To gather her children in.
But some were off at the midnight ball,
And some were off at the play,
And some were drinking in gay saloons;
So she quietly went her way.

Then the sly World gallantly said to her,
"Your children mean no harm,
Merely indulging in innocent sports;"
So she leaned on his proffered arm,
And smiled and chatted, and gathered flowers,
As she walked along with the World;
While millions and millions of deathless souls
To the horrible gulf were hurled.

"Your preachers are all too old and plain,"
Said the gay World with a sneer;
"They frighten my children with dreadful tales,
Which I like not for them to hear;
They talk of brimstone and fire and pain,
And the horrors of endless night;
They talk of a place which should not be
Mentioned to ears polite.
I will send you some of the better stamp,
Brilliant and gay and fast,
Who will tell them that people may live as they list,
And go to heaven at last.
The Father is merciful, great and good,
Tender and true and kind;
Do you think he would take one child to heaven
And leave the rest behind?
So he filled her house with gay divines,
Gifted and great and learned;
And the plain old men that preached the cross
Were out of her pulpits turned.

"You give too much to the poor," said the World,
"Far more than you ought to do;
If the poor need shelter and food and clothes,
Why need it trouble you?
Go take your money and buy rich robes,
And horses and carriages fine,
And pearls and jewels and dainty food,
And the rarest and costliest wine;

My children they dote on all such things,
And if you their love would win,
You must do as they do: and walk in the ways
That they are walking in."

Then the Church held tightly the strings of her purse,
And gr cefully lowered her head,
And simpered, "I've given too much away;
I'll do, sir, as you have said."

So the poor were turned from her door in scorn,
And she heard not the orphan's cry;
And she drew her beautiful robes aside,
As the widows went weeping by;
And the sons of the World and the sons of the Church
Walked closely hand and heart,
And only the Master who knoweth all
Could tell the two apart.

Then the church sat down at her ease and said,
"I am rich, and in goods increased;
I have need of nothing, and naught to do
But to laugh and dance and feast;"
And the sly World heard her and laughed in his sleeve,
And mockingly said aside,
"The Church is fallen, the beautiful Church,
And her shame is her boast and pride."

The angel drew near to the mercy-seat,
And whispered in sighs her name.
And the saints their anthems of rapture hushed,
And covered their heads with shame;
And a voice came down through the hush of heaven
From him who sat on the throne,
"I know thy work, and how thou hast said,
I am rich; and hast not known
That thou art naked, poor and blind,
And wretched before my face:
Therefore, from my presence I cast thee out,
And blot thy name from its place."

Sanctification: What is it?

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Much misconception exists as to this doctrine, and much opposition results from such misconception. I desire briefly and with no pretense to either a philosophical or complete Biblical analysis of the subject, to present some thoughts which may throw light on this subject.

The following propositions will be found to be Scriptural: First, Faith in Christ is not only the condition of the forgiveness of sin but implies purity of heart, or the forsaking of all known sin; and therefore no one while in the exercise of living faith in Christ can commit sin. Proof: John iii. 8, "He that committeth sin is of the devil." "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; he cannot sin for he is born of God." John v. 4. "Whosoever is born of God overcometh the world, and this is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith."

Secondly, the sins of Christians result from lapses of faith. They for the time being let go of Christ. Proof: John xv. 4, "As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself except it abide in the vine no more can you except ye abide in me;" v. 6, "If a man abide not in me he is cast forth as a branch and is withered." Separated from Christ he is spiritually dead.

Thirdly, entire sanctification consists in that established, abiding faith in Christ which is unmoved by any temptation, and in which "We are more than conquerors through him that loved us." This blessed state is spoken of by Paul (Eph. iii. 14-19) when he prays, "That he would grant you according to the riches of his glory to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man. That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye being rooted and grounded in love may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and heighth, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness there is in Christ." Paul again enjoins on the brethren to seek this blessing in Eph. vi. 13-16, "Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand in the evil day, and having done all to stand. Stand therefore having your loins girt about with truth and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace; above all taking the shield of faith whereby ye shall be able to quench the fiery darts of the wicked."

This is just what we need, "A shield of faith that shall quench all the fiery darts of the wicked," a Saviour that saves to the uttermost "all that come unto him." Does not the Gospel reveal to us such a Saviour? and is it not our highest duty to enter into this great salvation?

Plain, Honest Talk.

A writer for the Wesleyan, whose articles have been recently copied into the Cynosure, gives us some very plain, honest talk about the way that he was led on, in spite of the obstacles that stood in the way of his Christian conscience, from one stumbling block to another, until he had become pretty thoroughly initiated into the Masonic lodge. He wonders now how it was possible that he should thus repress the warnings of conscience, and press on deeper and deeper into the vain yet infatuating mystifications of Freemasonry. It seems to him now like some horrid dream, through the scenes of which, though horrid and revolting, he had to pass without any will of his own. Having once surrendered himself, his liberty, his conscience, his manhood to his fellow-men, he was borne onwards by them from one revolting scene to another still more revolting, until he found himself at last in all the heaven that Masonry has it in its power to bestow: and that heaven to him was a hell; it was a mere manufactured, pagan heaven, that could not satisfy any Christian mind.

The experience of this honest writer thus candidly given, furnishes a good illustration of a passage in the epistle to the Romans, which, though often quoted, does not seem to be clearly understood. The passage alluded to reads as follows: "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

In order to understand this passage, it must be borne in mind that St. Paul was writing at Corinth, almost under the shadow of the temple of Eleusis, where the greatest mystification worship of ancient times held its principal seat. St. Paul often made use of pagan figures, types, and forms of expression, as did other sacred writers, for the purpose of conveying Christian ideas. He could hardly do otherwise and be able to reach the pagan comprehension.

The passage then, which we have quoted, seems to be drawn from the process of initiation into the mystifications of Eleusis. Great terrors were thrown in the way of the candidate for initiation, terrible sights and sounds, not only of the existing present world, but of the future world to come. Lightnings, and earth quakes, and thunders, and other "creatures" were made use of to frighten and astound him; but still, if he endured all, had faith in the chief mystagogue, and pressed on, he would finally emerge from all the dangers and fears that beset him, and come out into peaceful, heavenly scenes, of great brightness, happiness and beauty, where dancing girls to the dulcet strains of soothing music tripped gracefully over flowery meadows, made sweet with the sound of running waters, etc., etc. Such was the epitome of the mysteries of life with pagan worshipers, which amounted, in reality, like the tricks of Freemasonry, to nothing but a gross, artificial mimicry of the events of human life in the abstract.

St. Paul, in endeavoring to raise the pagan mind to a higher plane in the mysterious verities of life, seems to have made use of this, their highest effort of worship, to explain how a Christian, by surrendering himself to Christ, as the Great Revelator of the mysteries of life, and by pressing onward with full faith in him, and with perfect obedience to his directions, would be led onward through every besetting obstacle and danger from death, or life, or principalities, or powers, or from any other source, until finally God in his love should receive him into infinite bliss.

The idea of St. Paul is, that the candidate for admission into the church must have faith in Christ, and be governed by his precepts, as a necessary means of attaining to the love of God. But Freemasonry teaches the candidate for admission into the lodge, that he must have faith in man, in some swell of a Masonic priest, must take horrid oaths from him, must believe what he says, and must press on in search of the Masonic heaven, until he has hardly a trace of Christianity or true manhood left; until, in short, he finds himself a disbeliever in Christ and a confirmed pagan. He has surrendered the sublime truths of the gospels, and embraces in their stead the groveling superstitions of the lodge.

The Masonic candidate for admission is told that his obligations to the lodge do not interfere with his religious and political opinions, and he believes it; or tries to do so. That is, he places his faith in his fellow-man, and that man an imposter; and the consequence is, he loses faith both in man in his Saviour too. And thus when arrived at the "Grand Lodge above," he will doubtless expect to find that nothing, not even blasphemy itself against the Holy Ghost, no, not all the infamy of a dissolute life, could separate him from the love of the "Great Architect."

Does the Ku Klux believe this? Does the Mormon believe it? Does the Freemason, or any other modern mystification worshiper believe it? The writer in the Wesleyan honestly acknowledges that he was expected to believe it. Many act as if they believed it; and if this does not convince every Christian that he should come out and be separate from the lodge, what would?

AMERICUS.

Masonry a Political Institution.

BY J. H. H. WOODWARD.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Herewith I hand you the reported proceedings of the Minnesota Grand Lodge of Masons, as detailed by the St. Paul Pioneer Press. It will be seen that that Grand Lodge has followed in the work of the Ohio Grand Lodge on the negro Masonic question, and by a far greater unanimity have tabooed him. If there is anything in the world that determines the political status of a party, society, or association, in this country, it is the animus they exhibit when called upon to act in reference to the colored people, who constitute so important a part of our population. By their course on this question must they be judged. Masonry seems now to be placing itself squarely and uniformly upon the record against the colored people. That such action has an ulterior reference to future political complications amongst us, there can be but little ground for doubt. But to the report. Here it is:

"THE GRAND LODGE OF MINNESOTA REFUSES TO RECOGNIZE NEGRO MASONS.—The whole of the forenoon and a portion of the afternoon of the Grand Lodge meeting was devoted to the discussion of what is called the "African Lodge." The question of recognizing the colored Lodges has long been discussed by the Masonic fraternity. Last year the Grand Master alluded to the subject in his address and as the Lodge had an application from Prince Hall Lodge, of Boston, and two from two lodges here in the State asking to be recognized, it was deemed best to bring the matter to a conclusion as soon as possible. Accordingly that portion of the Grand Master's address which referred to the question and the three communications were referred to a large committee. Yesterday three reports were made, one by Mr. A. T. C. Pierson, one by Aaron Goodrich, and one by Mr. Griswold. The two first reported against recognizing the colored people. The last, Mr. Griswold, reported in favor of recognizing them. The whole question resolves itself, according to the reports, into a question of history. The two that agree against recognizing the colored lodges affirm and maintain that the colored lodges are not now and never have been recognized as belonging to the Masonic fraternity, and all searched diligently the Masonic history to ascertain whether or not the colored brethren had ever been taken in. Mr. Goodrich goes to the oldest kind of English law to show what a free man is, and claims that none but a free man can be a Mason. Mr. A. T. C. Pierson's report was also quite long and reaches the same conclusion but by a different line of argument. The discussion was brought to a close by the adoption of three resolutions, attached to the report of Mr. A. T. C. Pierson, as follows:

"Resolved. That the Grand Lodge of Minnesota declines to recognize the Prince Hall Grand Lodge, located in Boston, Massachusetts, for the reason of its irregular formation.

Resolved. That the Grand Lodge cannot recognize charters as having any validity in this State, except those issued by its authority; and that it cannot issue charters except to such Masons as are of its obedience.

Resolved. That color is neither a bar nor a recommendation to the acceptance of the Masonic degrees in this jurisdiction, and that it is perfectly competent for any lodge in this jurisdiction to make Masons of any parties possessing the required qualifications.

The vote by which the resolutions were adopted is 321 in favor of them and 7 against, which appears sufficiently decisive to settle the matter."

The declaration made in the last resolution "that color is neither a bar nor a recommendation to the acceptance of the Masonic degrees in the jurisdiction of Minnesota," is the merest bosh in the world. If any colored man imagines that he can enter a subordinate lodge of white Masons in Minnesota, just let him apply for membership and see what becomes of his petition. He will find himself a wiser man by the attempt. That Masonry has in view the abrogation or nullification of the 13th, 14th and 15th amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and is silently working to that effect, time will shortly disclose. That this is the covert purpose of all Southern Masons is painfully evident by many indications; and Masonry rules the South, and in ruling the South dictates and imposes its line of conduct as the prevailing policy to be observed by all Northern Masonic Grand Bodies in reference to the political affairs of this nation. History furnishes abundant and indubitable proof that these Northern Masonic Grand bodies are but the merest leagues, the veriest tools to do the will and bidding of their Southern allies and masters. Nearly all our political and financial troubles may be traced to the accursed hand of Masonry. Its constant political intrigues are manifest on every side. Masking itself under the name of Democracy, it defeated the veteran Scott in 1852, for the Presidency, and annihilated the Whig party. That party had neither the sense nor pluck to lock horns with the beast that gored it to death, and fight it out on a rugged and square issue, but quietly and submissively went under. Masonry in casting its vote for Samuel J. Tilden has sounded the death knell of the present Republican party. That party as now organized will never carry another national election. The hand writing is upon the wall. The political Samson has fallen into the hands of the Philistines, and allowed himself to be bound by them, through the instrumentalities of his own folly, and of course must now suffer the ignominious consequences of his own weakness. There is no help for him except in reorganization and regeneration. He must be born again, and when renewed in life no taint of Masonry must defile his constitution, nor be found within the skirts of his political garments.

If the Republican party ever hope to recover lost ground in the minds and affections of the great body of the American people, it must avow and prosecute an open war on Masonry, expel the entire traitorous craft from its political fold, and make its declaration of "equal and exact justice to all men" a living fact, and not to constitute a mere jingle of miserable catchwords for political effect as they now do. The Republican party need not fear results in driving out what little there is of the Masonic element existing within its folds. Where it loses one vote from that cause it will gain five from the same, and once restored to ascendancy with Masonry destroyed it can never be replaced by another party if it remains true to its trust. It is a minority party now and will so remain just so long as it hesitates to war upon secretism. No party can successfully war upon the so-called Democratic party so long as it hesitates to destroy the Masonic cement by which that party is bound and held together. No other party ever exhibited in this country the tenacity of life which is so wonderfully shown by this so-called Democratic party, and why? Simply because, and for no reason other than that Masonry is its backbone — its life-sustaining power. What so overwhelmingly defeated the Democratic party in 1840? Is it not plain the crushing out of Masonry consequent on the agitation growing out of the abduction and murder of Morgan, which culminated in the formation of the Whig party, led to that result? It certainly had much to do with it. And what caused the re-growth of that party? Look at the resuscitation of Masonry for the proper answer. Masonry owes the Republican party no good will for destroying slavery in this country, and in the name of Democracy will just so far undo the work of that party as it can safely accomplish the purpose without arousing the indignation of an outraged people. Watch this prediction for a fact.

Hereafter I will show by Masonic authority that the exclusion of the negro from the so-called privileges of Masonry is founded upon political considerations and always has been. It is all the better for the negro, and the outside world too, in so far as he is concerned, that he is excluded, but the exclusion furnishes clear proof of the political cast of the Masonic institution, and this is what I desire to show, and will show by conclusive evidence before I dismiss the subject.

[From the Pittsburgh Commercial.]

THE DEGENERACY AND DANGER OF THE REPUBLIC.

A DISCOURSE BY REV. A. M. MILLIGAN, D. D., IN THE REF. PRES. CHURCH, PITTSBURGH.

"Yet I had planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed: now then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?"—Jer. 2: 21.

Two hundred and fifty-six years ago in the depth of a New England winter the goodly seed of this noble vine was planted. It was borne across the ocean in the Mayflower, but was deposited in the soil late in December. The seed was of God's own rearing. Nourished upon the Word of God, purified in the fires and borne by the winds of persecution to this virgin soil, it was a goodly seed planted in a large land. Our forefathers came here to plant a nation. Educated in the rights of the people by John Calvin and his Genevan Republic, by William the Silent and his Dutch Republic, by John Knox and his Scotch Covenanters, and trained in the same school with Oliver Cromwell and his English Puritans, they determined that the nation they planted should be faithful to God and true to human liberty.

In tracing the signs of degeneracy I would point in the first place to our departure from self-sacrificing devotion to the public good. The fathers of the Republic were patriots in the highest sense of the word. Driven from their homes by tyrants, they braved the dangers of the deep, the hardships of the forest, the perils of the savage beasts and still more savage men, that they might have a country worthy of the patriot's highest devotion, and they gave to it freely their fortunes, their honor and their lives. The women who sacrificed the delicacies of the table rather than pay the tyrant's tax on tea, the men who boiled and ate their saddle flaps and tracked the snows of Valley Forge with their bare and bleeding feet were not the men to sell their birthright for a mess of pottage. They were the descendants of men who had been hunted from their homes and had died on scaffolds and they knew by experience that "the price of liberty is eternal vigilance," the first sly step of the despot was by them detected and resisted. The danger of to-day is that every one is seeking his gain from his quarter, and the great public interests of the nation receive but little attention from the great mass of the people. Either from indifference to the public good, or an unfounded confidence in the safety of our liberties, evils threatening the very existence of the nation are permitted to lurk unheeded in our midst, and even to flaunt their defiant challenge in our faces, without even a protest. Indeed Christian men have about concluded to resign the nation to the control of the ungodly. The result is that selfish and unprincipled men, banded together in political rings, have in their hands the entire administration of the government, and manage it solely with reference to their personal and party advantage. Great commercial communities demand free trade and great manufacturing interests demand a tariff. Great railroad monopolies demand legislation in their favor, while rival interests demand adverse legislation. Which of these is right and which is wrong, I do not assume to determine, but simply use these illustrations to show that selfishness and not patriotism are the actuating motives of those who interest themselves in politics. Even we who sacrifice our political privileges for the good of our country and the honor of our God, are too prone to content ourselves with a silent protest and withdrawal from the political arena, instead of thundering the warnings of God in the ears of the nation and sounding the alarm in the capital, while the great mass are satisfied with casting a ballot or joining in a procession. We have yet to learn that republican liberty is a luxury too expensive to be gained or retained without some cost of both vigilance, labor and sacrifice.

A second indication of degeneracy is our national estrangement from God. Our fathers were men who dearly prized and cheerfully made sacrifices for freedom. But it was "freedom to worship God." With them "resistance to tyrants was obedience to God." To set up a government that would honor God and secure the liberties of the people was a part of their religion. They believed that such a government was the ordinance of God, and that to resist it was to incur damnation. Hence in their first constitution, the covenant entered into on the deck of the Mayflower, they declared themselves bound together for the glory of God and the civil and religious liberty of themselves and their children. They offered national prayers and thanksgivings to God. They instructed their children in his Word, and taught magistrates and people that they were responsible to God for the faithful discharge of their duties to each other.

They believed that "law has its seat in the bosom of God and its voice is the harmony of the universe," and that the fear of God is the bond of the Commonwealth.

It was such principles planted deep in the hearts of the people that gave consistency and permanency to the Republic and enabled it to maintain itself amid the upheavals that have overthrown so many neighboring republics.

A godless republic is a rope of sand, or like the toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image, "potter's clay," and the first strain will break it to pieces, while a republic recognizing the authority of Christ and obedient to his will is "the stone cut out of the mountain without hands which shall become a great mountain and fill the whole earth." It is the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ which all the kingdoms of this world must become."

Unfortunately the framers of our national Constitution left out of that instrument all recognition of the authority of "our Lord or of his Christ," and set up the will of the people as supreme. That instrument has educated a race of politicians who say, in the language of the thirty-first verse of this chapter, "We are lords; we will come no more unto thee." Or in the language of the fourteenth Psalm, "Who is the Lord that I should obey him?" The result is that it has become a maxim that "politics has nothing to do with religion;" that it is a stygean pool too filthy for a Christian to approach, where publicans and sinners hold high carnival in the scramble for the spoils of office. Though God planted us a noble vine we are fast becoming the degenerate plants of a strange vine to him. When that day comes that the people become as godless as the politicians and the Constitution our end will be near.

The third element of danger to the Republic, is the condition of Southern society created by slavery —two classes diametrically opposite; the one accustomed to absolute, unlimited control over the other, trained to regard them as an inferior race, considering the enfranchisement of the negro a degradation to the white man, and the emancipation of the slave as a robbing of the master. Smarting under defeat, disdaining labor, humiliated by failure, and restive under restraint, it is not to be wondered at that the aristocrat of the plantation should prove an incongruous element in a republic where all men are considered equal.

On the other hand the freedman, reared under the debasing influences of slavery, his manhood destroyed by his chattlehood; his self-respect taken out of him by the lash, the coffle chain and the auction block; every idea of honesty, truthfulness and virtue perverted by his condition; ignorant, helpless and degraded, is utterly unfitted to exercise the functions of self-government or to protect himself from the hostile intrigues of his former master. The intimidation and cruelties practiced upon these helpless wards of the nation must make the patriot blush and the Christian sigh, and the God of the oppressed ask, "Shall I not visit for these things? Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?"

The fourth element of danger to the republic is Jesuitism. I will not here speak of the religion of the Catholic Church, but of the intrigues of the Roman hierarchy guided by the order of Jesuits, which, since the Vatican Council of 1870, has exercised entire control of the church and uses it to accomplish its purposes to establish its supremacy over all the governments of the world. Gladstone, the greatest statesman of England deliberately declares "Vaticanism inconsistent with civil allegiance," and Bismarck and the Vatican are engaged in a life and death struggle to determine which shall govern the great German Empire. Bismarck declares, "We are not going to Ganossa," while the Pope replies by commanding the faithful to celebrate on the 25th of next month the eight hundredth anniversary of the humiliation of Henry the IV., the Emperor of Germany, when for three days he stood at the door of the castle begging absolution, while the intense cold in which he was confined, in almost utter nudity, caused him to howl in anguish, while the inhuman Hildebrand and his paramour were reveling in the castle—this is the answer of his Holiness to the challenge of Bismarck. This ecclesiastico-civil despotism, which for centuries ruled the nations of the Old World, which hunted the people of God to the wilds and drove our forefathers to seek an asylum in this land, is to-day reaching forth its ghostly hand to grasp the reins of government here. Five hundred thousand votes controlled by the Vatican and cast in such centers of political power as control the largest electoral vote had well nigh at this time transferred the balance of power to Rome, and elected the President of these United States. But he knows little of the character of Jesuitism and of the candidate of its choice who doubts that they understood each other. That day that Roman Catholicism controls our elections the American Republic is gone and the hierarchy enthroned in the Vatican is our master.

The fifth element of danger is the secret orders which, under a variety of names and objects, have become so numerous in our land. Some of these have already well nigh effected the dismemberment of the nation and the destruction of the government, while others are even now defying the power of the government to restore order and tranquility in the Southern States, while others, though disavowing all political character, still, with only one-eighth of the voting population, fill nearly all the offices in the nation and manage to control nearly all the organizations of both church and state; while with their signs and pledges to keep each other's secrets, they furnish the most perfect facilities for conspiracy and every other crime against society. When the secret orders control the nation the Republic dies.

The sixth and last element of danger, which I mention is, loss of confidence. When patriotism gives place to selfishness; when the fear of God and of an oath gives place to dishonesty, falsehood and perjury; when intimidation, fraud and foreign dictation, usurp the place of an honest election; when rings and conspiracies and secret combinations control affairs, then loss of confidence must inevitably ensue; and when a partisan press in the most shameless manner misrepresent and falsify facts, and politicians charge each other with bribery, fraud, corruption and every dishonesty, and especially when these charges are sustained by evidence what confidence can the people repose in such a government? And when confidence is gone, what have we left? "Any trivial, but inflammatory accident may precipitate us into anarchy."

The only remedy for our hurt, and safety from our danger, is to return to our first love, and in patriotism, honesty, intelligence and the fear of God, anchor our ship of State to the Rock of Ages. If Christ does not rule us, the devil will. The former saves, the latter destroys.

THE COST OF OUR RECENT WAR. —Mr. David A. Wells has furnished the Cobden Club of England with an essay upon the expenses, income and taxes of the United States. We copy the following statement of the cost of the Rebellion:

The whole cost of the war to the Northern and Southern States from 1861 to 1866 is estimated as follows: Lives, 1,000,000; property, by destruction, waste, etc., $9,000,000,000. The gross expenditures of the United States from June 1861 to July 1866, $5,792,257,000. Of this the actual war expenses were about $5,342,237,000.

The expenses of States, counties, cities and towns in the Northern States, not represented by funded debts, have been estimated at $500,000,000. The increase of State debts on the war account was $123,000,000. The increase of city, town and county debts is estimated at 200,000,000. Total war expenses of the loyal States and the National Government, $6,165,237,000.

The estimated direct expenditures of the Confederate States on account of the war to the country North and South were $2,000,000,000.

Aggregate estimated expenses of the war to the country, North and South, $8,165,237,000.

The total receipts from all sources during the second year of the war were less than $42,000,000. The expenditures were $60,000,000 per month—at the rate of $700,000,000 a year.

News of the Week.

—Judge David Davis who has resigned his position in the U. S. Supreme Court to become Senator from Illinois, has requested that if his resignation be accepted that Judge Drummond, of this city, be appointed by the President as his successor.

—Congress is now wholly occupied in counting the electoral vote. David Dudley Field, of New York, who was the former attorney of Fisk, Gould and Tweed, is now employed for Tilden, and is making himself odious in the eyes of Republicans for his grossly partisan efforts.

London, Feb. 5.—The Times' dispatch from Belgrade reports that the peace negotiations between the Servian agent and Turkish Ambassador at Vienna have been broken off in consequence of the Porte's persistence in demanding guarantees the nature of which it refused to specify. The Times correspondent says it is quite probable that the Turkish proposals to Servia and Montenegro were more the result of a desire to appear magnanimous in the eyes of Europe than an anxiety for peace, as the Porte undoubtedly believed that, in the event of a Russo-Turkish war, Russia will make use of Servia in spite of any treaty which may be concluded between Servia and Turkey.

—An English paper has the following on the disposition of the Turkish forces: "On the side of Asia, it is said that the Turkish fortresses of Kars, Erzeroum, Batoum, and Bajazet are thoroughly prepared for defense, and contain more numerous garrisons than at the time of the Crimean war. Kars and Batoum are especially strong, and armed with very heavy artillery. The garrisons of both these places are composed almost exclusively of regular troops. The total force of Turkish troops now near the frontier in Asia Minor may be estimated at 95,000 men, of whom some 16,000 are regular soldiers. The army consists of 58 battalions of infantry (each 300 strong), 24 squadrons of cavalry, and 28 batteries. The headquarters of the field army are at Bajazet. The concentration of the Turkish army of the Danube is said to be completed, and the troops are now held ready for action under the command of Ahmed Eyoub Pasha. The Army of the Danube consists of 30 regiments of infantry, 3 frontier regiments, 31 battalions of rifles, 16 regiments of regular cavalry, 6 regiments of irregular cavalry (Tcherkessis 800 men strong), 68 batteries of six guns, and 30 regiments of irregulars, each 1,800 strong. The army is divided into five corps d'armee."

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

FROM MR. MOODY'S NOONDAY TALKS.

WHO IS CHRIST?

"Nevertheless, I tell you the truth, it is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away the Comforter will not come unto you but if I depart I will send him unto you." Christ does not talk like a man who is going down into the grave where they were never to see him again; it is true he tells them he is to be killed, but he is to rise again and go up to sit at the right hand of God. Those men who attack the divinity of Christ do not believe that he is risen from the dead and intercedes for us before the Father, and that he sends the Holy Spirit to comfort and enlighten those who believe on him. I am glad that the public mind is agitated on this question, Who is Christ? If he is not the Son of God I don't know of anybody who can tell us who he is; if he is no more than a good man we must throw away the whole of this Gospel of John. "I have told you about my death beforehand; when it comes you will be full of sorrow, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy." But how did he know beforehand what was to take place? To Jesus Christ the present, past and future were all alike; all things were open before his eye.

It is a good thing that it is the work of the Holy Spirit to convince the world of their sins, for we are not able to do it. I should feel overwhelmed at the idea of facing such an audience as this if I had the responsibility on me of convincing you of all your sins. That is the work of the Holy Spirit. Let us pray that he will do it now.

THE WEST SIDE NOON MEETING.

The upper room at No. 221 West Madison street was comfortably filled every day last week with earnest people seeking for themselves and others more light and peace in Christ. The meetings were led through the week respectively by Rev. E. N. Barrett of the Westminister Presbyterian church, Rev. J. W. Bain of the United Presbyterian church, Dr. H. W. Richardson, Rev. H. M. Paynter, Ex-Aledrman Montgomery and Professor Boardman, D. D.

On Thursday the subject was "Separation," and following the illustrious example of Mr. Moody on the same topic, one brother spoke of the separation of Christians from the lodge in an earnest and temperate manner. The remarks were followed by others in evident sympathy, though not mentioning the subject of secretism.

Friday, the day for "Gospel Temperance," was another season of special interest. Mr. Montgomery, the leader, has long been known as a politician and manufacturer and dealer in liquors. After the congregation had sung "Jesus, Blessed Jesus," he read the fifth chapter of Galatians and made the opening address. He didn't know, he said, what propriety there was in calling this a "gospel temperance meeting," for he couldn't imagine what a temperance meeting would be that was not pervaded by the spirit of the gospel. He had lately been much impressed by the fact that there was no way of safety for the sinner except by yielding obedience to the law of Christ. Paul's exposition of The Kansas State Meeting.

The Kansas State Association opposed to secret societies held a semi-annual meeting at North Cedar, in Jackson county, in the Reformed Presbyterian church on Tuesday, Jan. 23, commencing at 3 o'clock P. M., and continued its sessions with adjournments, till 10 o'clock on Wednesday evening. A considerable number of distinguished speakers were present, and several excellent addresses were delivered.

On Tuesday evening Rev. J. T. Kiggins of Wilson, Kansas, delivered an able, eloquent and exceedingly animated address, in which he showed up, in glowing colors, the evils of Freemasonry and other secret orders.

Wednesday forenoon was occupied in a deeply interesting and animated discussion on a series of resolutions previously reported by Rev. J. A. Thompson of Wahoo, Nebraska, chairman of the committee on resolutions. This discussion was participated in by Messrs. Kiggins, Fields, Meeks, Richards, Hosford, Thompson, Milligan and others. Said resolutions were unanimously adopted, and are as follows:—

Resolved, 1st, That Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and kindred secret organizations are unscriptural and anti-republican.

2nd, That it is inconsistent with faith in Christ to be a member of a secret society.

3rd, That secret societies are seriously damaging to the Christian church, and should be faithfully condemned by every branch of the church.

4th, That every patriot should, by all legitimate means, resist the encroachments of secret organizations upon the rights and liberties of our American Republic.

5th, That we rejoice in the work of the National Christian Association opposed to secret orders, and indorse the Christian Cynosure as a bold and faithful advocate of our principles, and we will, as much as possible co-operate with them in this reform.

The following petition and resolutions were presented by C. A. Sexton of Topeka, and were unanimously adopted:

PETITION.

To the Legislature of the State of Kansas:—Your petitioners would most humbly represent that, in our opinion, secret combinations, such as Freemasons, Odd-fellows and kindred societies, including Catholic convents, are in their tendency dangerous to the welfare of our citizens and commonwealth, and that to us it seems very desirable and necessary, and to this end we will ever pray that provision be made at the present session of your honorable body that a committee be appointed with power to send for persons and papers to ascertain the truth on this point, and report the same at the next session of your honorable body.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That this Convention does most most heartily endorse the preceding petition.

Resolved, That we earnestly recommend to all friends of good order that it be circulated for signatures in all parts of our State at once, and forwarded to C. A. Sexton at Topeka, who will endeavor to secure its presentation to our Legislature at the present session.

Resolved, That we request all papers which have the welfare of our commonwealth in view, to copy this petition, and series of resolutions.

On Wednesday afternoon the ceremony of initiating a candidate into the first degree of Odd-fellowship was read, and commented on, in a lively and interesting manner by Bro. Kiggins, who had himself submitted to the humiliating ceremony of being led around in chains.

On the evening of Wednesday, after an interesting and impressive speech by Rev. J. A. Richards of Fort Scott, a candidate was in due form, before a large and appreciative audience initiated into the first degree of Freemasonry. Rev. P. A. Fields, who had himself been raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason, officiated as Worshipful Master.

After a closing speech by Bro. Kiggins, in his happiest strain, the convention adjourned to meet in Topeka at the call of the Executive Committee. J. Dodds, Sec'y.

Bro. Hinman's Iowa Work.

Colo, Story Co., Iowa, }
Jan. 31, 1877. }

Marshall is doubtless the banner county of Iowa, so far as our reform is concerned. Since my last I gave two lectures in the Friends' meeting house in Le Grand to full audiences and with the best of attention. The Friends here have a well sustained academy, and are more than ordinarially intelligent as a people. To C. D. Coppee, is mainly due the interest that has been awakened at this place.

From here I went to Stanford and spoke in the Friends' meeting house to a full house. The friends of truth have organized an Anti-masonic Christian Association of which Levi Marshall is president and Levi Gordon corresponding secretary, S. P. Shoemaker recording secretary and C. Bentley treasurer. They meet weekly and have enrolled about one hundred members. The Friends here have an academy under the direction of Elwood Tatum, a worthy son of Laurie Tatum of Cedar county, so well known as a missionary and prominent leader among the Society of Friends, and for his deep interest in our reform.

I was privileged to speak at this place on Sabbath forenoon, and in the evening to address a full house on the subject of the religion of secretism, at Bangor. I spoke here in the Friends' meeting house and found general sympathy, though a large number of the young people have been drawn into the Good Templar organization. From thence I visited Hartland and spoke again in a Friends' meeting house. The night was rainy and the mud and water very unpleasant, yet quite a number came together and our meeting was a success.

From thence I came to Colo, in Story county, and last night failed to reach my appointment, on account of the rain. I did not regret having a night's rest, as I had spoken eleven times in ten days. To-night I hope to speak in Nevada, and after this week to turn eastward.

Feb. 1st.—Together with our friend Rev. J. J. Hayden, of Colo, I came to Nevada, the county seat of Story county, and spoke last night to a fair audience in a hall. There was good order and excellent attention. The secret orders were well represented. Nothing has given me so much pain as that the pastor of the Presbyterian church, Rev. Isaiah Reed, who publishes a monthly paper advocating entire sanctification, should have not only refused to give notice of the meeting, but told me he regarded my coming here as an interference with his work, and that while he was not in favor of the secret orders he could see no reason why he should oppose them, for Masonry and Odd-fellowship had never opposed him in his work.

If the gospel which this brother preaches is not opposed to Masonry then of course he need expect no opposition in return. But such is not the gospel of Christ. "He was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil," and if our brother from his place on the walls of Zion sees the sword coming and gives no warning the blood will be required at his hands.

Yours, H. H. Hinman.

Are you out of employment? Work for the Cynosure.

Correspondence.

Seceder's Convention.

I am in favor of the convention of seceded Masons spoken of by Bro. Ronayne, and am in favor of a new church organization in this reform. I would suggest that the convention be held in connection with our next National convention next summer. Yours as ever,

J. Hankins.

The Gospel Fulfilled by the Mark, Secretism.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—At first I thought your paper, or the party it represented, got up for a purpose, but after a close examination of it compared with the Gospel, I find it is fulfilling a part of the Revelation which speaks of the "mark of the beast" and of his "image;" "the number of his name is as the sand of the sea." Secret societies seem to have nearly that number now, and to be fulfilling that prophecy very fast. "No man might buy or sell save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." This seems to meet the grangers' case squarely.

To all who are in the secret societies and to all who think of joining them, I would say, God put you here on earth pure from a knowledge of sin, and through him you will be taken away. Should you have the "mark" of the idolatrous beast upon you, where in eternity will you be found? Do you ask, What mark? Go to the outer door of the lodge room, there show or give your mark or password before you can enter. At the second door show your mark again and so on through. Like a man with his herd; he calls the drove all into the yard and watches every mark as they pass. If his mark is not there the animal is driven back, no matter how it looks. So with every secret society. The mark shall be "in the forehead;" yes, right in front and first to be noticed, the very first word. Nothing else will let you in.

To one and all I would say, before it is too late search the Scriptures closely and reckon well before you join these secret societies, which, in my view, can be nothing else but that great and wicked power fulfilling the Revelation. It will be to the interest of every person to notice these things very closely for fear of being drawn into those places of sin and iniquity where abide the unfruitful works of darkness.

S. Zumbrun.

Another Confession.

Fort Lupton, Cal.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I am informed that your paper is for the use of any one who may wish to stand up for Jesus. I wish to testify for Christ against the ungodly institution of Masonry. I was once a Mason of three degrees; was a Master Mason. I do not wish to be understood that I have mastered Masonry, for I think if I had, before this I would have been in some state's prison. Some of the watchmen calling themselves after the name of the apostles of Christ, who say they are called to preach the truth as it is in Christ, are also teaching that Masonry is good, and that a Christian can be a Mason and a good Christian. That is not my experience. When Jesus called me he said that Masonry was not the way, for "I am the way, the truth and the life, and no man cometh to the Father but by me." "For if the blind lead the blind will they not both fall into the ditch?" Then again, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" Now if I go and sit in a lodge of Masons who are infidels, deists, blasphemers of the holy name of Jesus, drunkards, liquor-sellers, gamblers and Jews, who deny the Saviour—I say if I sit and act with them, vote with them, am I not yoked with them. They say it is a good, a charitable order. I by my actions say the same, if I still continue with them after the Lord hath cleansed me from all sin.

Masonry has murder written on its very face. How? you may say. It requires you to take an oath that you agree to have your throat cut, heart cut out, etc., if you ever tell of its hellish nature. Some preachers say if you tell you will be perjured. What, a man perjure himself by telling the truth! I have seen some men trying to kill a rattlesnake, and they would begin at the tail. My plan was always to strike at the head. Masonry is a grand humbug. It is a fraud. It is the cradle of the devil to rock men to sleep in. It teaches charity. How? Why, if you are so mean you cannot treat any one else right, we will make you swear to treat us as you should. If I am forced to give to the needy is it an act of charity? No; charity is the unbounded love of God shed abroad in my heart for all and any in need. I never knew what charity meant until God for Christ's sake forgave my sins.

Again, Masonry is no longer a secret, for as far as I went, three degrees, it is exposed, and I have read the identical oaths that I took. Do you suppose that God will suffer Satan to bind us with a thong that cannot be broken? Do you suppose that God will hold me to those horrible, cut-throat oaths? If you do I want to tell you that he did not, but on the other hand forgave me forever when I renounced all sin; and it was a sin to take those oaths, for he said, "But I say unto you, swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool. But let your communications be yea, yea, nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." I did not have to be a Mason. I was not forced to take the oaths, hence it was sin; and the "wages of sin is death." No Christian can live in a lodge of Masons. Be careful, my brother, how you say that Masonry is all right. If you are a watchman on the walls, give no uncertain sound. Masonry is not all right, for it is of Satan; is he all right? Did Masonry send you to preach Christ? Was you baptized in the name of Masonry? Did Masonry save you? No; then be careful how you recommend it. Be careful I say, how you bring it into the church of Christ, for whosoever brings in these damnable traditions and heresies Paul says to note and avoid. "Is Christ divided?" No; then are ye of Christ when there are divisions among you? Woe unto the man who teaches any other words than of Christ. The Holy Ghost never says, tell professors of Christianity that Masonry is a good thing for a Christian, for he only speaks of Christ, not of Masonry Any order that threatens your life if you tell of it, is not of God. It is the work of Satan. Now I propose to be found on the side of the Lord, telling the truth in all things, for I am not called to tell of the pleasure of the world, but to tell of my Saviour, my Jesus.

Brethren, the coming of Christ is close at hand. Remember the parable of the ten virgins. Some were watching and waiting; others were off to the lodges or the theaters. "It is not all who say Lord, Lord, that shall enter into the kingdom of heaven." My brethren, flee from these cages of unclean birds. "Birds of a feather" will "flock together." Christians to themselves and sinners to themselves. Teach Christ and him alone.

GEORGE H. GREENSLITT.

A Brief Statement.

GENEVA, O., Jan. 26, 1877.

Editor Cynosure:

In your paper of January 18 1877, there is an article by H. W. Hampe, in which there is an account of a church trial which took place at New Lebanon, Pa. I presume the writer gave the account as he received it; but verbal reports of a transaction, which have been handed down during two or three years after it took place, are not always correct. If the case referred to be the one which I suppose it to be, I was council for the accused when it, by appeal, came before the quarterly meeting conference. I will state the material facts in the case, according to my best recollection.

The sister was charged with "immorality," in saying, "The preaching we have comes from the pit." I moved that the case be sent back for a new trial, for these reasons: 1st. Because the preacher in charge who selected the committee before whom she was tried, and presided at the trial, was materially interested in the result; that he, though not formally, yet really was the complainant. I think the charge was brought by the class-leader. 2d. Because the council which the sister had employed had failed to come, and she had been refused an adjournment. She had been held to trial without council or proper opportunity to prepare her defense. Her husband was not a member of the church. 3d. Because her class-leader who heard her language—for it was spoken in class-meeting—had failed to do his duty in reproving her for the alleged wrong; and these being the facts, the trial had originated in hatred, according to this Scripture: "Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart; thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and shalt not suffer sin upon him." Lev. 19: 17.

The council for the complainant, instead of replying to my arguments commenced to argue the main question. I called him to order and stated to the presiding elder that to argue the main question on a motion for a new trial was not admissible. He said, "Never mind, you shall have as good a chance." So the council proceeded with his argument, and the conference refused to grant a new trial. Then, of course, the consideration of the charge was in order.

Immoral conduct as legally defined in the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal church, is such a crime "as is expressly forbidden by the Word of God, sufficient to exclude a person from the kingdom of grace and glory." (See Discipline of 1872 p. 134.)

The council for the prosecution was urged to prove that the alleged crime of this sister was "expressly forbidden by the Word of God, and sufficient to exclude a person from the kingdom of grace and glory." He did not attempt to do this. Twice, however, when I was speaking, and I think presenting my last argument, he arose and coming between me and the conference commenced talking, and continued to talk until he saw fit to stop. He was not called to order nor interrupted. So the sister was expelled. The presiding elder, preacher in charge and council for the complainant, by common report, were Freemasons. The trial was on Saturday. On the next Sabbath the expelled sister was in love feast, and instead of appearing depressed in spirit by the scenes through which she had passed, shouted the praises of God.

H. KINSLEY.

Masonic Foolishness.

Freemasonry teaches that King Solomon, Hiram king of Tyre, and Hiram Abiff were the only Grand Master Masons in the world who knew the Master's word and that they three were sworn not to give it unless they were all together (a very sublime idea). It teaches also that three men, workmen on Solomon's Temple, viz., Jubela, Jubelo and Jubelum, wanted and demanded the Master's word of Hiram Abiff and murdered him because he would not give it till the Temple was finished, and that by his death the Master's word was forever lost! Now this is only a small specimen of the foolish falsehoods that are taught and practiced by Masons or Masonry.

I have studied Freemasonry both inside and outside of the lodge and conversed with Masons of all the various types, from a conscientious seceder down, and I have come to the conclusion that there is more foolishness, vanity, wickedness, meanness, selfishness and general worthlessness in it than there is in any other institution in all the world beside. How any man that has sense enough to distinguish between himself and a hopeless lunatic can tolerate such driveling nonsense for an instant is more than I can comprehend.

As Freemasons are very fond of lugging large Bibles along the streets when they parade, it would be a good idea for them to read the Bible occasionally to see if it says anything about vanity, foolishness, lying, hypocrisy, swearing, ill manners, etc., etc. Now, if the brotherhood desire to make improvements instead of changes in Masonry, as some pretend they have, I would advise them to take in two principles never before employed in Masonry, viz., honesty and common sense. But perhaps that might explode the order and blow Hiram Abiff beyond the hope of resurrection even by the strong grip of a lion's paw and the five points of fellowship or the magic word "Mah-hah-bone." Yours for more light,

L. CHITTENDEN.

The five points of Masonic fellowship are: foot to foot, knee to knee, breast to breast, hand to back, cheek to cheek, or mouth to ear.

Wm. Matthews, Ambrose, Pennsylvania, writes:

I have been thinking it would do good if we could raise a fund to send the Cynosure to all the preachers, like the New York Witness did and solicit them to work for it. We had a minister a few years ago who took the Cynosure, and during that time he gave the lodge some very hard shots and was able to do it, but he let the paper drop, and after that he seldom mentioned the subject. I feel as if it was a duty to support the cause."

Daniel S. McConihay, Carbondale, W. Virginia, writes:

P. Crandall, Mendon, Michigan, writes:

"This is one of the strongholds of the lodge. I showed one of Ronayne's Exposes to a Knight Templar, and after looking at it a short time he wanted to know what his object was. 'Why,' says I, 'to expose the fraud to the world.' Two men here have seen enough of Masonry in our courts to make them hate it. A number of incidents might be told, but I will not extend this too long. I hate the devil's hot-hed plant, and wonder how it can he so beloved and cultivated by the churches."

Geo. Cohb, Factoryville, Pennsylvania, writes:

"Business is dull and money is scarce, but I cannot well dispense with the Cynosure, for its contents are like the bread of life. It is food for the inner man. I have taken it for five years and upwards. The longer I take it the hetter I like it."

A. Holt, Carthage, New York, writes:

"I was conversing with a man a few days ago in relation to Moody's course, and related to him the stand he has taken against secret societies, Masonry and Odd-fellowship in particular; and his answer was, if Mr. Moody has come out against that order he has killed himself. I told him he had taken the right way to make himself popular and secure to himself a long, useful life, if the Masons do not assassinate him And this man I was talking with was not a Mason. How preposterously men outside the lodge will talk. I put in a straight ticket for Walker and Kirkpatrick, and was told that I had voted for Tilden. I told them I could not help it; I vote as I pray."

John Milner, Greenfield, Ohio, writes:

"I had a talk with one of the Masonic fraternity yesterday. He knew all about Masonry and said it was a good and religious institution, and their symbols were sacred and Christian, as much as the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. The Bible was full of symhols and the Bible was the guide for the Masons to go hy. I told him the Bible was no more to the Masons than the Koran or Joe Smith's hible, and he said that he knew hetter; that our Bihle was the only one that was or could be used for initiatory purposes. I handed him a pencil and paper and requested him to write that down and sign his name to it. This he failed to do, of course, and asked me if I would do that much for him. I told him anything I had said I would write and sign. He also failed to tell me what to write and sign, to the great astonishment of the hystanders."

J. A. Rouser, Bloomington, Illinois, writes:

"For several years past I have been talking and working in the interest of the Prohihition movement, hut have seen in the last year that this anti-secret movement fills the hill better, so have engaged in this for life with all my heart, trusting to the Lord of Hosts for the suppression of all the comhined powers of darkness."

Albert Honeywell, Harrisburg, Indiana, writes:

"Secret societies are very popular here, and the average American would rather he in a popular wrong than in an unpopular right. Therefore the few who have bravery enough to go against secret societies hecome targets for the secretists and their jacks to shoot at; and many milk and water Anti-masons will wink at them in order to keep all right with the popular rabble. This must all he changed or it will not amount to much, and I will suggest, as I have done hefore, that there he power enough used to take a Masonic fort, and then put all to the sword, and then erect an Anti-mssonic fort in the place, and then and not until then will Anti-masonry he popular. And in order to accomplish this it will be necessary to use lectures, books, tracts, organize lodges to work publicly, and upon every occasion give the secret signs. This would make them ashamed of themselves and they would disband."

Matthew Drennen, New Wilmington, Pennsylvania, writes:

"I have been taking the Cynosure ever since it was first puhlished. The longer I read it the hetter I like it. Please send me another of Judge Whitney's tracts. I consider it one of the most convincing tracts I ever read on that subject."

C. Hart, Southington, Connecticut, writes:

"I have lahored the best part of my life to destroy slavery and intemperance, and had I the strength and the means I would gladly enlist in the cause you are so nobly fighting for. My prayer to God is that your efforts may he hlest and that the time may speedily come when our land and all the world may he delivered from the baneful influences of Christless secret societies."

R. D. Nichols, Williamstown, Vermont, writes:

"Z. Smith, of Montpelier, is dead, having filled up his days, as I conclude, with much useful activity and well directed energy. He was a contributor to the A. M. Association for years, if not for life."

J. T. Cooper, Allegheny, Pennsylvania, sends his renewal and writes:

"I scarcely need a paper to deepen my convictions of the unscriptural character and evil tendencies of all secret societies, and have far more papers and periodicals than I am ahle to read; yet I feel that I should be in this way contrihuting to the support of the cause which this paper represents. I think I contrihuted twenty-five dollars toward it when it was in its infancy."

Our first prayer should he that it may he known that the Lord is God. We should pray, "Thy kingdom come and thy will be done," hefore we ask aught for ourselves. He has invited us to ask of him and he will give us the heathen for an inheritance. Ps. 2: 8; 72: 8; 122: 6; 22: 27; Is. 62: 1, 6, 7; Dan. 7: 13, 14; Matt. 6: 10, 33.

We should try to do everything according to the Word of God—not seeking to accomplish great things, either through our own strength or for our own honor. The Christian Cynosure

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEB. 8, 1877.

The Publishing House Fund and What is being done with it.

The friends of the National Christian Association and especially those who have contributed to its funds will be interested and have a right to know what has been received and how their contributions have been used. I give herewith a brief summary of receipts for the Publishing House fund in cash and notes previous to January 1, 1877. These accounts have not been audited and are therefore unofficial but believed to be correct.

The foregoing summary shows that there have been received in notes unpaid Jan. 1, 1877, $9485. These notes are deposited in the vault of the State Savings Institution in this city, and are most of them drawing interest from 6 to 10 per cent.

The $3,655.38 paid in has been invested in loans as follows.

To C. R. Hagerty at 9 per cent. secured on Chicago real dstate $3,110.00.

To J. P. Stoddard as per vote of Directors N. C. A., Feb. 8, 1875, and secured by the indebtedness of the Association to J. P. Stoddard for services, $545.00

Leaving a balance in the Treasury of 38 cents.

The amount proposed for a Publishing House fund and the basis upon which contributions have been solicited is $50,000. Of this sum Mr. Carpenter pledges two-fifths in a building and lot at 221 W. Madison street, Chicago, estimated to be worth $20,000, as his donation; provided the remaining $30,000 is secured to the cause before the first day of April, 1878.

Rev. Wm. Leuty of Ligonier, Indiana, has donated real estate estimated at $10,000.

Other donations in notes and cash are as above, $13,140.38.

Making a total of $43,140.38.

Leaving still to be secured the farther sum of $6,859.62.

The unpaid notes were, it is believed, given without exception, in good faith and received with careful consideration on the part of those who acted on behalf of the N. C. A. who have in a number of instances refused notes from parties whose intentions were good but whose ability to pay was doubtful. But with all the precaution possible it is but just to suppose that among so many notes there will be some failures, and there should be a sufficient margin obtained to make up any deficit occurring from contingencies of this kind. It is a matter which cannot be accurately estimated in advance, but which all will see is likely to occur.

The Treasurer has executed a bond for the faithful performance of the duties of his office in the sum of $10,000, in accordance with by-law 10 of the N. C. A., which bond is signed by Philo Carpenter, J. Blanchard and A. H. Hiatt, and deposited in the safe of E. A. Cook & Co.

The above summary covers the Publishing House fund, and will I trust be readily understood by any one desiring the facts in this important part of our work.

It is proper and to be expected that in connection with the permanent funds of the Association there should also appear at least a synopsis of receipts from other sources along with a statement of the uses to which those funds have been applied, and I submit below a statement of funds which according to the by-laws of the Association and by action of its Board of Directors may be applied to the uses and purposes of the Christian Association's work, from June 1, 1876 to Jan. 1, 1877.

Balance in the Treasury Jan. 1, 1877, $7.78.

The amount of interest received on notes to the Association is small owing to the fact that the bulk of those notes were given after Jan. 1, 1876, and consequently no interest was due until after 1877. The closeness of the times has greatly crippled the work of general collections and has been a constant admonition to use the utmost care and prudence in expending funds or assuming obligations. The Board of Directors would have gladly put a score or more of able lecturers into the field and opened a complete stock of Anti-masonic and other Christian literature in the building of which they have obtained the occupancy, but this would cost more money than is placed at their command. Some of the old established business firms in this and Eastern cities with all their prestige are forced into bankruptcy, while others are cutting down their forces and struggling along under the pressure. Commercial men, merchants and agriculturalists are reducing their expenses and ventures to the minimum to avoid embarrassment and failure.

Another and more specific reason for proceeding with the utmost caution is the fact that the National Christian Asstciation now has only the temporary occupancy of this building, and until the fee simple is vested in that body it would hardly be warranted in investing beyond its present resources. The third floor of this building has been fitted up for a hall, and is now occupied for a daily noon prayer meeting with Gospel Sabbath services, into which the poor are gathered to hear the Word of God. It is ready for reform meetings of a distinctive character whenever it is needed for that purpose. A room on the second floor has been opened for the sale of books and the free distribution of tracts by the N. C. A., also for a reading room. Over this work our brother Thomas Hodge presides with all the genial ways that made him so popular and at the same time so successful in his work at the Centennial Exposition. Friends visiting this city who may have met this brother in Philadelphia, and many others, will be pleased to meet him at his new quarters and may feel assured of a hearty welcome. This is as far as it has been deemed prudent to proceed in the direction of a permanent occupancy of the building at present, and I think that the course will commend itself to every judicious person. This is all that the Association's funds will bear, and to go beyond this would be hazardous, if not fatal to the financial interests of our work.

I know the anxiety of friends that this work should be pressed forward and should not think it a thing incredible if some, not understanding the difficuties in the way, feel that more ought to be done; but I am persuaded that you would much prefer a slow and permanent growth to embarrassment and ultimate suspension.

Did each friend of our work realize the importance of completing this fund at an early day, I believe it would be done before the close of another month. It is said, "the times are hard," and no one can doubt it, but is there not on this very account all the more reason for extra effort and sacrifice, if need be, to aid in exposing and suppressing a system of secretism which is nothing less than a conspiracy against the equal rights of American citizens, and which has thrust our nation upon the very verge of social, civil and financial ruin. Let us not repeat the mistake of our Masonic predecessors of 1826 in not establishing a publishing house so as to send their warnings and testimonies against the lodge down to their successors, but let us the rather take warning by their omission and establish a fountain from which shall emanate light and warning long after we shall cease to participate in the activities of this life.

J. P. Stoddard.

The Masonic Color Line.

In his remarks on the Grand Lodge of Minnesota friend Woodward makes a sharper distinction between the two great political parties on the lodge question than some of our readers may be willing to grant, yet in the Masonic action on the color question there seems to be new and strong evidence of sympathy with that political party which has been the bulwark of slavery, and it is believed would inaugurate a return of the dark days of our Republic.

One of the reports referred to in his article, that of Mr. Goodrich, makes a remarkable argument which will be reviewed at length at some more favorable time than the present. A simple statement of it will be sufficient for the present purpose of calling attention to the political affinities fostered by Freemasonry, and the alliances it will be inclined to make in the secret methods peculiar to itself.

Mr. Goodrich goes back to 1717, when Freemasonry originated in England, and argues from the state of society, which included several castes in that day, and from the original constitution of the lodge which permitted only "free men," or those exercising the right of citizenship at that day to become members of the lodge. This he holds to be a "landmark" of Freemasonry. It is unchangeable, and must forever bar the "freed man" from the fraternity. The latter might rejoice if this decision was made practical; but the lodge, if unwilling to bring the man of colored skin across its threshold will yet entrap him if possible in some one of its many pitfalls dug for those it wants to use but not associate with.

Can any of our readers canvass Washington county, N. Y., for new subscriptions?

—Past Master Ronayne has gone for a short visit to Canada where he speaks at Plattsville this week. He is making arrangements for meetings in Monroe and Gibson counties, Indiana, southwest of Indianapolis. Friends in that section may induce him to make a longer stay and work in several more points than are now being arranged for if they attend to the matter soon, and communicate with Rev. W. P. McNary, President of the State Association, at Bloomington, Monroe county, Ind.

—Last week the statements o two men who had left the lodge were printed. Another is given in the present number. These were so far as we know unsolicited, and are a remarkable proof of the power of the truth now working in the hearts of men to release them from the bondage of the lodge. There have been previously published 179 names of living sceders. Let every reader use such means as God gives to add to this list, especially work to increase it directly from the ranks of secretism. The Kansas Association has enlisted one such in the good work. See the report of the North Cedar meeting.

—The General Agent and Secretary is again in the field, having started eastward on Saturday last, stopping in Indiana. His statement of the Publishing House fund will be read with interest by all.

—A good letter from Dr. Cook, telling of toils and triumphs in Indiana, has to wait for another paper. Other correspondents who have written us good letters are desired to exercise patience and in due time they shall be heard.

—The report of the Publishing House fund lacks an item which the departure of Bro. Stoddard to Indiana did not give time to complete, that is, a table showing by States the amount contributed up to Jan. 1st in cash and notes for the fund. This will be prepared and published at some future time.

—Wendell Phillips, who has been called the American Demosthenes lectured in this city last Thursday on "The Holy Alliance—Rum and the Revolver," under which title he depicted the danger to our institutions from the union of Northern and Southern elements in the Democratic party. Mr. Phillips' opinion on secret societies given to Prof. Blanchard in 1874 is worth reprinting. He wrote:

January 22, 1874.

DEAR SIR:—I wish you success most heartily in your effort to rouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a Republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them.

Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organization, such should not be allowed to exist.

Yours Respectfully,

WENDELL PHILLIPS.

MR. C. A. BLANCHARD.

—The United Presbyterian of Pittsburgh gave the following careful estimate of the expositions in that city conducted by Mr. Ronayne not long since: "The lecturer impressed every one present, as a sincere, earnest, truthful man—one who knew of what he was talking and was not afraid to tell it. All who were present were more thoroughly disgusted with the order than ever before. The half concerning the childishness of its ceremonies, the absurdity and falseness of its pretentions, and the impiety and even blasphemy of its oaths, had not been told them. That otherwise excellent men will submit to such humiliating, senseless mummeries as are found in this strange system is one of the marvelous things. Let every Christiatn 'come out from among them.'"

OBITUARY.

SAMUEL HALE.—A brief note from Dr. J. A. Bingham brings us the sad news of the death of that warm friend of the reform, Samuel Hale, at his home in Mallet Creek, Medina county, Ohio, at 6 o'clock on the morning of Jan. 31st. The note further states that the funeral services were to be held on Friday, the 2nd inst., and that Rev. O. W. White of Weymouth would preach the funeral sermon. Like his elder half-brother, Oren Cravath of Minnesota, Bro. Hale was an earnest reformer, and entered with a whole heart into the measures taken by the abolitionists for the redemption of the slave; and later, few were more laborious in northern Ohio in the present anti-lodge reform. But his work is done and he rests from the Christian warfare. Who will take his place in the ranks?

Will you send in a club of ten this month? A club of five?

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. Woodruff Post, our excellent and faithful co-worker in reform in Rochester, N. Y., was again at his last conference dropped out by his presiding elders and left without a regular pastorate.

—There is a good opening for a reform church at Albion, Marshall county, Iowa. Several of the members of the M. E. church there have withdrawn their fellowship from that body on account of a Masonic preacher, and want a true minister of Christ to come amongst them. Who will supply the demand?—Iowa Freeman.

—A cottage prayer-meeting was opened on Wednesday evening of last week at the residence of Bro. E. Ronayne, No. 104 Bremer street, in this city, in which Secretary Stoddard, Captain Henry Bundy and others took part. The meeting was well attended and was noticable for deep feeling.

—Mr. Hammond closed his meetings in Newburyport week before last. Upwards of 500 have professed conversion. The ministers have earnestly co-operated. Newburyport has never seen such an awakening since the days of Whitefield. Mr. Hammond expects as his next field of evangelistic labor to go to Terra Haute, Indiana.

—The temperance revival in Michigan under the leadership of Dr. Reynolds, is making great progress. Reform clubs are being instituted in a large number of towns; Adrian, Hudson, Hillsdale, Manchester, Battle Creek, Hastings, Bay City, etc., etc. In Grand Rapids the club numbers 150, with a reading room. In Kalamazoo, there are 300 reformed men, and "saloon keepers very serious." In Jackson the two clubs, one for railroad men only, aggregate 660 men who have left off drinking, besides many "associate members," who likewise wear the "red ribbon." The reformed men in Jackson welcome the "Ladies' Temperance Union" to their club-room for the weekly prayer meeting, while themselves sustain another prayer meeting, and conduct a Sunday evening service in one of the largest halls in the city.

The Home Circle.

A Hundred Years from Now.

The surging sea of human life forever onward rolls,
And bears to the eternal shore its daily freight of souls:
Though bravely sails our bark to-day, pale death sits on the prow,
And few shall know we ever lived, a hundred years from now.

O, mighty human brotherhood! why fiercely war and strive,
While God's great world has ample space for everything alive?
Broad fields, uncultured and unclaimed, are waiting for the plow
Of progress that shall make them bloom, a hundred years from now.

Why should we try so earnestly, in life's short, narrow span,
On golden stairs to climb so high above our brother man?
Why blindly at an earthly shrine in slavish homage bow?
Our gold will rust, ourselves be dust, a hundred years from now!

Why prize so much the world's applause? Why dread so much its blame?
A fleeting echo is its voice of censure or of fame;
The praise that thrills the heart, the scorn that dyes with shame the brow,
Will be as long-forgotten dreams, a hundred years from now.

Grand, lofty souls, that live and toil, that freedom, right and truth
Alone may rule the universe, for you is endless youth;
When 'mid the blest, with God you rest, the grateful lands will bow
Above your clay in reverent love, a hundred years from now.

Earth's empires rise and fall, O, Time! like breakers on thy shore;
They rush upon thy rocks of doom, go down, and are no more;
The starry wilderness of worlds that gem night's radiant brow,
Will light the skies for other eyes, a hundred years from now.

Our Father to whose sleepless eyes the past and future stand
An open page, like babes we cling to Thy protecting hand;
Change, sorrow, death, are naught to us, if we may safely bow
Beneath the shadow of Thy throne a hundred years from now.

The Value of Prayer.

BY M. A. RITCHEY.

Be careful for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. Phil. 4:6.

When our Heavenly Father has given us the blessed privilege to call upon him in the time of trouble and he will deliver us, why is it that so many of us his children are burdened with little cares and trials in our daily experience, besides our greater troubles? Why do we think we have it all to bear, and that there is no deliverance? forgetting that we have a "great High Priest" who is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities" and can give us help in every time of trouble, until at length for relief and comfort we turn to our Bible and are reminded of the promise to "cast all our care upon him for he careth for us." Is it not because we do not believe that our great Burden-bearer is interested in and concerned about all our temporal affairs and everything that gives us trouble? If we believe more steadfastly in God's care over us and in all that concerns and troubles us, we would learn more of the value of taking every care, by prayer, to our Heavenly Father in the name of Jesus and receive help and deliverance. Faith inspires prayer and prayer brings courage to the heart, therefore if we believed more steadfastly in God's faithful promises we would pray more, and would be kept in perfect peace because our minds would be "stayed on Him." Our Father says to each troubled one, "Call upon me in the day of trouble and I will deliver you and thou shalt glorify me. He will turn our earnest prayers (though presented with sighs and tears) into joyful praise. In all trouble prayer is our great duty and privilege and the best means of relief. Prayer is not only request made to God, but converse had with him. The smile of God in prayer can soon sweeten our bitter cup, and make us forget all our sorrow.

The writer's life has been one of affliction for seven years, and I have learned the value and comfort of prayer in distress of mind and bodily affliction; and receive comfort and deliverance in trouble. God delays often, but never fails to answer genuine prayer in his own good time, and in his own way he bestows the blessing. No true prayer is ever lost though we may have forgotten it. Whoever thou art, never give up prayer, a blessing will indeed come at last; the honor of Christ himself stands engaged to perform this: "Whatsoever ye ask in my name I will do it." John 14: 13, 14. Secret, earnest prayer is the approved and never-failing method of obtaining relief and comfort in seasons of the deepest distress. What more need be said of prayer than that it brings God into the heart and keeps sin out.

When torn in the bosom
By sorrow and care,
Be it ever so simple,
There is nothing like prayer.

How to Promote Harmony in the Church.

1. Remember that we are all subject to failings and infirmities of one kind or another. 2. Bear with, and not magnify each others' infirmities. Gal. vi. 12. Pray for one another in the social meetings, and particularly in private, James v. 16. 4. Always turn a deaf ear to slanderous reports, and receive no charge against auy person until well founded. 5. If a member be in fault, tell him of it privately, before it is mentioned to others. 6. Watch against a shyness of each other, and put the best construction on any action that has the appearance of opposition or resentment. 7. Observe the rule of Solomon, which is, "leave off contention before it be meddled with," Proverbs xvii. 14. 8. If a member has offended, consider how glorious, how God-like it is to forgive, and how unlike a Christian it is to seek revenge. Eph. iv. 2. 9. Remember that it is a grand artifice of the devil to promote distance and animosity among members of churches, and we should therefore watch against everything that furthers this end. 10. Consider how much more good we can do in the world at large, and in the church in particular, when we are all united in love than we can do when acting alone and indulging a contrary spirit. 11. Consider the express injunction of Scripture, and the beautiful example of Christ, and love the Lord our God with all our hearts, and our neighbor as ourselves.—Selected.

The Power of the Bible.

The Bible does not need defence, so much as it needs proclamation. It defends itself wherever it is known. Deep in every soul there dwells forever a witness to the truth, whose clear eye and steady voice will see and respond to it wherever it is known. We do not need to implore men to believe the truth. We only need that they shall apprehend it, and then we may defy them to deny it. And thus the Bible, as eternal truth, needs no other argument for its support than itself clearly preached.

There are defenders of the truth who think it otherwise. They treat the Bible as a weakly infant, which must be bolstered up and carefully sustained, lest it fall. And so they bring together their learning and philosophy, their human reasoning and research, which they use as proof to keep the Bible up, trembling all the while lest one of these should fail, and the truth, unsupported, sink to its hurt. But the Bible disdains all these appliances. It is no weakly infant. It has more than a giant's strength, and can not only stand unaided, but can walk forth alone conquering and to conquer. - Prof. Seelye.

Shall Christians Dance?

Why not Christians, if anybody? We would not advise a sinner to dance. A sinner is an enemy to God; and shall he dance? A sinner must repent or perish; and shall he dance? A sinner is on the way to hell, and may be there in an hour: shall he dance? There is something supremely shocking in the idea of a dancing sinner. What fearful declarations are those of Job! "They send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance. They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave." Job 21: 11–13.

But a Christian is a redeemed sinner. "He is bought with a price." "He is washed, he is sanctified, he is justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." "He is a new creature; old things are passed away; Behold, all things are become new." The Christian is the image of Christ, and is to show to the world that he has been with Jesus, and has learned of him. The Christian is "crucified to the world," and is in a little while to be in heaven, beholding and enjoying, and forever to enjoy the glory of God. Let him sing for joy, and dance too before the Lord, as David did, if such an exercise be suited to his present condition, and adapted to promote the glory of God and the salvation of men For this is the apostolic exhortation: "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

Shall Christians dance? Then they must have a time to dance. At what point of time shall it be? just before, or just after they sit down at the table of the Lord? Is it the kind of preparation which fits them for that sce e which Calvary beheld? Will the dance help them to "examine themselves?" Will it enable them to deny themselves as they should, after they have been anew to see Christ crucified? Can they, at the dance, think intensely upon the scenes in the garden; in the palace of the high-priest; in the hall of Pilate; on the way to Calvary; at the nailing of the victim; and at the innocent sufferer's cry of agony. "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" This cry, under almighty wrath crushing Him to death for our sins, makes the ears of Christians tingle. How can they forget it so as to find a time to dance?

Shall Christians dance? Then they must have leisure to dance. "Wist ye not," said Jesus, "that I must be about my Father's business?" He began early, and continued to the end to be about his Father's business: so that in the end he could say to his Father, "I have glorified thee upon the earth: I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." Then he was ready to depart, and with his last breath cried, "It is finished." Duty and suffering were completed. Are Christians, the followers of such a Saviour, at leisure so that their work is done long before their sun is set? Do they understand God's word so well that they need study it no more? Are all their duties to God in the closet, in the family, and in his house, diligently and faithfully performed? Do they perform all that is needful for the young, for the aged, for the church, for the world, and then find leisure to unite with gay companions in moving to the sound of the viol, amid the mazes of pleasurable dissipation? Is the soul duly cared for? And from the dance can they return home to commune with God; to pray for all saints and the ministers of Christ, with all prayer and without ceasing? Can they "visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keep themselves unspotted from the world?"

Shall Christians dance? Then they must have money to maintain the dance. They are God's stewards, and he claims all they have, as well as all they are. The gold—"it is mine." The silver—"it is mine." Does he require Christians, as his stewards, to take his silver and his gold, and use them to decorate their persons; to furnish room and equipage and music and refreshments for the dance? His poor must have food and raiment and shelter out of his silver and gold. The institutions of religion must be sustained; the Word of God must be put into every family of man; the ministry must be furnished for every creature: and all this must come out of his treasures. And when millions are needed more than are obtained —when the cry is wafted to Christian ears on every breeze, "Come over and help us"—where is the money to be found to maintain the dance?

Shall Christians dance? Then they must be imitated by others. Allowing that Christians have time, leisure, and money for the dance, and that it may be proper for them to dance, still a question remains—Is it expedient? If it be lawful in the sight of God, does it tend to edification? Is it attended with no danger to others? Will the gay and the thoughtless be likely to derive benefit from such examples of Christians? Did the apostle Paul say, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend?" Should not we also look to the welfare of others? If it be not perilous to ourselves, yet if it be to others, charity requires us to abstain. If we would not advise sinners to dance, we certainly should not set the example. If but one member of a church be found in a ballroom, who will not know it? Will not every eye be fixed on that individual? Will not some be ready to say in heart, Did not I see thee at the Lord's table? Will it not be reported the next day? And will not the echo fly among the circles of the lovers of pleasure? Will not the thoughtless urge this example, as a plea for the indulgence which conscience forbids? And will not many be emboldened, not only near by, but far off, to do what no sinner should venture to do, as it must be at the peril of his soul? And will not those gay companions of yours despise you for your vain indulgence?—Am. Tract Society.

Children's Corner

One of Our Little Friends Called Home.

Perhaps the children who read the Cynosure would like to hear some account of Horace P., a dear little boy only three years of age, whom the Good Shepherd has recently taken from the arms of loving parents and borne away to the heavenly fold.

When Horace was born, his brother Moses, a few years older, thought he was very nice, and often went and pulled open the blanket that covered him, and examined his curious hands and feet, and looked into his bright eyes and with pride showed him to a young friend who lived near by. Now it happened that this friend had quite a pretty small white pig—I think it must have been a white Chester—that Moses thought a wonderful animal and wanted to trade for. He had never before been able to offer a sufficient compensation, but now his friend agreed to let him have the pig in exchange for the baby, and so a bargain was struck at once. But when they began to bundle up the baby for him to take home, poor little Moses burst into a flood of tears, for he loved his baby brother after all better than the pig, and could not consent to part with him; and so little Horace stayed with him, and grew more attractive and interesting all the time. After awhile he learned to walk, and then to talk, and say many amusing things, which with his bright face, and lively, pleasant ways endeared him to every one. Soon he could go to church and Sunday school, and whatever his older brother and sister learned he would try and learn also. Often his pleasant voice was heard ringing about the house with snatches of hymns and tunes he had caught from others; "Only an Armor-bearer," and "Pull for the Shore," being favorites. His little prayer at night ended with "And this I ask for Jesus' sake." "Who is Jesus?" and "Where is Jesus?" he would frequently ask, on closing his prayer. His mother could only imperfectly explain this to him, but Jesus came and took him to his beautiful home in heaven, and now he knows who Jesus is and where he is, and I think he loves Jesus so much, and is so happy with him and the many dear children gathered there, that he would not care to come back to earth again. He often would spend a day or two when here, away from home, with friends he loved, without getting nomesick, and I think the time will seem very short, it will pass so pleasantly, till he welcomes his dear earthly friends in heaven.

His disease was diphtheria, which he bore with great patience. The house seemed lonely and still after he was gone, and his parents and brother and sister were sad, for they could not help missing him though they know he was happy. Even poor dog Rover looked disconsolate, and wandered from room to room upstairs and down, as if in pursuit of his little master, whose caresses he missed and with whom he had enjoyed so many frolics. The young friends with whom he played meet together and talk about him. Little Georgy, two and a half years old, says, "Horace gone to heaven but he'll come back some day." Moses who knows he will not come back, says he would like to go to heaven in the daytime and play with Horace if he might come back home nights. Tears come to the mother's eyes as she listens to this prattle, for well she knows that heaven's entrance can only be reached through the portals of the grave.

And now, dear children, may the story of the sudden and early death of little Horace lead you to be also ready, that when Jesus comes, you may be prepared to go and dwell with him forever.

"In that beautiful home He has gone to prepare,
For all who are washed and forgiven;
And many dear children are gathering there,
For of such is the kingdom of heaven."

A Remarkable Incident.

A remarkable incident is that of a Scottish youth who learned with a pious mother to sing the old psalms that were then as household words to them in the kirk and by the fireside. When he grew up he wandered away from his native country, was taken captive by the Turks, and made a slave in one of the Barbary States. But he never forgot the songs of Zion, although he sung them in a strange land and to heathen ears. One night he was solacing himself in this manner, when the attention of some sailors on board of an English man of war was directed to the familiar tune "Old Hundred," as it came floating over the moonlit waves. At once they surmised the truth, that one of their countrymen was languishing away his life as a captive. Quickly arming themselves, they manned a boat, and lost no time in effecting his release. What a joy to him after eighteen long years passed in slavery! Should you not think that he would always love the glorious tune of "Old Hundred?" Children, never let your sweet young voices be employed in using profane or unseemly words. It is a quaint saying but it is true, "Furnish the mind with good things and there will be no room for evil." They will be like nails fastened in a sure place. You know when a nail is driven in tightly you cannot wedge anything else alongside of it. But you may have a tuneful voice and love to sing, and yet remain unaffected by the beautiful words. Oh, how sad if they who sing about Jesus on earth shall not be one of the number who join in the "new song" before the throne of God and the Lamb!—Child's Words.

The Length of Days.

At London and Bremen, the longest day has sixteen hours.

At Stockholm, in Sweden, the longest day has eighteen and a half hours.

At Hamburg, Germany, and Dantzic, Prussia, the longest day has seventeen hours, and the shortest seven hours.

At St. Petersburg, in Russia, and Tobolsk, Siberia, the longest day has nineteen hours, and the shortest five hours.

At Tornea, in Finland, the longest day has twenty-one and a half hours, and the shortest two and a half hours.

At Wardnuys, in Norway, the day lasts from May the 21st, to July 2d, without interruption; and at Spitzbergen, the longest day is three and a half months.

Home and Farm.

Cook-books.—Nearly all the cook-books we have seen, excepting those issued by hygienic reformers, are, in the first place, filled with recipes too expensive for people of middling means to follow. But the chief defect in the recipes is, that no man can be healthy and eat the food prepared according to their rules. There is too much of the "one cup of butter, two of sugar, three of flour, and four eggs," seasoned with cloves, cinnamon, nutmeg, etc. Moreover, cook-book makers seem to think they must minister to the production of the material for grand banquets, and cater to the rich, and to fashionable life. A poor man can better afford to buy the right kind of cook-book than anybody else. Information which will tell him how his dollar can be made to minister to the comfort of the family in the largest degree should find the widest sale and the most implicit confidence. We have often wondered why the millionaire, who has everything that is best, should be so unwise as to eat and drink that which is so detrimental to health and happiness, simply because it is costly and considered stylish. Besides, these seasonings and artificial preparations create a morbid appetite, producing craving habits, which yearn for gratification in the taking of morphine or the drinking of alcoholic liquors. We know some wealthy families who have clear heads, and are well informed in refence to diet and regimen. They eat the food which is best for them. They live simply, but deliciously; they have health and longevity, and if life is worth anything, they get its benefits.

It may not be improper to refer to the people called Quakers. Their habits are plain, but they live well. As a people, they are rich; there are no paupers among them. If one will look into an assembly of these people, he will be delighted to see how clean and wholesome the old men and women look, and how clear are the complexions of the young. We never saw a Quaker who looked gross and coarse and greasy in the face; and if we might with propriety speak of it, we have never been in near proximity to one who smelled of rancid lard and antiquated linen. They live temperately, and their very persons are clean internally and externally. They are serene and long-lived, owing, we judge, quite as much to their correct dietary habits as to their other moral virtues.—Ex.

The life of a farmer—Some kindly suggestions.—The life of a farmer can be made easier, pleasanter and healthier, and his home more attractive, beautiful and enjoyable, by a careful attention to certain rules too often forgotton.

First. Too much work is frequently undertaken, or more land attempted to be cultivated than the means at his command will fairly allow. Less land, better tillage, and fewer mortgages would do some of our counties an immense amount of good, and not only keep the minds of embarrassed owners easy, but ultimately bring them, by concentration of means and power, an increase of prosperity. The sentiment underlying the desire to preserve intact "the paternal acres," is one which every right-thinking mind will respect. But there is a point at which sturdy adherence to it tends to work serious injury to the owner of property which has become an incumbrance. This is especially the case when the parental acres are sadly weighed with paternal debts.

Second. The work on the farm should be better systematized than it is usually. It is important that the work should be so arranged that there shall be time allowed for doing everything that may be required to be done without undue strain, and allowing for contingencies, so that there shall be a fair margin to count upon in any event. When once such regulations are laid down, they should be rigidly adhered to, for any departure from them, unless under exceptional circumstances, would be likely to prove embarrassing. More time is frequently lost at the last moment in thinking what to do and how to do it, or where the means to do it shall be found, than in performing the work when once determined on and begun with method and conducted with precision. Think, then, beforehand, map out the things to be done, and it will be a matter of surprise, after a while, to find how easily the day's routine runs in its groove. Of course perfect regularity, under all conditions of time, place and weather is not to be expected, for the best plans sometimes fail just as the best regulated railway train may break a wheel, or be thrown off the track by a damaged rail.

Third. Pay more attention to the health of the body. Care in changing from thin to thicker garments, or the reverse, as the case may be, in accordance to the variations of the weather, will often prevent severe attacks of sickness. The farmer is constantly exposed to sudden alterations of cold and heat, and is further liable to suffer from checked perspiration, when severe labor demands a short period of rest. It is such things as these combined with hard work, that break down, after a while, the strongest constitution.

Fourth. Make the home life cheerful and bright, as well as comfortable, see that the house is made pleasant by neat adornments, and that it has also pleasant surroundings, books, papers, pictures, music. Some of these at least, if not all, are within the reach of all those whose minds crave them and whose eyes appreciate them. When homes are bleak, bare, and cheerless, life is robbed of some of its chiefest blessings. The outward beauty of a country dwelling is a matter of no less consequence. Its adornment, though simple and inexpensive, may yet be made to add a new charm to the inner comforts. Flowers over the porches, and shrubs and flowers on the lawn, are nature's arts, and though cheap, are in their natural beauty more attractive than any other thing that the costliest art can supply.

The Masonic Minister's Lament.

BY J. L. BARLOW.

[Recited before the "Michigan State Christian Association Opposed to Secret Societies," in Hastings, Barry Co., Dec. 7, 1876]

Yes; they told me that 'twould better make me—
A better man, and better minister!
The Bible I would better understand;
That more successful I should be with men
Unreached by other heralds of the Cross!
And that it would preferment give me,
Position higher, larger salary,
And wider scope for untaxed energies.
And thus, with cunning hand, the chords of pride
Were swept; while I, befooled and led astray,
Did ambition holy name the feeling
Which so swayed me, as I gave audience
Unto the tales they told me. I saw men,
Wiser, I thought, and better than myself;
Who in public—without shamefacedness,
Yea, with pride—emblems of the Cross did wear;
And these all with evidence did ply me—
Or so I thought it—of the great goodness
Of the order they so much did love,
And of which they fain would make me member,
Without the fee they take from other men.

How they flattered me! At my full value
I was not prized; nor was I like to be
By my present and my low surroundings.
The minds to which I now administered
My talents never could appreciate;
That from this level I could ne'er arise
And reach the place that I was born to fill,
Until association I should form
With the first and foremost in the land,
Who filling now the pulpit, bench and bar,
Are by their holy obligations bound
To lift a worthy brother to the niche
In Fame's proud temple to him belonging.

All this, and more, as I did seem inclined
To listen, gave they to my itching ears;
Nor did they, in so many words, ask me
To join their great fraternity. To me,
Howe'er, what they so cunningly did ply
Me with, did seem an invitation, and
It fired my spirit with a mad desire
To scale the mounts, in vision they did cause
To pass before me.

I allowed myself
At length to be persuaded and was named
As a candidate. I forgot my church,
Which loved me truly, for my own and for
My Master's sake, and who had fed upon
My ministrations, and had grown thereon
Both in numbers and in Christian graces,
Till a great joy their loving, trusting hearts
Had filled, and who had ne'er a thought that I
Their pastor, whom unfledged and raw they'd ta'en
And nursed by tender sympathies—their prayers
And means—until to strength my wings had grown,
Would e'er look down on them and count them clogs
And hindrances to onward, upward flight;
And then under the glamour o'er me cast,
My darling wife, that dear other and my
Better self, who with a soul pure and sweet
As ever tenanted an angel's breast,
Chaste love and Christian zeal intelligent,
Had helped to build me up to the manhood
I had reached—her I forgot; all the rights
She had in my person, to confidence
Most perfect, this I forgot, and like bird
By serpent charmed I for a brief moment
Fluttered o'er this hy-way to hell, and then Fell in!

O God, could I go back into
My yesterdays! to my glad freedom back,
Ere my sad fall, back to that fearful night
When first I reached the purlieus of a lodge,
Where I, reluctant and ashamed, was made
To doff my manhood with my vestments all,
Or nearly all; because so ancient was Freemasonry, in initiation
I must represent the olden peoples
Frequenting lodges in the primal days,
Clad in scant array.

Solemnly they mouthed
This windy talk—downright insult to a Child's intelligence—and a full-grown man
I erst had thought myself! I swallowed it.
Nay, not that so much my assent did win;
This ancient talk might or might not be true.
Alone this was not much to me: but much
It seemed to be that our great Washington
A craftsman should have been; and also that
"The greatest and the best of men in all Ages have been encouragers, also Promoters of the art; and have never Derogatory deemed it unto their Dignity themselves to level with the Fraternity."

Well I knew that other
Presidents, grave senators and judges,
With much famed doctors of divinity,
And Christian teachers too of lesser note,
Were Freemasons, had borne testimony
In favor of the order. They could see
No evil in't; but on the other hand
Much good. Indeed they did not hesitate
To say, "The Craft is more benevolent
Than is the church of Christ." This should have made
Me pause, though by pious church-men spoken.
For the moment I did feel a shiver
Run with swift course through all my veins; but so
Blinded was I that for the chill I no
Good reason saw.

So I, half-dazed, did let Them work their will; and ere I was aware
Nearly nude I was, rope around my neck,
Hoodwinked my eyes, and helpless as a babe
In the hands of those who had beguiled me,
And who led me where they would. They took me
Here and there, and I heard questions many Asked and answered by or for me, till it Seemed a hideous dream I was passing through.
Around and still about like thing sightless
I was led to meet the silly forms they Do impose on candidates, who know not
Now and never learn their uses; for no
Uses have they save to bewilder and
To fool the devotee!

Ere the strange work
Was done I was this question asked: "In whom Put you your trust?" Here, thought I, is language
I can understand; and I quick replied,
"In Jesus Christ." But here the Master said,
Blandly but firmly, "'Tis not Masonic
Such reply to give; in quite other phrases
Your answer must be worded."

"Then what terms
Must I employ?" I ventured to inquire.
"Say in God!" quick came from the Master's lips.
And so I used the words put in my mouth,
Though wondering the while what difference
Could be between the phrases, that such stress
Upon it should be laid; and once I asked
A brother minister, further advanced,
The question. He gravely told me that the Ritual was made before the Saviour's
Birth, and that Masonic landmarks sacred
Were, and could ne'er be changed. Did he not know
He lied? Or could he be so much deceived?

But I was soon before the altar brought,
And on my bare left knee was made to kneel,
One hand beneath and one above the Word
Of God; with square and compasses thereon;
And then an obligation was imposed,
Which, "on the honor of a man and Mason,"
I was told "would not conflict with duty
To family, to country, or to God!"

If my God can, may he forgive the lie,
And me for blindly trusting it. Not much
I gathered, as in broken sentences
That horrid oath did pass my lips; but when
The penalty came on, and then that prayer
For help from God to keep me steadfast in Performing it, I had fainted, but for My strong will But oh! I was sick at heart;
And almost maddened as the brethren lipped
In solemn, loud response, "So mote it be."

So the wicked farce went on till I was "Brought to light!" I thought unutterable Things thenceforth, and but little notice took
Of what was said or done till they told me
I'd been introduced to the first principles
Of Masonry, and me did congratulate Thereon.

A white apron they had girded
On me, telling me the while "more ancient
It was than the golden fleece or Roman Eagle; and more honorable than star
And garter, or any order conferred
By king, prince, potentate, or by any Other person, save a Mason!' I then Took the guage into my hands and was taught
By it to measure off my time; eight hours
For God's service and a brother's; eight hours
To daily labor to be given; and eight
For refreshment and for sleep. The inches
Twenty-four, thus equally divided,
Such scientific lessons sure would teach
Whene'er I'd look upon it. The common
Gavel in my hands they placed, to teach me
How to cleanse my heart and conscience from their Sins; and as living stone to fit my mind
For that spiritual building, that house
Not made with hands, eternal in the heavens!

Had God left me? Where were my spirit eyes?
Why did I not the substitution see
Of this instrument for the blood of Christ?
How could I overlook the Christless prayers?
And the plain intent of all the forms to Lead the mind away from Christ and from His religion.

In closing, I by Master Worshipful
As Brother, was addressed, and gravely told
I was to an institution wedded
"Ancient and honorable;" that it had
"Subsisted from time immemorial;
That no institution was ever raised
On better principles, or on more sure Foundation."

Thus the Master did blaspheme!
And I, a Christian minister, did make
No protest as the statement infamous
Was made; and this thing of birth Satanic
Was lifted up athwart my mental view,
As the equal or superior of that Church
My blest Redeemer purchased with his blood.
And then again this base assertion fell
Upon my ears, "Nor were more excellent
Rules and useful maxims e'er laid down
Than Masonic lecturers do inculcate!"
Making thus the Word of God most holy,
But the fellow of the frothy mouthing
I was now taught to accept in the names
Of science and morality!

At length
The work was at an end and I was left
To look about me and the brotherhood
To scan with which my fortunes now were cast.
I had been taught that "Masonry divine,"
Was based upon "The fatherhood of God
And brotherhood of Man." Did I not know
That Christianity here based her claim?
Then how could this be true of Masonry?
Universal brotherhood God in Christ
Will 'stablish in the earth, and no other
Can by him acknowledged be. Passing strange
It is that men at all intelligent
In holy things should so insult their own
Capacities as to give such treason
Place e'en for a moment!

How could I, then,
Believe a lie so baseless as was this?
Chosen of God was I, and so deceived!
The one who was to come, the anti-Christ,
Was to deceive—if that were possible—
The very elect. On a stormy sea
My very soul did seem adrift; and worse
As I took in with vision much disturbed,
My new surroundings. Around me were those
To whom I now must give, whene'er we met,
The title owned by family of God!
And these were they! How they did "brother" me.
As one by one they took me by the hand!
What was I now that a scoffing Hebrew,
One that did hate my Christ, should foremost be,
To own me as a "brother," and give me
Sign and grip and word of cheer? What had so
Transformed me in a moment, that this Jew Should all at once a Christian love? Had he Met with a change, or was it I? And then
The man whose avocation was my hate,
Whose soul-damning work on the young manhood
Of my parish my just indignation
Had aroused—the drunkard-maker—he next
Did offer me his hand and brother'd me!
I knew this man for years had hated me
For my plain dealing, as my soul was stirred
At sight of woes his traffic did inflict.
And now he hailed me "brother," with the rest,
And I was sworn the hail to recognize.
Was this man now transfigured, or was I?
Had he come up in character or in Profession, or had I gone down to him?
Once and again these questions were pressed home,
As each affiliate advanced his claims
To a full and loving recognition.

After him came one who was of men called
Reverend as was I, but from whom as yet
I'd walked apart, as one shuns another
By some subtle instinct warned. My notice
He had sought in various ways—until now
In vain. Well he knew and had known it long,
I loved him not; and in his heart for this
He hated me. I was his fellow now,
Nay, further, I was brother unto him,
And no longer "on the level," could I
Refuse to meet him; though for good reason
I did loathe him. All this he knew, and so
He met me with a smile which first cousin
Seemed unto a hateful sneer. 'Twas his turn
To triumph now; for from henceforth I was
His "brother," and must own the tie
Where'er he chose to claim it.

But there were others
Even here who did seem unlike to those
I have described. These, if I read aright,
Seemed by their looks to pity me the while.
They gave me sympathy which I could feel
To be of quite another sort. These seemed
To take less interest in the work in hand
Than they should have shown if Freemasonry
Had half the charms its fondest friends had claimed E'er I had joined them.

But I cannot tell
The sickening story through. I am paling
Even now as the scene comes up to plague
And frighten me. Was this a nightmare dream,
Or was it dread reality? Alas!
No dream I found it. Oft I asked myself
And others, "Is this ancient Masonry?
This the thing that to the thinking and great Commends itself as better than the church?"
In answer they with gravity replied,
"Sir, you are only on the threshold yet;
The secrets of our art are higher up,
And are of such a character 'twill pay
You to go on and reach the third degree—
'Holy of Holies' in Freemasonry."

But shall I e'er forget the going home
When that night's work was done? How should I meet
My wife, who knew not wherefore I was out?
Until this time we had been truly one;
Her trust in me was a right holy thing,
And mine in her ne'er knew a questioning.
She seldom grieved me, nor had she need,
For I had always forward been to share
With her all knowledge of my deeds, my thoughts,
As well; nor till now had I imagined
That one chamber in my heart against her
Could by my own hands be locked, and the key
Forever thrown away! This I had done;
And the dreadful act with an oath had sealed
On penalty of death! This on my thought
Lay heavy, as like a criminal I
Sought the presence of my unsuspecting
Wife, who wondered, still did not question me.
What right had I to claim such loyalty,
While with secret treason my heart was full?
For as yet my purpose forward led me
To know all that might be known in this way
To the success I craved. Far as I could
I did deceive my loving, trusting one,
And kept my trouble to myself. She saw
My efforts and she pitied me, waiting
Patiently till I should ope my lips and Speak.

Meantime I'd consented and gone on,
And Fellow-Craft was made; and then was "raised"
To "ancient and sublime degree!" without An interval.

All language fails me here!
That night of whelming horrors I can ne'er
Describe. Could my dear friends have seen me there,
Or wife, to whom mine honor is as dear,
And my person sacred as is her own.
All through me runs a shuddering and a thrill
Whene'er I think of such a thing, and yet
God saw me, and he heard me as I lipped
The awful oath which was administered
To me, and which I spoke as parrot might,
And scarcely sensed it more, save as it left
A fear upon my soul that among devils
I had fallen, and was e'en now in hell.

But, as they swore me and I still did swear,
Ever and anon across the surface
Of my darkened mind came there flitting past,
My blessed Saviour's words, "Swear not at all."

But from the Master's lips the words ran on,
And almost helpless I repeated them,
Hoping 'gainst hope that something might be gained
At last to compensate my sacrifice.

* * * * * * *

At length they did release me, feeling pleased
With my docility, as they thought it;
While I went home to make confession
And to pray.

I sought for mercy from my God,
Crying as beggar most importunate—
Myself did humble there abasingly;
For I did deeply feel that I had sinned,
Against great light and knowledge willfully,
And to God I sought for full forgiveness.
In the name of Him I had so dishonored
By my connection with the Christless host.
But all in vain until right faithfully
I promise made not only to forsake
The brotherhood, but also to expose
Its principles and workings to the world,
To make confession to my wife and church,
Whose loving trust in me I had betrayed.
My kind people willingly forgave me,
In my humiliation pitied me,
And won me back to strength by sympathy
And forceful prayers to heaven in my behalf.
I also told my faithful wife my fall,
And coming back to reason by God's help,
And on her loving mercy threw myself.
With paling cheek she listened to my words,
Disgust and pity blending as she heard;
The while her eyes on mine were fixed, reading
All my soul, seeing there an agony
Unfeigned, for which my burning sentences
No fit exponents were; when she hastened
With sweet forgiveness and far sweeter love,
To heal my heart; so we were one again,
And then came peace with God.

I'm free, again!
The chain which bound my soul in twain is snapped,
My wounds are healed, though graceless scars remain,
To warn and humble me. These like blood stains
On hands of murderers will never "out,"
Though with nitre washed!

The soul-sickening oaths
I'd taken, which had once so binding seemed,
Are now like smoking flax or shifting sand.
Administered in fraud, they are not oaths
And have no sanctity. He who gives them
As well as he who takes, doth make revolt
Against the rightful sovereignty of law,
And so their oathing doth resolve itself
Merely into mouthings of spoken wind!
Brethren of the Mystic Tie, hear my voice.
I know, like me, some feel the galling yoke;
Assert your manhood. One manly effort,
And your souls are free! God is calling out
His own from mystic Babylon to save
Them from the threatened plagues on her pronounced.
And thou foul mother of the secret brood,
Freemasonry, I hate thee! and will hate!
Base compound of deceit and selfishness;
Snaring the souls of honest trustful men;
Far leading them from Christ and heaven astray;
Abhorred of God and man forevermore
Thou art and shalt be! Foul conspiracy,
And treason are thy synonyms. To Christ
No heart that loveth thee can loyal be;
Thy subjects, boasting freedom, are but slaves,
While the redeemed in Christ alone are free!

the law should be thought of as a Christian text-book, which would bring the student to a knowledge of the way to Christ. We could realize the power of religion when we looked around and saw men who had sunken low clothed again and in their right mind, thanks to its beneficent influence. Intemperance could almost be called the base of sin, because it leads to every other form of sin. He knew of scores of men who had once filled positions of trust and honor, but now rested in drunkard's graves. He had seen enough of the curse of drink, and the bitterness that comes to a godless life, to awaken him. Once before he had professed religion, but he fell, and became, not a scoffer, but one who, knowing what his duty was, did what was wrong. For many years he violated his conscience every day. Many a night he had stayed out until midnight, rather than go home to be racked by his conscience. Although he had always tried to appear as a gentleman, he had all the time been miserable because he was offending his sense of duty. He thanked God that Christ had redeemed him from his bondage at last. He died that every drunkard might break the chains that enslaved him. When a boy he was once caught in some machinery on his father's premises, but was rescued from a sudden and terrible death by a man employed about the work. Years afterward his soul was thrilled when he heard again of that same man. It was on Lake Erie, a splendid passenger boat was bearing her usual load of human freight when the terrible cry of fire was raised. That man, Henry Granger, was pilot of the boat. He stood at his post in the wheel-house steering the vessel ashore. The flames made way around him. The captain called once, twice, as he was more and more in danger of his life, if he could hold out. "Aye, aye, sir," was the reply. The vessel struck and all escaped but the noble man who gave up his life at his post. The popular effect of the death of Abraham Lincoln, the martyr president was graphically told. But Christ, said the speaker, died upon the cross. He gave his life to redeem men from a greater evil than human slavery; to save them from a worse destruction than the flames of a burning vessel. He died to save the poor drunkard. Nothing but the grace of God could reform a man. He had no confidence in legislation or in any societies or in any reformatory agencies except those that were laid down in the Book of Life. There was no refuge but Christ. He wished that men who desired to reform would say with Job, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and if they believed that they would be safe and would finally be brought home, to be forever with the Author of their salvation.

A request was read for prayer for Mrs. Forbes of West Washington street, a paralyzed woman who had no Christian friends and desired Christian sisters to call.

Mr. Delight said he saw saloonkeepers here with whom he used to drink and who sold him liquor. He hoped they would here carefully the testimonies that would be given by men escaped.

A man well along in years arose to tell what Christ had done for him. Nearly 45 years he had been a drinking man. Had spent all his earnings for drink. He had enticed many to drink, drawing them on toward hell. On the night before Thanksgiving he got into a fight in a saloon and nearly took the life of a man. He was brought to a sense of his condition and asked for the prayers of Christians on one Sabbath soon after. The next Wednesday he felt that God forgave him.

The next speaker had been a drinking man, but through grace was at last set free 16 years ago. He had a praying wife, whose death made a deep impression on him. He signed the pledge and took Christ for his Saviour. Ten years ago he got free from tobacco and he thanked God for it. He defied any man to say there was anything good in whisky or tobacco.

Another who said he had been a great sinner and a great drinker, found Christ nine weeks ago in Farwell Hall. He had a praying wife, mother and sister, and was the only one of all the family who was lost. God protected him and brought him safely through the Mexican war and also the late war of the Rebellion, and in His providence brought him to Chicago. He had been wonderfully saved from disaster on the Mississippi when most all on board the boat were lost—saved to find Christ.

Another who gave an interesting experience last week said the prayers of a wife and mother were answered in his conversion. He gained strength daily; had many temptations, but Christ helped him shun the saloons.

A Bro. Bates, who is engaged in family visitation said he had been a drinking man, and had been saved two years from the evil. This temperance work he believed must be baptized into the cause of Christ. It would not succeed till then.

A young man wanted to express his joy at finding Mr. Delight engaged in this good work. A few years ago he worked for him in his barber-shop. He was a Catholic, and when Mr. D. took him one Saturday night to a bar room and asked him to drink he refused. He was then invited to smoke; but no. "Well, what kind of a barber are you?" ejaculated his employer. The men in the shop all laughed at him for his temperance principles, but one night after Delight had opened his big shop the men all had a spree and were unable to work next day. Then he had his laugh and asked, "What kind of men are you?" He had been a Catholic many years and had joined a secret society, but had found Christ at last and was happy in him. He told of the recent conversion of Luther Benson, a celebrated temperance lecturer who fell under the power of drink even while lecturing, and was so intoxicated one night that he broke down. Christian friends came around him and after a struggle of two or three days he found Christ, and now rejoiced in a complete salvation from his old enemy.

TRACT

OBJECTIONS TO MASONRY.

By A SECEDING MASON, of Cornton, Vermont.

This tract contains many strong arguments against the Lodge drawn from personal experience, observation and study of its character A 4-page tract at 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 21:

MASONIC CHASTITY.

BY EMMA A. WALLACE.

The author, by wonderfully clear illustration and argument, shows the terribly corrupt nature of Freemasonry. No true woman who reads this will ever speak with approbation of this institution. A 4-page tract 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT No. 22.

LINUS CHITTENDEN ON FREEMASONRY.

The Author a Seceding Master Mason states his objection to the Lodge, drawn both from experience and observation, in a clear concise and forcible style.

A 2 page tract, 25 cents per 100, $2.00 per 1,000.

TRACT No. 23.

MASONIC OATHS AND PENALTIES.

ADDRESS OF REV. A. M. MILLIGAN AT THE PITTSBURGH CONVENTION.

This is the clearest and most conclusive argument to show the wickedness of masonic oaths and the duty to disregard and repent of them that we have ever seen.

A 4 page tract, 50 cents per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100: $15.00 per 1000.

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excellent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Publishers Department.

Three hundred and thirty-four subscriptions expire this month. Will you do your part toward having them all promptly renewed?

John Viall sends $15.00 for a club of ten and two of the names. He writes: "I mean to pick up the other eight names from time to time, however that may be I take pleasure in the thought that eight more subscribers are paid for." Let others send on the fifteen dollars and forward the names as they secure them.

Who will forward clubs of ten next week? Keep the ball rolling.

J. P. Bartlett, Blackberry Station, Ill., sends a club of five for a year. S. H. Kimball, Center Strafford, N. Hampshire, sends a club of five for three months each. Philip Bacon, Weatogue, Conn., sends one for a year, one for six months and five for three months. A. Housel, Ossian, Ind., writes: "I send you two new subscribers, all I could do this time. I will try and get more." Wm. H. Morrill sends three for a year and writes: "I have tried to secure a club of ten and shall continue to work for the cause. I believe the seed sown will bring forth an abundant harvest. I have scattered the supplements in several States where the reform movement has not been agitated."

B. T. Park, Erin, N. Y., writes: "I am canvassing for a club with prospects very good for success."

S. J. Seeley, San Jose, Cal., writes: "I will see what I can do about getting some new subscribers."

Thos. A. Sproul, New Alexandria, Pa., writes: "If you send me some back numbers of the Cynosure, I will endeavor to obtain some new subscribers."

Remember the number of subscribers is to be reported in our issue of March 1st. Remember that at present and for more than a year past the mail list has scarcely averaged four thousand names; that the list we are now aiming at is ten thousand; that every little helps; that eternal vigilance is the price of everything valuable; that we can not honor the memory of Washington better than by cultivating the principles of his farewell address; that we can not do better for our country than by striving in this first year of her second century to put better motives into the hearts of our fellow men than those inspired by systems of organized selfishness; and above all that Christ is the only foundation of sweet homes, happy hearts, honorable governments and an eternity of peace.

Let a fresh set of canvassers for the Cynosure, enter the field with each new month and keep the subscriptions for the Cynosure in clubs of ten coming in the whole year round.

Be of good courage. Never give up, and the reform will gain power with the widening circulation of the Christian Cynosure.

Send for supplements for canvassing purposes or for general distribution.

Free to canvassers. To others 75 cents per hundred postpaid, 50 cents per hundred by express.

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK.

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On

TIN ROOFS

our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

BRICK WALLS.

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

MICHIGAN STATE LECTURER.

MR. EDITOR:—Please let me say through the columns of the Cynosure that I have engaged to serve the Michigan Christian Association Opposed to Secret Societies, the ensuing year, and expect to begin my labors about the 20th of this month.

Those desiring lectures can correspond with me through their State Agent, C. B. Remington, Fentonville, Michigan.

D. P. RATHBUN.

TO CONNECTICUT FRIENDS.

brough the zeal of J. A. Conant, Esq. of Willimantic, and a few co-workers, our excellent brother, Philip Bacon, whom many of you know, is now in the field as a colporteur. tract distributer and canvasser for the Cynosure. We bespeak for him the hearty support of all. He is especially desirous to know of neighborhoods where such a canvass would be likely to prove successful, and also to have a list of those persons in each neighborhood on whom such a call would be wise. Address Philip Bacon, Weatogue, Conn.

Topics of the Time.

The decision of the Presidential Commission in the Florida case has been given to the public and is in an important sense favorable to the Republican interests. But higher than any party interests, that vote to accept the returns as given by the properly constituted State officers without further inquiry into the defects of the popular election was, as we believe the only one possible under the Constitution. But the effect of it is immediately seen in the vituperative tone of the partisan press. The vote was divided on the strict party line, eight to seven, though it is at least unpleasant, perhaps unfair, to attribute mere party motives to the two Judges who voted with the Democratic Congressmen. The discussion of the vote has turned, however, entirely on its partisan character, and the evil effect of dragging the Supreme Court into politics is already being felt.

Another result of this arbitration which was predicted while the plan was maturing, was the unusual powers which were in fact, though not apparently, given to the fifth Judge, the other four being selected because of their political affinity. A correspondent thus states the position occupied by Judge Bradley: "It is quite discouraging to people who imagine that the high character and function of the Commission would lead its members to rise above the common level of partisan-politics to find that even upon as simple a question as that of adjournment, party feeling sways every man of them except the odd Judge. He is, in fact, the Court, and the fourteen other Commissioners are only party make-weights to balance each other. Justice Bradley is the modern Warwick. He will make the President just as effectively as if he were the sole arbitrator of the controversy. Whether Hayes or Tilden is to fill the Executive office after the 4th of March depends solely and absolutely upon his decision. The arguments of counsel are addressed to him. His vote is waited for with bated breath. For the moment he is the most powerful man in America." This placing the vote of the nation in the power of one man is certainly delegating a responsibility which was never contemplated by the framers of the government, and cannot fail to be of serious influence as a bad precedent, if indeed its immediate results are not unfortunate. From the action of the Democratic party in Congress since the Florida decision it is indeed possible that the whole arbitration will be a failure. If the majority in the House see fit they can so postpone action until after inauguration day as to make some other settlement of the vexed question necessary.

Francis Murphy, a reformed drunkard and zealous Christian apostle of temperance has been revolutionizing Pittsburgh and Allegheny City. His labors there for the past few weeks are showing wonderful results. Miss Willard, late President of the Woman's Temperance Christian Union in this city, writes from Pittsburgh that sixty thousand persons had signed the pledge and one hundred saloons had been closed. Other reports say that twenty-five thousand men are pledged to fight intemperance. The number of criminal cases before the magistrates of the two cities say the Pittsburgh papers has decreased in inverse ratio to the increase of Murphy's converts. The Collector of Internal Revenue of the district did not sell a beer stamp on a late Monday and Tuesday, though there are nearly sixty breweries in his district, and Monday has usually been his busy day. This wonderful awakening against the terrible rum curse is not in the interest of any lodge or temperance society, but the work of a man converted to Christ and saved by Divine grace from the pit of drunkenness, using only those means which were so effectual in his own case, to save his fallen fellows.

The wonderful results that have followed the proclamation of salvation for the drunkard through Christ, by Moody, Sawyer, Lattimore, Sharp, Murphy and others, while it overthrows some of the doctors' theories, will be the means of opening the eyes of Christians to their responsibility for their fellow-men. These temperance evangelists have but one way of saving the drunkard. They do not tell him that his trouble is a bodily disease, that it can be cured by this or that prescription, or by becoming an inmate of this or that Hospital or Home, where he will be treated as a sick man. They say to him, Your condition is the consequence of sin, of giving way to evil indulgence until the devil has a beaten road into your heart. You can be safe only by getting rid of the sin. Come to the Sin-cleanser and be saved. From four to five hundred men in Chicago bear witness to the power of their remedy; that it is the true and sure way of redemption. The temperance orders urge reliance on human strength, where they do any honest temperance work at all. So in a more honest way do reformatory institutions. But none of these arrangements meet the case. The men saved by these means any year could almost be counted on a man's hand; and all because sin, not disease, is the trouble. The Christian church has left this work to other hands long enough, while her learned doctors have been discussing the quality of the wine at Cana.

A talented temperance lecturer was once asked, "What shall we do with all the grain that is now required for distilling?" "Feed the drunkard's wife and children with it; they have gone hungry long enough," was the prompt reply.

A Timely Suggestion.

It is suggested to our fellow Antimasons in Massachusetts that the occasion of the evangelist Moody's visit there, is a favorable one for sowing our own seed, and thus helping forward a much needed reform. A stand near the Tabernacle in Boston, for scattering tracts, leaflets and books, would do a work hardly less extensive and abiding than that of the evangelist himself. The evangelist will plow up the soil, and if we follow with our seed, the harvest can not fail to be great.

Boston is a center in which the whole country is interested; for, unfortunately, the Jesuits of the Masonic lodge have seized upon it, many years since, to send out a potent and baleful influence in favor of Freemasonry, that has reached to every limit of the entire Union. Boston has been the first northeastern city to see erected within her borders an immense, costly, unchristian temple for the debasing worship of mystification; and her example has been followed by Philadelphia and New York. The three Masonic temples recently built in these cities, in which the worship of Christ is ignored, must have cost from two millions to three millions of dollars, a sum which, if devoted to some useful purpose, such as schools for our negroes or poor whites, might have added very materially to the interests of the country.

As it is, the teachings of the lodge, the devil's church, are not in the direction of our laws, our religion, our institutions or our civilization. Freemasonry is covert warfare against all these. It pretends to oppose Jesuitry, but it plays directly into the hands of Jesuitry. No one will ever accuse the Puritans of a want of opposition to Jesuitry; but they never resorted to mean, sly, underhanded artifices in their opposition. The cure that Freemasonry offers for Jesuitry is worse than the disease. Northern Freemasonry is an example, a plea and an excuse for Southern ku-kluxism; for no candid or honorable man can claim that one secret society is any better or any worse, in principle, than any other secret society, unless he gives us the interior workings of the lodge as proof.

We who have examined into Freemasonry know that it is full of untruths; that it is a gross fraud and imposition, and that therefore no follower of the truth ought to belong to it. The object of the Christian religion is to assert the truth, and not imposition; and if Mr. Moody fails to open the eyes of the people to these facts, his preaching will fail to reach the moral necessities of the day. It should be our duty, as Anti-masons, to see that his preaching does not prove a failure in this respect. If the evangelist does not raise a voice in favor of the murdered victims of the Ku-klux lodge, who will?

AMERICAN.

PLAIN WORDS TO OLD COMPANIONS.

CHICAGO, Feb. 1, 1877.

To the W. M., Wardens and Brethren of Keystone Lodge No. 639, A. F. and A. M.

BRETHREN:—It has been my fixed purpose for a long time to address you in an especial manner on the subject of Freemasonry, but up to the present moment have been hindered from so doing for want of the time which I considered necessary in order to enable me to give to this all-important subject that careful and due consideration which it really deserves, and also because I desired to wait until the cloud of prejudice and passion which enveloped your understandings and biased your judgments, both at the time of my withdrawal from the lodge and subsequent thereto, had entirely cleared away. This time has now I firmly believe fully arrived. I am now, as many of you are aware, on the most friendly terms possible with almost all the old members of the lodge as well as with members of various other city lodges, and hence we can all now exercise our reasoning powers calmly and dispassionately in discussing the precepts, obligations, tenets and doctrines of Freemasonry. I meet Masons in the streets of this city and in our public gatherings almost every day who seem to be as friendly and who greet me as warmly as they were wont to do when I was an honored member of your fraternity, and I have every reason to believe that there are hundreds of Masons in Chicago at this moment who have been inveigled into the order and who now rejoice in their heart of hearts that my chief business in life is to expose to the public that miserable sham, hypocrisy, fraud and iniquity popularly known as Ancient Freemasonry.

In the series of letters which it is my purpose to address to you on this subject it is my intention to discuss Freemasonry in all its varied parts, both secret and monitorial — calling your careful attention to every point and every assertion made in the ritual, comparing one degree with another, and conclusively showing that the entire system is nothing more nor less than one great mass of falsehood, misrepresentation and deception from beginning to end, being diametrically opposite both to reason and common sense, having no foundation whatever in history, and what is worse than all being in direct conflict with the plain and positive statements of the Holy Bible.

The discussion of this question my brethren, is of vital importance to each one of you whether Jew or Gentile. You know that in the lodge room you are exceedingly careful to please the Master and obey the by-laws, but are you just as careful in pleasing God and obeying the laws of heaven. You have the Bible on the altar, and on it you swear your candidates, but do you ever read it or cause it to be read? How many of you believe in the Bible or care more about it than you do for the proceedings of the common council or the daily evening news? Do the Jewish members believe in the New Testament, or the Catholic members in the authorized version? Your entire membership can be divided into three principal classes: Jews, Catholics and Free-thinkers, and these again may be subdivided into as many classes as there are individual members, and you know full well that not one of all these cares the value of the smallest metallic substance for the Holy Bible, or any of its divine precepts. And now permit me to ask, are you as careful to please God as you are to please your Worshipful Master? Read the whole of the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, but particularly the sixth verse and tell me what you find. "But without faith it is impossible to please Him." Have you faith in Jesus Christ? Do you individually put your trust and confidence for time and for eternity in the Lord Jesus Christ? You do not. You know you do not. Freemasonry entirely rejects Jesus Christ. He is utterly ignored in every prayer and ceremony of the lodge and even his name is carefully expunged from all Scripture quotations where it occurs, and hence all your lodge meetings, and all so-called prayers offered in them must be an abomination in the sight of God, and must therefore inevitably bring eternal ruin on the individual member who persistently participates in these lodge meetings, as well as national decay and death upon that country which silently allows these Masonic lodges to increase and multiply.

But this entire question of faith or trust in God will be fully discussed under its proper head in a future letter and I only mention it now merely to call your attention to the great importance of the subject and to solicit your attention more carefully in discussing the various topics that will come under our notice during our proposed examination of the entire symbolism of Freemasonry. When I was with you in the lodge during the years 1871, '72, '73 and part of 74, whether acting in my official capacity as Secretary, Senior Warden or Worshipful Master, you remember how eagerly you sought after me for Masonic instruction and therefore you cannot now honestly or consistently refuse to investigate with me those tenets and doctrines and the real esoteric meaning of the ceremonies which in those years you and I together participated in on the floor of Keystone Lodge. You will remember, my brethren, that on that never to be forgotton 9th of October, 1871, when Chicago was in flames and when every other member of your lodge, true to the selfish principle underlying every Masonic act, forgot all about Keystone and would leave her to be consumed in the general conflagration, I alone saved her from destruction and carried with me to the prairie every single particle of lodge paraphernalia, so that not even the smallest scrap of paper in your archives was missing, and if the younger members among you now will take the pains to examine they will find a red page on your "Record Book" as a living memorial of that terrible occasion and in grateful remembrance of my exertions in saving the lodge from total extinction.

I would also remind you of the "lodges of instruction" we used to hold in those days when W. Bro. J. H. Dixon and myself were always found at our post, more ready to impart than many of you were willing to receive Masonic instruction, and in this connection I need scarcely remind you that whatever of Masonic knowledge you acquired during the years above mentioned you learned it of me. You will permit me also to carry your mind back to those suppers and drinking bouts we used to have together, going home about one or two o'clock in the morning, and perhaps lying to our families to hide our folly; and need I add here that both you and I can recall numerous instances where many a brother Mason has been steeped in iniquity and sin, the direct result of those midnight potations, and where many a wife and mother has sorely rued the night that saw her husband or son blindfolded and cable-towed to Baal's altar in a Masonic lodge. Many of the older members among you will doubtless recollect that during my administration as Worshipful Master in 1872 and '73 I always openly expressed myself as regards the principles of the craft, on every occasion characterizing Freemasonry as a system of stupendous humbug, utterly hollow and totally devoid of truth, sincerity, brotherly love, justice or relief, and your present Senior Warden, Bro. Charles King, will remember that on a certain night as we were all assembled in Klare's sample room, being invited thither by some one of our candidates in those days, he (Chas. King) mildly and fraternally reproved me for giving expression to my convictions in such a public place and before so many of our younger brethren. And lastly I will take the liberty of calling your attention to the fact that notwithstanding my open denunciations of Masonic sham and Masonic swindle yet you were good enough on January 14, 1874, to present me with a very beautiful Past Master's regalia, consisting of a collar and apron, both elaborately worked, and my sincere thanks have always been most eminently due to W. Bro. J. H. Dixon, for his splendid gift of a Past Master's jewel on the same occasion. And now allow me to make one more remark, namely, that my warfare is not now and never has been against the men, but against the principles and the obligations of the Masonic system, and my only object in calling your attention to a few of the incidents in our past Masonic life has been that you and I together may enter upon a calm and serious consideration of the Masonic ritual with the distinct understanding that he who spent the greater part of four years in teaching you Masonry in the lodge room is capable of fully discussing with you the principles of this system and that you may rest assured that nothing shall be advanced but which can be proved by works which must be acknowledged as being the highest Masonic authority in the world. I shall refer to Mackey and Sickles, to Moore and Webb, to Pierson, to Dr. Rob. Morris, to Chase and to the Grand Lodge proceedings of our own M. W. Grand Lodge of Illinois while I examine into the principles and doctrines of the institution, while at the same time I must remind you, though in a general way, of how these principles and doctrines are exemplified in the outward walk and conversation of individual members of the craft.

How long halt ye between two opinions? If Baal be God then worship him, but if the LORD be God then worship him.—1 Kings 18.

I am your friend and former brother, EDMOND ROMAYNE,

Past Master Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, Ill.

FREEMASONRY ROBBING THE BALLOT BOX.

The Amboy Journal of Nov. 15th contained official returns in full for all candidates but not a word was said of the Anti-masonic vote or candidate.

The issue of the same journal on November 22nd contained the following:

AMBOY, Nov. 13, 1876.

FRIEND HASKELL:—By what law does our election board suppress the votes of any party? This is the second time that all the Anti-mason or American party ballots have been thrown out, or no returns made. I know that some were deposited. I suppose that the Republican Masons of Amboy have the same right to suppress the Anti-masons North that the Democratic Masons have to suppress Republicans in the South, yet Masonry has nothing to do with politics. The greenback vote should be counted if but one in a township.

HIRL LEWIS.

[We received a similar communication from F. J. Crowder. Will those responsible answer?—Ed.]

The Journal of Dec. 6th contained other official returns of the presidential votes (only) with the heading Hayes, Tilden, Cooper, Smith, with the proper name of the parties, then the column headed Anti-secret Societies, and for Lee county six votes. The same paper contained an article from Hiel Lewis, a part of which we publish below:

THOSE ANTI-MASON VOTES.

Mr. Editor:—With your permission, I will lay before your readers, what I believe to be the true cause of the throwing out all the Anti-mason votes in this county. There was at least four in Amboy, two in Lee Centre and two in Willow Creek. So it was not because there was so few, for seven townships in this county gave but one vote each for Cooper, and these were reported. Neither was it because they were illegal. * *

So we must look somewhere else for this violation of law. And without fear of successful contradiction, I will say that that cause is to be found only in Masonic influence. It may be that some of the judges were not Masons, but Masonic influence is not confined to Masons. Masonic influence controls many who are not Masons, and very frequently without a suspicion of where that influence comes from. It is said that I see Masonry in everything. My reply is, Masonry is interfering with every body and every thing. The lodge is the efficient cause of the present depression of the Republican party. Let us look at the process. As soon as the rebels under Lee and Johnson had laid down their arms, there appeared in the Chicago Weekly Tribune a notice or call for a Masonic convention, to agree on terms of reconstruction, to meet in Cincinnati on a day named, representatives both from the North and South were invited. The results of this Masonic convention were not published, but every one could see what they were by the way reconstruction proceeded. Murder and treason are not crimes in Masonic law, so no man was to be punished for treason. Jeff. Davis and all the rebels were pardoned, then enfranchised and then restored to full political rights. No one doubts that Masonry had something to do with all this, although at the time very many Masons shook their heads and said this was not right, something was wrong, but they didn't see that the rebel general, Albert Pike, one of the great high priests of Masonry, and a few of the 33d, the supreme council, stood behind the curtain and pulled the wires, and all must dance whether they liked it or not. The next thing was, Masons in the South organized Ku-Klux, White League and White Line Lodges, Regulators, Rifle Clubs, etc. But the sole object was the destruction of Republicanism, and to gain by secret society influence that they failed to gain in war. In the North, Masons started the Grange. Of course the Grange had nothing to do with politics, yet no one can fail to see that through the instrumentality of the Grange, Wisconsin went Democratic three years ago, and came very near it this year. In a letter I received from Wisconsin, the writer said: "It is a mystery to me how the joining of one little secret society, that has nothing to do with politics, should make good staunch Republicans copperheads, and traitors to their country."

Every one can see that by these means Northern Democrats and Southern Rebels got control of the lower House of Congress. I presume there is not one Mason in a thousand that thinks Masonry had anything to do with it. Just so now; few can see that Masonry threw out the Anti-mason votes.

In the same journal of Dec. 13th the following explanation appeared:

While at Dixon the other day Mr. Hawley, county clerk, showed us the Anti-masonic vote in the late election returns. There were reported the following: Amboy 3 votes, Harmon 1 vote, Lee Centre 2 votes and Willow Creek 3 votes. These were duly reported by the town boards, and Mr. Hawley had reported them to the Secretary of State, but they were not published in any of the county papers for their importance was not made manifest until the letter of Mr. Hiel Lewis which the Journal gave to its readers last week. From the hopeless minority of this sentiment as expressed in the above vote, it seems a hopeless battle.

In the same journal Dec. 27th the following:

Mr. Editor:—I see in your paper of the 13th what purports to be county clerk Hawley's explanation of what became of those Anti-mason votes, but the explanation seems a little mixed. He accounts for but three in Amboy, and I am certain there was at least four. Then he says they were duly reported to the Secretary of State, and in that report, as shown in your paper of the previous week, there was but six votes in Lee county, while Mr. Hawley, in his explanation, gives nine votes in this county—besides the one in Amboy not reported. Query: is all the election returns through the country as accurate as Mr. Hawley's? Hiel Lewis.

Mr. Lewis explains further:

From what we learn the Amboy officials threw out our votes; the other towns returned the votes according to law, and then when our (Amboy) officials found that there was a possibility of having to answer in circuit court, we suppose, they and Past Grand Master James A. Hawley, undertook to fix it up, hence the second official returns which include all but Amboy votes, and then Mr. Hawley's explanation, and in their different efforts to explain and to cover their tricks, they got their counts mixed and not correct, and further that the P. G. M. Hawley thinks that correctness and violation of votes is of no importance.

Dedication of Masonic Lodges.

The following are the statements of Mackey and Morris on the dedication of lodges:—R.

Mackey's Jurisprudence, pp. 290–293.—The ceremony of dedicating the lodge immediately follows that of its consecration. This, too, is a very ancient ceremony, and finds its prototype in the religious services of antiquity. Every temple among the pagans was dedicated to some particular deity, oftentimes to the conjoint worship of several, while the Jews dedicated their religious edifices to the one Supreme Jehovah. Thus David dedicated with solemn ceremonies the altar which he erected on the threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite, after the cessation of the plague which had afflicted his people; and Calmet conjectured that he composed the 30th Psalm on this occasion. The Jews extended this ceremony of dedication even to their private houses, and Clarke tells us in reference to a passage in Deuteronomy, chap. 20:5, that "it was a custom in Israel to dedicate a new house to God with prayer, praise and thanksgiving; and this was done in order to secure the divine presence and blessing; for no pious or sensible man could imagine he could dwell safely in a house that was not under the immediate protection of God."

According to the learned Selden there was a distinction among the Jews between consecration and dedication, for sacred things were both consecrated and dedicated, while profane things, such as private dwelling-houses, were only dedicated. Dedication was, therefore, a less sacred ceremony than consecration. This distinction has also been preserved among Christians; many of whom, and in the early ages all, consecrated their churches to the worship of God, but dedicated them to, or placed them under the especial patronage of some particular saint.

A similar practice prevails in the Masonic institution, and, therefore, while we consecrate our lodges as has just been seen, "to the honor of God's glory," we dedicate them to the patrons of our order.

Tradition informs us that Masonic lodges were originally dedicated to King Solomon, because he was our first Most Excellent Grand Master. In the sixteenth century, if we may judge from expressions used in the celebrated Charter of Cologne, St. John the Baptist seems to have been considered as the peculiar patron of Freemasonry; but subsequently this honor was divided between the two Saints John, the Baptist and the Evangelist, and modern lodges, in this country at least, are universally erected or consecrated to God, and dedicated to the Holy Saints John.* I am therefore surprised to find the formula in Webb which dedicates the lodge "to the memory of the Holy Saint John." (See Webb's Monitor, p. 89.) I can not but deem it an inadvertance on the part of this Masonic lecturer, since in all his oral teachings he adhered to the more general system, and described a Masonic lodge in his esoteric work as being dedicated to the holy Saints John." This at all events, is now the universal practice, and the language used by Webb becomes contradictory and absurd when compared with the fact that the festivals of both saints are equally celebrated by the order, and that the 27th of December is not less a day of observance in the order than the 24th of June.†

The ceremony of dedication is merely the enunciation of a form of words, and this having been done, the lodge is thus, by the consecration and dedication, set apart as something sacred to the cultivation of the principles of Masonry, under that peculiar system which acknowledges the two Saints John as its patrons. The consecration and dedication may be considered as the religious formularies which give a sacred character to the lodge, and by which it is distinguished from a profane association, intended only for the cultivation of good fellowship. The lodge is consecrated and dedicated as a place wherein the science of Freemasonry is cultivated.

The United Presbyterian Church and Secret Societes.

None will deny that the strict interpretation of the law of the church forbids any of its members becoming members, or even in any way becoming entangled in the meshes of secret societies. And no one for a moment supposes that a member of any of these orders ought to be received into the communion and fellowship of the U. P. Church, still retaining, or even wishing to retain, such a connection.

It is not our purpose now to show that this law is good, scriptural, and that we should live up to it in the letter as well as the spirit, by reviewing the principles or showing the folly and wickedness of secretism as now seen and known; but this thought with respect to members of secret societies, and membership in the U. P. Church.

It is hard to conceive why any secret society man would seek a place in the U. P. Church. And what is said of the U. P. Church is equally true of all others whose testimony and law are the same. If he did it from pure motives he must feel all the time that he is doing something that is inconsistent with his profession; and to free himself from this he must separate from secretism. It is not nesessary that he should before the world renounce and reveal their secrets and workings; yet the very least he should do would be to let the officers of the church know that he had fully forsaken, and was persuaded in his own mind not to have any more connection with them; for no one can serve two masters. It we were asked why we would not have every one to renounce and reveal the secrets and workings of their several orders, our

*At the union in 1813, the Grand Lodge of England changed the dedication from the two Saints John to Solomon and Moses. But this unwarrantable innovation has never been acknowledged in America nor elsewhere out of the English jurisdiction—not always, indeed, by the lodges in it.

†The formula of dedication used in the Book of Constitutions of the Grand Lodge of South Carolina corrects the phraseology of Webb in this respect, and is therefore, I think, to be preferred: "To the holy Saints John we dedicate this lodge. May every brother revere their character and imitate their virtues."

answer is: But few are able to do this properly, and it is not neeessary, for we know them, and there are men who have the talent and ability to do this work, so it should be left to them as a specialty; yet it is often well to confirm any truth by giving our name, and so saying we are witnesses for the truth's sake.

And now the inquiry very naturally arises, What is the effect, if a member of the church should become connected with any of these secret societies? As to himself, he most certainly destroys his own standing in the church, and falsifies his profession, and greatly injures the Church of God, so nobly witnessing for the truth. If you would be clear, first separate yourself from this witnessing church, and then you will be free to go your whole length, and belong to one, or all. If you do not thus act, the effect will be a disregard of all discipline, weakening the hands of your pastor and officers of the congregation. If you should, by concealing your act, or in open defiance avoid discipline, and still retain your place as a member in full communion, the effect will be the same. But more than this, you do a great injury to your sister congregations, their pastors aud sessions. We have both seen and felt the effect of secret society men being retained in the church in our work; and who will not feel weakened, protest as you may. In spite of all you do and say, it will be repeated in your ears, Mr. A. takes in Masons; Mr. B. has Oddfellows and grangers in his church. And they seem to know so well, and boast of it, and even tell you what the officers said about retaining them. But mind, the boasting was not in the spirit of rejoicing that one was born into the kingdom of God, or that a sinner was saved, or that Christ's children were established and made strong; but rather that the Church of God was humiliated, that her laws were trampled upon, and, to say the least, in some degree disregarded, and they knew it, and wished you to do the same.

We have sometimes almost been led to believe, from facts that cannot be accounted for in any other way, that secret lodges make it their business to know how many they have in witnessing churches, and also to make an effort, as great as ever a Pharisee did to proselyte, to get some one in every church to connect with them, in order that they may more completely circumvent the people of God.

It is high time for the people of God to arouse themselves; yea, every freeman, when we behold both church and state grappled by the monster of secretism. Many civil officers of the land, the courts of justice, school boards, and even a multitude of day laborers, are swayed by secret orders, and unless you belong to some one or more, there is no place, favor, or chance for you. An Open Letter.

Rev. Isaiah Reed, Pastor Pres. Church, Nevada, Iowa, and Editor of High Way Papers,

Dear Brother:—I write in no spirit of unkind criticism; I had formed a most favorable opinion of you as a man and a minister, and was only anxious to retain it. Whoever is engaged in the work of promoting Scriptural holiness has my warmest sympathy, for I too am engaged in that work. I only ask that I may have his sympathy as he has mine.

But when you claim that I am here opposing and hindering your work you are strangely mistaken. I am here to oppose sin and what you admit to be wrong. You say you have no sympathy with the secret orders. Why then should ou object to my opposition to them? I oppose sin in the name of the Lord and as I trust in the spirit of the Lord. I make use of none but Scriptural methods in opposing this evil. What is your work but to oppose sin? But you say that my opposition to this form of sin begets strife and should therefore be avoided. So does opposition to every form of sin. Satan will not be assailed without resistance. That warfare that does not call out the opposition of the wicked one is not worthy the name of war. The Lord Jesus was manifested that he might destroy works of the devil and for this cause Satan stirred up his children to crucify him. Satan has always cried out, "Let us alone." The peace which Christ will bring will be when he has overcome evil with good, until then he has told us to expect strife.

What terrible wars followed the preaching of the Reformation under Luther! But was he responsible? What a sore conflict came from the agitation of the slavery question! But were the abolitionists the guilty party?

It was easy for Ahab to say "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" But Elijah's answer shows that it is the sinner and not the rebuker of sin that is the troubler.

You say that Masonry and Oddfellowship have not opposed you in your work and therefore you ought not to oppose them. Your premise I fear is too true, but I deny your conclusion.

Satan will doubtless be very quiet so long as you give him a comfortable place in the church and are careful not to disturb him. Slaveholders and rumsellers never found fault with the church until it assailed their business; nor will Masons until you oppose Masonry. Wicked men have always been the champions of the church that so preached the gospel that it should not bear against them. And now my brother there is reason to believe that you occupy a similar position, and that profane men regard you as the champion of their wickedness. May the Lord help you to be a faithful watchman and not shun to declare the whole counsel of God. Your brother in Christ,

H. H. Hinman.

—The impetus given to Bible study by the revival meetings is not the least favorable result of the labors of Moody and Whittle. Rev. W. J. Erdman, pastor of the North Side Tabernacle (better known as Moody's church). has been giving Bible readings in various churches for weeks to large audiences. Deacon Willard has also been conducting a regular Bible study in the First M. E. church, and also at the Brevoort House, which have been largely attended and blessed with numerous conversions.

—The revival meetings in Boston are reported as continuing with evidences of their power. Mr. Moody met the critical philosophizing of that city with the plain Gospel, putting all who do not believe in the same category of sinners to whom he has come with a message of Divine grace.

—The Methodist Almanac for 1877 states that the Methodist denomination in the United States is represented by 21,380 ministers, 26,735 local preachers, and 3,197,947 lay members.

—Mrs. Jane G. Swisshelm, the well-known writer, is a United Presbyterian. She was admitted to membership in the United Presbyterian Church in Butler, Pa., in October, 1855.

—Revivals are reported in the Presbyterian Church, Dixon, Ill., and in the Presbyterian Church, Bethlehem, O. Seventy persons have been admitted to the church at Nelsonville, O., and seventy persons have made a profession of religion in the Mariner's Church, New York City.

—Rev. Edward Morris, of Caddo, is said to be the only Congregational minister in the Indian Territory. The church is building a "church house." Mr. Morris has also two preaching points and two flourishing mission schools. The congregations are composed of whites, full-blood Indians, and half-breeds.

The Chicago Christian Association.

This Association met in their hall, 221 W. Madison street, at 2 o'clock P. M. Tuesday, Feb. 6th, and after prayer by the president, Rev. J. W. Bain, the following business was transacted. Officers for the current year were elected as follows:

President, Rev. J. W. Bain.

Vice-presidents, Philo Carpenter, Mrs. C. H. Holden, C. R. Hagerty.

Secretary, A. G. Laird.

Ass't Secretary, Mrs. Ezra A. Cook.

Treasurer, J. B. Blank.

Finance Committee, E. A. Cook, Mrs. C. H. Holden.

Messrs. C. R. Hagerty, Thos. Hodge and Miss Dempster were selected as Committee on Reading Room. This same committee was also authorized to perfect arrangements for a social entertainment to be had under the auspices of C. C. A. in the hall on the evening of Feb. 22nd. An ivy vine and black walnut racks were donated to the Association for use in the reading room by Mrs. C. H. Holden of this city and T. Hudson of Indiana.

Rolling on the Ball in Indiana.

Feb. 2, 1877.

Once more I greet the friends of our cause. I am happy to inform them that I am in good health at the close of a two weeks' conflict with error in Lagrange county.

The first days' drive brought me to Uncle Richard Green, the old wheel horse of reform, whose hospitality and sacrifice are so well known wherever "Uncle Dick" is known. Having learned by experience in the past to blaze his way through the wilderness, it took him but a moment to look at the deep snow and then at my buggy and to mark out a line of action. "Put your horse in my barn and we will hitch the colts (twenty-three years old) to my sleigh. I'm going with you." And for five days the colts trotted me to my appointments in fine style.

At Van Buren we found Mills Calahan with his heart and soul riveted to his platform, and his wife with her amiable good sense and clear, sharp logic saying, "You are right; this is God's cause." I spoke two hours in the evening to a full house. Collection $6.25. Next day we enjoyed the hospitable home of Elder Fleming, (Baptist). There is solid comfort in politeness learned fifty years ago. They have enough for this and a crown laid up for the life beyond. His son William, weighing two hundred and five pounds, muscle, Anti-masonry and fun and his wife whose geniality would drive melancholy from the Dry Tortugas shall long be held in remembrance. In the evening spoke two hours to a good audience. Collection $14.10. This whole section of the county is decidedly Anti-masonic in sentiment. This is largely due to the firmness of the Flemings, Craigs and others whose names I cannot recall. Jas. Craig's quiet liberality is well known, and the whole neighborhood deserve heaven's choice blessing.

From there we went to Ontario; spoke in the M. E. church and enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. Doolittle. Mrs. D. is sister of Mrs. Lucia Cook, whose defense against the works of darkness should form a part of the history of Elkhart county. Thence to Fleck's school house; audience good and collection liberal; and after seeing Uncle Richard home I continued my work. Stopped with a great Anti-mason, who had more sheep than zeal, and more barn than moral courage. I left him more interested in torturing a rat than he was in me or the cause I represented. I, however, spoke in his school house, which was crowded, and, contrary to his prophecy, had excellent order. In all I lectured nine times in the county, and was well pleased with the treatment I received. There are more friends to our cause in Lagrange county than any other I have been in, considering that the subject has not been discussed publicly to any extent. I hope the friends will not forget the importance of having a general meeting in the county, and I will be with them if spared, and if possible have Mr. Stoddard with us.

I go the coming week to Whitley county, thence to Union county. Friends, keep me busy. This is the best time to work I have seen in two years. Keep the ball rolling. Shout for victory. Yours truly,

S. L. Cook.

P. S.—I urgently request every subscriber to the Cynosure in the State to write me a letter. Let us get acquainted; open the way for lecturers; make any suggestions you see fit in regard to the work.

From Whitley County, Ind.

Editor Cynosure:—I desire to place before your readers a circumstance which took place at a school house lecture here in this part of Whitley county. Dr. Cook, of Albian, delivered a lecture at Buck's Crossing school house, which made the most prominent members of the "white-aproned" fraternity just angry enough to get their minds confused, and they have committed themselves by bearing the strongest testimony to the Doctor's speech. The Doctor dwelt upon the subject as a heathenish system of religion, a selfish system of benevolence, and as a lying system of truthfulness. In closing his remarks he gave the grand hailing sign of distress, and some other signs, after which one of the white-aproned brothers asked him how he knew so much. The Doctor called upon him or any other Mason, of whom there were quite a number present, to deny the correctness of his statements and the signs given. Silence was the only response, which we think had a salutary effect upon the audience.

An Odd-fellow present, after the lecture declared that it was his privilege to be such. Everybody here seems to be afraid to speak against the lodge. They stand in terror. This should not be; for if an Anti-mason should disappear mysteriously when placed under the care of a Masonic physician, his friends should not fail to know whether he had been Morganized; and if he should disappear when from home, so that his body could not be found, there should be erected to his memory a graveless monument.

Correspondence.

How it Works.

Dear Cynosure:—I wish to report for your columns an instance under my own eye illustrating how Masonry, serpent-like, gains and holds power in Christian congregations, especially such as are presided over by weak, worldly-minded or Masonic pastors.

A "General Council" Lutheran pastor not long since made an earnest appeal, in the form of a sermon, to his congregation to induce them to use the responsive service of their "Church Book." The importance of the service was urged and objections to its use answered, especially the abuse of it by the Romish church, when the people were told that while this service could not be forced upon them, still its use was expected of them as Lutherans. This expectation has existed for a long time and is likely to exist for years to come unless the Masonic lodge advises its representatives in congregation to take hold of the that matter. When Masons, Odd-fellows, saloonists and such like are admitted to church fellowship and the holy communion without evidence of repentance, or being required first to leave their dens of vice; when the minister freely mingles with such men in their haunts of sin and places of business or on the streets, Christians tremble in view of the consequences. Our conclusion was that the lodge had gained power over pastor and flock, and so it turned out. The poor man himself no doubt had this in his mind when on one occasion he said to a fellow minister, "I see a disposition in my congregation to control me and I won't stand it."

But when a man is "cable-towed" with a heavy majority against him how can he help himself? Should he make an effort to cleanse the Lord's house of foresworn deists and their minions, then he knows very well that "the power behind the throne," "in the East," will oust him from his pulpit, and then bread and butter are gone. He has warmed the viper into life and now it shows him its fangs. On these sins he is gagged and cannot "speak out as a man should speak." Discipline is impossible. He is in the fix of the school master who was asked how he managed to satisfy parents who believe "that the earth is round" and those who "believe it is flat." "Well," he said, "that is easy; I teach one set of children that it is round and the other that is flat." And so to get along without a quarrel the preacher must accommodate himself to lodge-men, saloonists and Christians. To do this effectually a common bond of union is found in the formal service of the "Church Book." Get all to respond together and the problem is solved — black and white, blue and grey are in one happy family. Deluded people!

But perhaps I have said enough for the present. Let Christians think on the above in connection with what St. Paul says, 1 Cor. 10: 20, 21: "I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils; ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and the table of devils.

"Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord."

The Duty of Separation.

Syracuse, N. Y.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Dear Brother:—In reading your article in the Cynosure of November 16th on the two political parties, the Democrats and Republicans, that there is no difference in them; morally speaking there is no choice. Is this statement true that the Republican party hold the same moral position in the maintaining of the government for the protection of the people, as the old Whig party did in the days of slavery, when the Whigs and Democrats each of them went for slavery and each of them was steeped in slavery. But the Constitution that some claimed supported slavery is now changed; and provides for the protection of personal liberty, and has there been nothing done by the government in this direction? Not all we should like to have seen accomplished. Some of us think we can see a wide difference between the Democratic party and the Republican party. And the Democratic party to-day, as John C. Calhoun in his day, are doing all that in them lies to carry the spirit of slavery if not slavery itself into all this country, and Romanism hitched to it to cap the climax. Some think to defeat the Democratic party much will be accomplished toward establishing a better state of things with the blessing of Almighty God. The overthrow of this combination of all the elements of the vile passions that possess the corrupt heart of man, will do more to save the people of this country from the corrupting influence of Masonry, and all other unholy combinations, whether secret or open. Is not the Ku-klux, White League and the shot gun policy in league with this party, and why not keep them from the control of the government if possible?

The authority says: "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God. But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a busybody in other men's matters. But if a man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify God on this behalf. For the time is come when judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God. And if the righteous shall scarcely be saved where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? (1 Peter, 4: 11, 15–18.)

And now to the point, What is the house of God in a Bible sense, is it not the true followers of the meek and lowly Lamb of God; who follow him whithersoever he leadeth them.

If judgment is to begin at the house of God, ought we not to be very careful that we do not give countenance to organizations calling themselves Christian churches, at the same time doing the things that will shut individuals out of the kingdom of heaven, receiving slaveholders and their apologists or did, and would still if they could; and their doors wide open for all the oath-bound, cut-throat societies in the land, would it not be more in the way of practical Christianity to preach the doctrine of secession from all churches that practice these abominations, who are dead and twice dead and plucked up by the roots. Look at the doings of the Presbyterian Assembly in Brooklyn the past summer, in New York, and at the same time or nearly so in Savannah, Georgia; seeking for union, willing to lay by all past differences. Each it would seem had acted in all good conscience. Just as right to steal human beings and enslave them, as to employ men at wages! what an absurdity!

Would not the Cynosure accomplish much more, by religiously separating from all such churches and associations, whether ministerial or otherwise, that is, teach the duty. It looks so to me, certainly, and I think we should much sooner have a purified body of Christian believers and political parties that would be acting in accordance with the true principles of civil government. Yours for the truth as it is in Jesus, M. Merrick.

Note.—If Bro. Merrick will read the article referred to more carefully he will see that he has misunderstood it. If he can explain how the Republican party, as at present organized, can save the country from the despotism of the lodge, he is wiser than many men. Nobody doubts that there is a wide difference between the two leading parties in their distinctive principles, else there are several million citizens who have very foolishly been fighting a man of straw through a protracted and bitter campaign. It is not clear, however, how we can join the Republican party and its Masonic leaders in order to put down Democrats without falling athwart Bro. Merrick's doctrine of separation, which seems to us just as good, so far as it goes, in politics as in religion. In its application to the latter our position is too well known, we hope, to allow any misapprehension; nor is it necessary to turn over the Cynosure to any particular denomination in order to enforce by precept and example the great truth of separation. We believe the churches of Jesus Christ would be vastly more powerful if some of the present denominational bars were taken out to strengthen the fence all around against the assaults of the world, the flesh and the devil.

The Odd-fellows of Covington, Ky., again Snubbed by the Masons.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—You will doubtless recollect the substance of an article I sent you, last summer, concerning the Odd-fellows of Covington, Ky.; how they yearned, pranced about and ogled to divide honors (?) with the Masons in the matter of the corner-stone ceremonials over the new postoffice building, which transpired there on the 4th of July last; and how, to their great grief, consternation, chagrin, and disappointment, they were coolly left out of the government invitation to participate. Well it frequently so happens, that in the course of human events misfortunes do not come single handed; and this observation was never more true than in the case of the Odd-fellows of Covington, Ky., who have just experienced another wet blanket thrown upon the fires of their fraternal feelings by the Covington Masons. It appears a man by the name of Truman, both an Odd-fellow and a Mason, recently died there, after many months of serious illness, during all of which period of time, outside of his own immediate family assistance, he had been solely provided and cared for by the Covington Odd-fellows; the Masons of that, place, true to their brotherly instincts, and consonant to their time-honored principles of unbounded charity and universal benevolence, not contributing one cent toward his support or relief, or toward that of his impoverished and distressed family. Yet, in the face of this shameful dereliction of duty, and with that bold, devil-like effrontery peculiar to the Masonic institution, these Covington Masons deliberately marched down to Mr. Truman's house, took exclusive possession of his body, without so much as saying, "By your leave, sir," and with an air of conscience-approving rectitude carried it off to the final resting place of the dead, and there deposited it with the honors peculiar to Masonry, leaving their stool-pigeon friends, the Covington Odd-fellows, to sulk and imprecate to their hearts' content at this, to them, unexpected aud sudden turn of affairs. To add to the weight of their grievances the Odd-fellows were prohibited from performing any of their funeral rites over the body of Mr. Truman! Of course this snub has set the Odd-fellow pot in Covington furiously boiling; but the superabundant heat will soon pass off in bubbles of thin air, and shortly nothing more will be thought or said about it. Yet, I cannot help remarking, were snubs and insults like these more frequently and generally heaped upon the Odd-fellow fraternity by the Masonic organization, such conduct could not fail in eventually and fully opening the eyes of many Odd-fellows to the miserable stool-pigeon character which their institution really bears in its relation to its more powerful rival, the Masonic organization. Their eyes once opened, reasonable hopes might be entertained that they would finally and forever abandon their childish and futile institution, and lend their aid and voice in destroying that master device of the devil, called Ancient Craft Masonry. That this desideratum may become an accomplished fact, in God's own good time, is the sincere prayer of

J. H. H. Woodward.

Reply to Rev. E. W. Wheeler.

Pataskala, O., Feb. 7, 1877.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—In your paper of the 25th ult. appears an article from Bro. Wheeler, to which I object. He says:

"But it is a mistake to suppose that I either endorse or in any way help the cause of Masonry by being a member of a church that has no rule, and as yet has taken no action against Masonry. On the contrary, I am enabled to act directly against the institution, by holding the torch of truth immediately before the eyes of Masonic ministers in public places, and they have to see it. No, dear brethren, let us not throw away vantage ground. Are you a Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, or a member of any church which allows its members to be Masons? Stay where you are and hold up your Anti-masonic light."

Is the above teaching in harmony with Bible teaching? I think not. If it is, then we who are members of churches that will not receive Masons are laboring to great disadvantage; and we should, in order to gain Bro. Wheeler's "vantage ground," withdraw from our churches that occupy false and anti-scriptural ground, and at once unite with a church that allows its ministers and members to be Masons.

Dear brethren of Anti-masonic churches, we have a great work to do. Instead of wasting our strength in fighting Masonry from our false standpoint, we must go to work and reform our churches, remove every barrier that keeps Masons from our communion, get all the Masons that we can to unite with our churches, in order that we may "act directly against the institution, by holding the torch of truth immediately before the eyes of Masonic ministers."

If Bro. Wheeler's doctrine is true, then it follows that it is the duty of the church to receive all the vile, polluted, and abominable of earth, and do this in order to "hold the torch of truth immediately before their eyes." If Masons are sinners (and Bro. W. concedes this), and if they are eligible to membership, and ministerial standing in the church, why not receive every other class and grade of sinners? Adopt the above doctrine, and it puts an end to all church reform and church discipline; and instead of the church becoming the true representative of Christ, and a type of Heaven; instead of itsbecoming "a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish"—I say, instead of this, it would soon "become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." And God would say, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

Geo. Richey.

Bait.

I met a young traveler lately who thought Masonry would be a help to him in his business and enable him to find friends in strange places. I stated my own objections to that secret order, and its required oaths, which appeared a new line of thought to him as his father was a Mason, and had never said anything of that kind, and he therefore could not admit that I had correct views of Masonry. He reported to his father and the reply was to tell his informant that "he (myself) knew nothing about it." So the young man is exposed to the danger ahead as surely as though an Ashtabula disaster had never happened, or as though Freemasonry had the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ for its iniquitous ceremonies, which are substitutes for the ordinances of the Christian church in thousands of cases. As surely as the fish is caught by the deceptive bait, so are our poor deluded young men lured and caught by the fearful prevalence of this substitute for Christianity which calls good evil and evil good, or of men acting as Esau, and for a temporary advantage surrendering their personal liberty for life! God help our country and our Christianity when success in life shall prompt our people to surrender that freedom for which our fathers fled from the tyrants' power to this Continent and on whose altar the noblest blood of our race here and elsewhere has been offered.

L. B. Lathrop, Hollister, Cal., writes:

"I am an old friend to the cause as life member of the Association, and a member of the California State Committee. In Hollister I stand alone, but in the truth I realize that I stand with God and more than twelve legions of angels. * * I am distributing tracts pamphlets and books. I have given three lectures. I will do any honest thing I can to help the cause, regardless of consequences to myself."

S P. Christenson, Chicago, Ill., writes:

"Sometimes we look too much to teachers and forget that the Lord has given us a tongue and voice to use. If we cannot teach them degrees in Masonry we can do what the Lord has enabled us to do, and if we would only walk in the light we have we would receive more. When the Lord has bestowed upon us good and common sense, the least we can do is to cultivate it, and by so doing be able to understand the laws of God and our duty in life. Let us who have been brought up in a Christian land, under Christian influence go to work and do as our Sunday-school teachers do; work in six days for ourselves, and for the Lord on the seventh. By so doing we would soon be able to send teachers to the heathen."

Joel Bear, Legrand, Iowa, writes:

"I have long detested all secret organizations that are for personal interest or for political power and consider them detrimental to vital religion, and cannot think of a more fit description than is given in the Epistle of Jude where it says, 'ungodly men turning the grace of God into lasciviousness.'"

Rev. Abner Orr, Cainsville, Mo., writes:

"The want of our time is organization. We must meet force with force, organization with organization Satan has organized secret societies out of the wealth and enterprise of the country. Ministers of the Gospel have been hood-winked, cable-towed—almost dragged into these orders, without charge, simply for their influence, and hence they father this offspring of Satan. To overthrow this lying, deceptive organization we must have organizations in every county, with their officers, and I would suggest that they be called Christian associations, opposed to secretism, either in church or state. "We are praying, preaching, working and lecturing amid great persecutions. The Masons are determined to destroy our bread and butter. We have received $200 in ten months for a support."

Geo. L. Mason, Newton Center, Mass., writes:

"In conversation to-day with a Royal Arch Mason, who is a member of the M. E. church in north-eastern Mass., I inquired whether in that degree they were under oath to conceal each other's secrets murder and treason not accepted? At first he evaded the question, but afterwards denied that there is anything of that nature in the oath. Thus even professed Christians delude themselves into believing that it is right to lie in order to keep from breaking a wicked oath! This man also remarked apologetically, 'I have not been in a lodge more than three times in a year.'"

David J. Davis, Earlville, Ill., writes:

"You are battling with good cause. Keep courage. There is one thing in your favor; the Lord is with you, on the side of the right every time."

Mr. S. Nesselrhode, Springhill, Kansas, writes:

"We can assure you our sympathies are with you."

S. Brink, Le Raysville, Pa., writes:

"I have been a subscriber for the Cynosure almost from the first issue. No man is truly converted to the cause who will not take such a paper."

W. K. Tippin, Clarinda, Iowa, writes:

"I have loaned your paper to all who would read it, and given it to some who read and loaned again."

Allan Simpson, Lapeer, Mich., writes:

"I would just state briefly that I, as a Christian, cannot approve of the political action of the Cynosure. I consider it a departure from Gospel principles and the Bible plan of attacking moral evil. We are told to put on the whole armor of God that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil; for we wrestle not against flesh and blood but against the powers of darkness. See Phil. vi. 11–19."

We believe that reducing the Anti-masonic reform to a mere political issue was what killed it in Morgan's time. The battle of battles in this cause is to be fought with spiritual, not carnal weapons. Our readers all understand our position as to the duty of a Christian at the ballot-box.

I. C. Weidler, Boiling Springs, Pa., writes:

"I cannot do without the Cynosure."

E. Bascom, Greensburgh, O., writes:

"The Good Templars and Sons of Temperance have had their day here and have all played out. They have got up a grange, and have built a grange hall. It is run by Masons and grangers, but I look forward to the day when that will die out too, for the light is spreading. J. R Baird delivered a course of lectures here at the Freewill Baptist house, although the Masons tried hard to hedge up his way. They were caught in their own net, and it is believed by the lovers of truth that the lectures were productive of great good . . . The many good letters in the Cynosure fill my heart with courage. They seem to be imbued with the spirit of wisdom from on high."

A. L. Post, Montrose, Pa., writes:

"I keep a file of the paper, and have for years, and do not like to miss one."

L. D. Stone, Binghampton, N. Y., writes:

"I feel fully to endorse the Cynosure's exposure of the Masonic fraternity, and all kindred associations. Its corrupting influence upon church and state are too plainly seen to be denied by an honest man. How few there are who are willing to expose their heathen worship. We need Bro Ronayne here to give us a course of lectures and an exposition, and awaken the sleepy element."

Jacob Markle, Maquoketa, Ia., writes:

"My courage is good when I know that Jesus is with us and he has all power in heaven and earth. He will give us the victory in his own time. The Cynosure is the best paper in the whole world as the word and Spirit witness to me."

Daniel Carpenter, Groton, N. Y., writes:

"I voted the American party ticket, and will again if I should live to vote again. The people are afraid of the Masons in this place."

Increase Leadbetter, Auburndale, Mass., writes:

"I read this morning in Revelations 7th chapter, of that multitude in white which no man could number, and a comforting reflection came from the answer to the question, 'Whence came they?' amidst ten thousand differences in other matters that they every one 'Came out of great tribulation.'"

A friend writes:

"Please do not give me the title 'D.D.' I am a Roger Williams sort of a Baptist, and believe the title 'Doctor of Divinity' to be 'popish and vaunting' as he expresses it, the many names of great and good men to the contrary bearing it notwithstanding Excuse my plainness. I think it is too Masonic in its character for Christian ministers.

W. T. Wilson, Long Run, Pa., writes:

"I notice in your issue of January 4, that Rev. J. L. Grove reports one vote for the American ticket in West Franklin township, Armstrong Co., Pa. One vote was cast for it in this (Kiskiminetas) township, and yet the official returns give this ticket credit with but one vote in the county. How is this? Are U. P.'s so insignificant that it takes two of us to cast one vote? There are a few earnest opponents of secret orders in this community, but the masses are either controlled by them or indifferent."

Theo. Osgood's address is given in our issue of January 4th, Bedford, Calhoun Co., Mich. It should be Monroe county.

Wm. A. Bartlett, El Paso, Ill., writes:

"The result of the American party vote, taking into consideration the peculiar circumstances, is far better than I anticipated, and although small in the aggregate, yet when gathered together they seem to form a little cloud as large as a man's hand that gave an abundance of rain. However insignificant the outlook of this campaign may look to the opposers of this reform, it seems to me it can but inspire every true man to gird himself anew for the reform, 'with the weapons that are not carnal but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds' even those that are thought be held secure by Mahha-bone, pressing forward, not turning to the right or left, but looking forward to certain victory which will surely come in God's time, which is the best time, for which may the lovers of truth make unceasing prayer to God for its accomplishment, nothing doubting."

No one has occasion to feel panic-stricken who fights for God. Every fugitive from duty will find out sooner or later that there was no reason for his flight. Men lose heart because they look at their own weakness and not God's strength. Elijah fled because he reasoned that Elijah could not alone oppose Jezebel and all the power she controlled. He did not think of what God could do through Elijah. Ex. 4: 10-12; Job 9: 4; Is. 45: 9; 46: 10; Jer. 1: 9; Luke 21: 15; Acts 6: 10; 9: 15; 1 Cor. 1: 25.

What doest thou here? is God's question to all those who, from lack of faith, or from dejection, or from indifference, have run away from the conflict, and are nursing their gloom alone by themselves. It is unchristian to avoid the issues of life. "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." Ps. 119: 45; Matt. 7: 21; 12: 50; Luke 11: 28; John 8: 31, 32; 13: 17; 14: 15 23; 15: 14; Rom. 2: 13; Jas. 1: 22-25; 1 John 2: 24; 5 3.

It is well for us that our lives are not a series of constant successes. If they were we should cease to be humble, and would never learn the lesson that when we are weak then are we strong. "Lest I should be exalted above measure, through the abundance of the revelations, there was given me a thorn in the flesh." Ps. 143: 2; Is. 64 6, Luke 17: 10: John 15: 5-16; Rom. 3: 27; 1 Cor. 2: 3-5; 3: 7; 9: 16; 2 Cor. 4: 7; 12: 7 9; Phil, 4; 13.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

LESSON NOTES.—8. Meat: Food. Forty days: On the same mountain Moses had twice fasted for the same length of time (Ex. 24: 18; 34: 28), and in another wilderness Christ did the same (Matt. 4: 2). Mount of God: See Ex. 3: 1. 9. Cave: Tradition says the same in which Moses was hidden when God's glory was revealed to him. What doest thou here? A rebuke of his timidity. Compare the question with Gen. 3: 8, 9. 10. Jealous: Zealous, careful of God's honor. 11. The Lord passed by: As in the case of Moses in the same mountain. Ex. 33: 21-2; 34: 36. 13. Wrapped his face: In token of reverence. Came a voice: The voice of Jehovah: perhaps the "still small voice." 18. Seven thousand: Many thousands. Seven is the sacred and perfect number, and may mean many. Not kissed him: It was an ancient custom to adore idols by kissing them, or by kissing the hand to them. Compare the modern Romish custom of kissing the toe of the Pope.—Scholar's Quarterly.

LESSONS.

The best men are imperfect. Even "Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are."

The path of duty is the only path of comfort. As soon as Elijah forsook his post he became unhappy, and God chides him for his course, vs. 9, 13 and 15.

Pride causes spiritual darkness. This was one of the prophet's difficulties, vs. 10, 14.

Observe the cure for despondency. It is difficult to mention a single remedy that is not enumerated here.

Learn the evidence of God's presence—not display or noise, or slavish fear, but the truth, commending itself to every man's conscience, and love, which is the fulfilling of the law, vs. 11, 12.

We should not be too much affected by appearances in religious work. The prophet was unduly discouraged, v. 18; others may be unduly elated.

Learn to hope in the darkest hour. This sometimes just precedes the day, v. 17.

Learn the value of solitude. Elijah's visit to Horeb was overruled for great blessing.—Evangelical Repository.

BIBLE COMMENTARY.

And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread nor drink water.—Ex. 34: 28; Deut. 9: 18. And Jesus being full of the Holy Ghost, returned from Jordan and was led by the Spirit into the wilderness, being forty days tempted of the devil. And in those days he did eat nothing—Luke 4: 1, 2.

And he led the flock to the back side of the desert and came to the mountain of God, even to Horeb.—Ex. 3: 1.

And It shall come to pass, while my glory passeth by, that I will put thee in a cleft of the rock, and will cover thee with my hand while I pass by.—Ex 33: 22. They wandered in deserts and in mountains and in dens and caves of the earth. Heb. 11: 38. And Obadiah took an hundred prophets and hid them by fifty in a cave.—1 Ki. 18: 4. I must be about my Father's business.—Luke 2: 49. Be ready to every good work.—Titus 3: 1.

Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, hath turned my wrath away from the children of Israel while he was zealous for my sake among them.—Num. 25: 11. See Rom. 11: 3. There is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few.—1 Sam. 14: 6.

And the Lord passed by before him.—Ex. 34: 6. And the sight of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire on the top of the mount.—Ex. 24: 17. Behold a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire infolding itself.—Ez. 1: 4. A fire shall devour before him and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. Ps. 50: 3. The earth did quake and the rocks rent.—Matt. 27: 51. For the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace.—Gal. 5: 22.

And Moses hid his face; for he was afraid to look upon God.—Ex 3: 6.

See verse 19. And Elisha the prophet called one of the children of the prophets and said unto him....go to Ramoth-gilead: and....look out there Jehu.—2 Kings 9: 1-10, And Elisha answered: The Lord hath showed me that thou shalt be king over Syria.—2 Kings 8: 7-13.

And he delivered them into the hand of Hazael....all their days.—2 Kings 13: 3.

Let the men that sacrifice kiss the calves.—Hos. 13: 2. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry and ye perish from the way.—Ps. 2: 12.

The Interpolations.

Several times lately our young Sabbath-school teachers and pupils have come to us with the question, What do these interpolations mean which are spoken of in our Sunday-school papers? It is to be feared that some of the writers, who are giving weekly comments in the papers on the lessons of the International Series, are unconsciously doing some damage by calling attention to the interpolations. They violate a good rule which they have laid down elsewhere in these papers for teachers, "Never to raise doubts or suggest difficulties of their own accord, for the pupils themselves will do enough of that."

Now we can see no good reason why anything should be said to children, one way or another, about interpolated passages. It only serves to unsettle or disquiet the minds of the young to call their attention to the fact that those texts are disputed or rejected from the Bible by the critics. Mr. Moody, and other popular evangelists, even in addressing the adult mind in promiscuous assemblies, do not find it necessary to raise any question about such passages, much less to discuss their merits before the public. If this is a good rule for an adult popular audience, made up of all classes, much more should it apply to the young. The point of objection we make is not about the interpolations themselves, whether right or wrong, but that the Sabbath-school is not the proper place to discuss, and that there is no need of calling the attention of the children to them. Let such questions be left to the learned critical commentaries, and to the lecture room of the Theological Seminary. For our own part, we have felt that the whole business of interpolated passages has been much overdone by the critics. Some have carried this destructive criticism so far as to reject whole books from the sacred canon. When it comes to that, we can not believe there is much dependence to be placed upon their decisions, when they tell us that certain isolated texts have been interpolated, and thus added to our received version.—Interior.

The pupil dilates in the night, and at last finds day in it; even so the soul dilates in misfortune, and at last finds God in it.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEB. 15, 1877.

Shall we Hear the Scribes and Pharisees?

I say unto you that except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven. Matt. 5: 20.

Mr. Israel Gable, Stewartstown, York county, Pa., writes us that "A Methodist Episcopal minister contended that we have no right to leave the Christian church because the preacher don't do right. He referred me to the Scripture where Christ spake to his disciples saying: 'The Scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses' seat; all therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do, but do ye not after their works, for they say and do not.' "

Mr. Gable asks how this teaching of Christ is to be reconciled with his command to "come out from" and to "be separate" from sinners, etc.? And shall Christians, under this ruling of Christ, continue to hear and support adhering Masons in the pulpit?

We answer: When Christ commended the woman for supporting the temple service with her mites; and commanded the people to hear the scribes and Pharisees who had made that temple a "house of merchandise" and a "den of thieves;" a Jew had to do one of three things, viz.: Go to hear those scribes and Pharisees; or renounce all visible acts of religion; or turn pagan.

As the Saviour was no "come-outer," and as paganism was devil-worship, he told the honest people to do the only thing possible for them consistent with a good conscience, viz., to attend on the worship of the true God; hear and obey what sound teaching they could get there; and, at the same time to stand square, as he did, against the wicked lives and ungodly practices of their religious teachers. We must do the same, when in the same circumstances. We must go to meeting to a professedly orthodox church, though a scribe is in the pulpit who is sworn into and adheres to the secret infamies and rascalities of the lodge.

But, by the mercy of God we are not situated as those Jews were. Their's was then the only temple of the true God on earth. But in his words to the woman at the well of Sychar, Christ repealed the law of the local temple, saying the time had then come when "neither in that mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem" should men worship the Father, but everywhere on earth God could be worshipped in spirit and in truth.

I therefore would not hear a preacher whom, I knew, to be sworn to conceal the crimes of Freemasons, if given him as secrets; and who, of course, can not worship God either "in spirit" or "in truth" till he repents, nor assist others to do so.

But only think, reader of the Cynosure, of a Methodist preacher claiming hearers for Masonic ministers on the ground that the scribes and Pharisees were to be heard, who were, by Christ's own words to the people, declared to be in the road to hell! What must such a preacher think of himself.

Trading on Baptist Reputation.

The Freemasons of Indian Territory are working hard to get up a "Grand Lodge" of such proportions as to be visible by the magnifiers of other "grand bodies" and so be "recognized" technically and officially. For two years they have held a so-called Grand Lodge and yet their efforts are not blessed. They have now it seems a new plan. The "Grand Lecturer" which officer is general organizer of lodges and is responsible largely for their increase in number, is this year Rev. J. S. Murrow, a Baptist missionary agent for the Chickasaw nation. His case was presented in these columns a few weeks ago. The Masonic Jewel of Memphis, Tenn., notices the proceedings of the lodge in the Territory. The record of the Grand Lodge is published by the Southern Baptist Publication Society of Memphis, an indication of Murrow's agency; and his work as Lecturer is also spoken of as saying that he has examined all the lodges of the Territory and finds their work better on an average than in many of the States. A correspondent writes that the Grand Lecturer and Baptist missionary is now organizing lodges of the "Eastern Star" among the women of the Territory. He did not succeed in Atoka, his own town where he was best known but in other places where his reputation as missionary agent has gone he is establishing lodges and selling his gewgaws. He has also bought a newspaper concern and is now with Grand Master McPherson running the Star and Vindicator at McAllister, and expects to get missionary aid for the journal as a Baptist organ. Have not the Standard the Baptist Weekly or the National Baptist something to say or do in vindication of the Baptist honor against such transactions?

One Hundred Thousand Pages of Free Tracts.—Enoch Honeywell, of Altay, N. Y., writes that he will pay for another lot of 50,000 of his two excellent tracts. Although a man of more than four score years he is yet abundant in good works, thus verifying the promise that the righteous shall bring forth fruit in old age. He also adds: "My grandson of nineteen has by appointment just delivered an oration on Masonry before 180 students in the chapel of Cook Academy, Schuyler Co., N. Y., on the evening of Jan. 29th. I think he will make his mark in the world on the right side."

A "Sublime Prince" and the Interior.

Under the title "Christianity and Freemasonry" a Freemason, signing himself "Kadosh," writes a long article to the Interior taking Mr. Moody to task for his testimony against the lodge. Without commenting at present on this letter, for most of our readers are well enough informed in regard to his argument to judge of them, and especially since Mr. Moody's plain, honest words have been several times published, it is sufficient to print the main part of the letter and the editor's remarks thereon. The writer asks for a hearing in behalf "of the many thousands of Presbyterian Freemasons" who believe in the order and proceeds:

"While I believe most heartily in the truth as revealed and taught in the Bible and as explained and unfolded in the standards of the Presbyterian church, viz., that the only name under heaven given among men whereby I can be saved is the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and hope and expect to be saved only by reason of the sacrifice on Calvary, yet I am also a Freemason, a lover of the royal art, one who has penetrated its deepest recesses, learned something of its teachings, wrought in its quarries and administered at its altars in all the degrees known to Masonry save one, consciously aiming to do nothing that could derogate from, always endeavoring to promote, the honor and glory of that ineffable name, which is the hope and trust of every good Christian.

"I do not purpose to vindicate Freemasonry. It needs no vindication at my hands. Its career of beneficence from time immemorial, 'pouring comfort and consolation into the hearts of the distressed, the afflicted, the destitute,' helping the poor, counseling the erring and striving to win all its votaries to active service in the cause of all that is just, right and true, vindicate its right to be, and challenge the respect and emulation of every other institution engaged in the good work of promoting the best interests of mankind.

"My desire is to protest against the intolerance — heretofore confined to the Roman Catholic church and two or three branches of the Protestant church — that would deny church fellowship to members of a secret order, for no other reason than such membership. I regret that recently Mr. Moody has seemingly given the weight of his influence to that injustice, and the Interior, from his remarks, infers that the time approaches when all the evangelical churches will array themselves in support of this principle, i. e., that Freemasons cannot consistently hold fellowship in a church. Alas! is it come to this? Is the active, vital religious sentiment of this age to ally itself with, and incorporate into itself the intolerant spirit that would say to the thousands upon thousands of Christian Freemasons, Odd-fellows, etc., depart we are holier than you? Is not this the spirit of Phariseeism that was so obnoxious to our Lord when on earth? Whom did he denounce most soundly but those who arrogated to themselves all the godliness of that age — those neglecters of the weightier matters of mercy and justice and benevolence? And where in all God's Word do you find one word in reproof of the sect of the Essenes, the representatives of the Freemasonry of that age?

"Now it seems to me that the position that Mr. Moody here assumes, is singularly inconsistent with his whole course in the past, that it is singularly unjust to the thousands of Christians in these different secret societies, who are laboring actively in the same cause to which his life is devoted, who are working with him, praying for his success and giving of their means that the great end of his labors may be attained. Singularly unwise, this utterance seems to me, for its probable effect upon the hundreds of thousands of Masons and other secret order men in this land, in thus serving notice on them in advance, that 'separate' is the pass-word into his church and however willing and ready they might be to come over onto his side and receive the Lord Jesus Christ as their only Saviour, they can only do so by sacrificing all their old associations, however harmless and beneficent they may conscientiously judge them to be. Mr. Moody has in the past shown great wisdom and tact in avoiding antagonism to any class, and joining battle only with Satan and his works, and no good man had any reason to say aught against him or his work, and it will certainly be a great grief to multitudes to learn that in his judgment the purity of the church requires that they be cut off, and that thereby many better men would be gained. And by what process, pray, would this great good be wrought out? Is the mere fact that certain Christians of greater or less prominence in the church are members of secret societies, a hindrance to others coming to Christ? This is the inference. Does Mr. Moody believe this? * * *

"Will it not be better for the religious teachers of the present day to imitate the toleration which is a cardinal virtue in Freemasonry; and instead of repelling men by denunciation or harsh judgment of them for their connection with what they hastily believe to be innocent and beneficent, rather seek to win them to the church and the pure faith of the gospel, by showing them by example and by precept that there is a better way; proving to them that the light which every Mason is seeking for — from first to last — is found only in Jesus Christ; that he is that "True Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

INTERIOR'S REPLY.

* * * That Masonry is a religious system, exceeding every other in the impressive character of its religious rites and ceremonials, and that it offers salvation through the practice of its rites and precepts, is an indisputable fact. If salvation can come to the soul through the channels of the morality taught by Masonry, then there is no need for the Christian religion. The objection we make to it is that it teaches salvation without Christ, and is therefore anti-Christian. It quite as fully meets the religious aspirations of the soul as Romanism or Buddhism does, but it does not meet them in the only way that is acceptable to the Author of the soul and of immortality. We do not believe that a man can win heaven by the practice of morals, nor even of the highest Christian virtues. On the contrary, we think that the purest moralist and even the truest Christian, is the heaviest debtor to God—in debt to violated justice, and in debt for the gifts of grace, so that there is no salvation for him but in the sacrifice of Christ. All this is in antagonism to theoretical Masonry, hence we are constrained to oppose Masonry. We do not dispute our contributor's propositions. We are quite ready to admit that no other religious system aside from Christianity, stands so high in the character of its membership, and in the charity and fraternal love which prevails among them, and in the purity and elevation of its moral and social principles. But we are not going to direct people in the wrong road because of the beauty of its scenery and the gentleness of its grades. There are hundreds of good Christian people who differ with us on this subject, and we respect them while we oppose them.

—In the article by the General Agent upon the finances last week a mistake in figures occurred in summing up. The balance in the treasury Jan. 1st, should have been $79.65, or including the Publishing House Fund $80.03.

—Our Indiana readers will please notice a word in season to them by friend Salmon of Larwill. We earnestly second the call, for your lecturer needs your help in this direction. We do not know of any arrangement on the part of the State Association for Brother Cook's salary, so that funds can be sent directly to him. If there were, the State Treasurer, Brother Rich, would be the proper person to receive them. Our Illinois friends need some admonition in the same way. Don't forget to pray and pay for your State lecturers.

—The Temperance Reform clubs of the State of Illinois, will hold a State Delegate Temperance Reform club convention, in the city of Freeport, Illinois, commencing on Tuesday, Feb. 20th, at 10 o'clock A. M., and continuing three days. Delegates, representing the Reform clubs of the State, will be entertained free of cost by the citizens of Freeport.

—The General Agent was in Indiana last week, and reports the friends all well pleased with the arrangements in connection with the Publishing House. Dr. Booth has arranged for his presence and aid at a debate on the principles of Freemasonry, at Crestline, Ohio, next Monday and Tuesday evenings, the 19th and 20th insts. Two champions of the lodge have agreed to meet the Doctor and Bro. Stoddard, and if they are foemen worthy of our tried Anti-masonic steel, an interesting time is in store for the good people of Crestline.

—To follow this debate Dr. Booth is planning wisely for the interests of the city over which he is Mayor. He proposes that Past Master Ronayne take up the discussion where the disputants leave it, and give the final blow to what is left of Freemasonry in Crestline.

—The Queen's dominions were invaded last week by Bro. Ronayne, and the Masons of Plattsville, Ontario, stormed in their lodge and driven out. The vicinity was greatly aroused, and came from twenty miles about to be at the "death of Hiram." We have heard of some amusing features connected with this course of meetings, and expect a report for our readers next week.

—Bro. Hinman returned from a very satisfactory trip to Iowa last week. On Thursday he assisted in organizing a county society at Ames, Story county, of which the officers are: Jer. Presnall, President; J. Harrison, Vice-president; Jas. Green, Secretary.

—We learn that the Y. M. C. A. of Chicago propose publishing a tract against secretism which shall not hurt anybody's feelings. We shall be glad to see this enterprise begun by the Association, only let them speak the truth, and honor Christ and the Holy Spirit, and let people's "feeling" take care of itself.

—The York, Pa., papers lately published the fact of the final dissolution of fifteen or twenty Good Templar lodges in the county during the past ten years, only one remaining. This is encouraging news to friend Chalfant, who has stood against the encroachments of the lodge in that locality almost alone for years. His tract-sowing is silently bearing fruit.

—A subscriber objects to our comparison of Freemasonry with Popery in late numbers of the paper. The ablest presentation of the similarity of these two institutions we have lately read were by one who had been connected with both and studied their character from favorable standpoints, thus making his opinion of the two of great weight since he now receives "light" from God only through his Spirit and Word.

Larwill, Ind., Feb. 8, 1877.

To the Friends of Reform in Indiana:

There must be a better support to our work in this State. Dr. Cook is doing hard and faithful service for us. No man in the State has ever fought the powers of darkness with more zeal and effect than he has, and yet there is no system or provision for his support. With few exceptions he gets scarcely anything now. I propose that every subscriber to the Cynosure in the State send him a dollar between this and the first of March, and those who can send more do so, and in places where there are only one or two subscribers let them speak to other friends to contribute what they feel willing to and forward it. This will enable him to continue his work, a work so much needed, a work that must be done. Friends do not neglect this. You can send it by mail. Do not let the work stop for so small an amount. Dr. Cook has often to neglect appointments for want of means to reach them. Let us show our faith by our works. Yours in best bonds. B. B. Salmon.

Two persons were once disputing so loudly on the subject of religion that they awoke a big dog, which had been sleeping on the hearth before them, and he forthwith barked most furiously. An old divine present, who had been quietly sipping his tea while the disputants were talking, gave the dog a kick, and exclaimed: "Hold your tongue, you silly brute! You know no more about it than they do."

An old Hindoo who, through the good influence of missionary teaching, had become a Christian, first had a Bible given him, and afterward he was presented with a clock. "The clock tells me how time goes, and the Bible will teach me how to spend it," said the old man.

"The object of this Association is:—

"To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the Churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption"

To carry on this work contributions are solicited from every friend of the reform to aid the Association in either of these ways: (1) to establish a Publishing House and Head-quarters in Chicago; (2) to carry on the general work; (3) to maintain the State agents. All donations, (drafts or P. O. orders) should be sent to the Treasurer; general correspondence, etc., direct to the Corresponding Secretary

Form of Bequest.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of——dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be a sufficient discharge.

The Home Circle.

The Dawn of Redemption.

See them go forth like the floods of the ocean,
Gathering might from each mountain and glen;
Wider and deeper the tide of devotion
Rolls up to God from the bosom of men:
Hear the great multitude mingling in chorus,
Groan as they gaze from their crimes to the sky,
"Father, the midnight of death gathers o'er us;
When will the dawn of redemption draw nigh?

"Look on us wanderers, sinful and lowly,
Struggling with grief and temptations below;
Thine is the goodness o'er everything holy,
Thine is the mercy to pity our woe;
Thine is the power to cleanse and restore us
Spotless and pure as the angels on high;
Father, the midnight of death gathers o'er us;
When will the dawn of redemption draw nigh?"

Gray hair and golden youth, matron and maiden,
Lovers of mammon and followers of fame,
All with the same solemn burden are laden,
Lifting their souls to that one mighty Name:
"Wild is the pathway that surges before us,
On the broad waters the black shadows lie;
Father, the midnight of death gathers o'er us:
When will the dawn of redemption draw nigh?"

Lo! the vast depths of futurity's ocean
Heave with the pulse of the Infinite breath;
Why should we shrink from the billows' commotion?
Jesus is walking the waters of death.
Angels are blending their notes in the chorus,
Rising like incense from earth to the sky:
"Father, the billows grow brighter before us;
Heaven, with mansions eternal draws nigh."

The Captain and the Stevedore.

There has been a revival of some weeks in one of our suburban churches. Near the church lived what you would call, in Cincinnati, a boss drayman, but here he is called a stevedore. It is his business to superintend the loading of vessels. This man seldom went to church, but his only child went to the Sabbath School. During the special meetings the child wanted to go, and persuaded his father to take him. The father was interested, awakened, converted. He became a working Christian. A few days after his conversion he was in the hold of an English ship, loading it with wheat, when the Captain came down the companion-way, leading his little daughter, of whom he was very fond, by the hand. Something displeased him, and he began to swear. The stevedore replied mildly, explaining what he was doing, but the Captain only cursed and swore more bitterly. That day they finished loading the ship. As the converted stevedore came up on deck he saw the Captain standing there, with his daughter again beside him. He went to him, reported the loading finished, and then added: "Captain, may I say a word to you as we part?" "Certainly." "Captain, you love this little daughter. She has often heard you swear; but has she ever heard you pray?" The Captain started as if a serpent had stung him. His face flushed; then his eyes moistened, and he replied: "No, sir, she never has; but, God helping me, she shall to-night." The stevedore bowed and went away.

That night, in the prayer meeting, he mentioned the case of the Captain, and asked our prayers in his behalf. He believed that God's Spirit was striving with him, and that he would be brought to Christ. A week or more passed. The day came for the English ship to sail. Her anchor was weighed, her canvas was being unfurled, and the tug was steaming up to tow her out to the Golden Gate. Our stevedore was loading another ship at the dock. He looked with deep and sad interest at these preparations for departure. He longed to know whether the Captain was going to sail with prayer or curses on his lips. At length a boat was let down from the davits of the departing vessel. The Captain sprang into it. It was rowed to the dock. The Captain came directly to the ship that was being loaded, sought the stevedore, and grasped his hand, saying: "I could not sail without coming to thank you for what you said to me that day about praying. It has been a great blessing to me, and may God bless you for it."

How easily that plain, laboring man, might have excused himself from speaking to that profane sea-captain. How natural the temptation to believe that he would get only curses for his pains. But when God's Spirit impelled him to do it, and he did it in the Spirit of Christ, with that tact which the Master will give to those who ask him, how wonderful the result! We all have too little faith in this matter of personal expostulation and appeal. If we have an opportunity to speak to a man alone about his soul, and do it kindly, he will seldom take offense. And even when he does, his anger may be the surest evidence that he is resisting the Spirit of God; and our appeal may be used by the Spirit to show him the evil of his heart, and to bring him to the foot of the cross.—Cal. Cor. Herald and Presbyter.

How to Invest Your Money.

For the ten per cent. of the population who can lay up money we would make a few suggestions. The best investment of all is, in the health, intelligence and religion of your family. Let nothing be wanting in the shape of wholesome food, comfortable clothing and lodging and healthy exercise, to secure a good constitution for children. Let nothing be wanting either in the family, or in church, Sunday-school or day school privileges, to secure well cultivated and trained minds. These are investments that no board of directors can make away with, and no robber can approach.

The next investment is, to lay out gains judiciously in your business. Whether it be farming, manufacturing, or store-keeping, buy every thing for cash as soon as you can; and have every needed or paying improvement made. Let merchants, mechanics, etc., invest as soon as they have a surplus, in a dwelling house of their own, with a plot of ground. It is a wonderful advantage for children to have a homestead which they can ornament, and to which they can look back with pleasure in after life. Let this be free from debt, however, as soon as possible, as a mortgaged home is a continual source of anxiety.

A father who has a family well trained for time and eternity, and a goodly treasure laid up in heaven in the shape of liberal gifts to the Lord's cause and to the poor, need not, we think, be troubled about leaving that family to the Lord's care. Many Christians, however, think it necessary to accumulate, if they can, something to leave after them; and money so left, has often been much needed and done much good. Each case is to be decided on its merits, and according to the light and faith given.—N. Y. Witness.

Indian Theology.

The following is a synopsis of a paper recently read by Major J. W. Powell on the religious belief of the North American Indians: They believe in a system of worlds. The lower tribes have their worlds arranged horizontally or topographically. Among the higher tribes the worlds are arranged vertically or architecturally — a world or worlds below, and a world or worlds above. The sun and moon are personages. They have been subjugated. They are slaves, and are compelled to travel in appointed ways. The aurora is the dancing of ghosts. The rainbow is made of the tears of the eagle god. The thunder is the screaming of great birds. The lightning is the arrow of Taewity. Among the Pueblos the rain-god dips his brush made from the feathers of the birds of heaven, into the lakes of the skies, and sprinkles the water therefrom over the face of this world. Hence we have rain. In winter time he breaks the ice of the lakes and scatters ice dust over the earth. Hence we have snow. The theolgy of the Indians is not fetichistic, though there are many survivals from fetichism. Their gods are all animals. Some of these animals are mythical monsters — beasts with seven heads and ten horns. Some of them are daimons, or presiding spirits of places, as the spirit of a mountain or river or lake. Some of them are tutelar deities. Every family, clan and tribe has its tutelar god. Indian theology is not a degeneracy, either from monotheism, or from the polytheism of classical nations, or from that earlier polytheism where the forces and phenomena of nature were deified. The Indian religion is a development from fetichism. The Indians have three classes of priests. The first are prophets, such as Pontiac and Tecumseh. Next come the shamins or medicine men. They take charge of the religious ceremonies and practice sorcery and drive out evil spirits. The lowest class of priests consists of witches. Old woman are oftentimes transformed into witches. The Indians offer sacrifices of parts of all animals killed in the chase. They are slaves to religious observances of times and methods and absurd prohibitions. In every tribe there is a great body of story lore, that is, tales purporting to be the sayings and doings of the ancients, who they now worship as deities. Every tribe has one or more persons skilled in the relation of these stories.—Ex.

"What is all that to Me?"

The stolid indifference of Indians to things which they do not consider of vital interest to themselves, is happily illustrated in the following incident connected with the visit of Spotted Tail's troupe to Stewart's large dry goods establishment in New York. They were conducted from top to bottom through the entire establishment. At the conclusion of their tour a speech was made to them by one of the clerks, prepared for the occasion. He told them that this was the largest store of the kind in the world; that their importations were brought from the four quarters of the globe, and that the house had branches in all parts of the world; more men were employed than by any other house in existence, and Mr. Stewart was the richest man in the country. Spotted Tail paused and said: "Big house, big goods, big money, big man, heap, heap, HEAP (raising his voice with each word), but what is all that to me?"

How like Spotted Tail may the rich man well say, who has gained all the world and lost his own soul, "What is all that to me?"—Central Baptist.

Making Poetry.

Few men ever elaborated as he did—not even Rousseau, when he wrote over whole pages and chapters of his "Confessions," I forget how many times. Fine thoughts were never spontaneous with him, never unexpected, never unwaited for—never, certainly, till long after he had got his growth. In fact, some of the happiest passages we have seem to be engraved, letter by letter, instead of being written at once, or launched away into the stillness, like a red-hot thunderbolt. Well do I remember a little incident which occurred in Baltimore, soon after the failure of Pierpout and Lord—and Neal, when we were all dying of sheer inaction, and almost ready to hang ourselves, in a metaphorical sense, as the shortest way of scoring off with the world.

We were at breakfast—it was rather late.

"Where on earth is your good husband?" said I to Mrs. Pierpont.

"In bed, making poetry," said she.

"Indeed!"

"Yes, flat on his back, with his eyes rolled up in his head."

Soon after the gentleman himself appeared, looking somewhat the worse for the labor he had gone through with, and all the happier that the throes were over, and the offspring ready for exhibition. "Here," said he, "tell me what you think of these two lines"—handing me a paper on which was written, with the clearness and beauty of copperplate:

"Their reverend beards that sweep their bosoms, wet
With the chill dews of shady Olivet."

"Charming," said I. "And what then? What are you driving at?"

"Well, I was thinking of Olivet, and then I wanted a rhyme for Olivet; and rhymes are the rudders, you know, according to Hudibras; and then uprose the picture of the Apostles before me—their reverend beards all dripping with the dews of night"—John Neal.

Answer to Drop Word Puzzle.

So fond of dress was my cousin Lill
That to wear a dress without a frill
Would be to her a serious ill.
She had such a witty brother Phil,

That he ground out jokes for the "Daily Mill."
He wrote them all with a gray-goose quill,
From an inkstand holding half a gill,
And worked at them with a right good will.

Her father paid her dry goods bill,
And saw the money drop in the till
With many a sad regretful thrill,
While his own purse grew lighter still.

Having made her dress with style and skill,
She tripped lightly up the grassy hill
To pluck some flowers by the shady rill,
And gather a fine bouquet of dill.

Her music lay on the window sill,
Her master called in a voice quite shrill,
For her to practice, sing and drill,
If she would ever sweetly trill.

She woke one morn with an ague chill;
The doctor came with a broken thill,
And left her a homeopathic pill;
"If it did not cure it would not kill!"

Of catnip tea she drank her fill,
And what was left she chanced to spill.
Her mother sent to the nearest ville,
For a skillful nurse they called Lucille.

The Eye that Always Sees.

I remember reading of a child who was in the habit of going to an upper room, or loft, where there was a store of apples; but as she went, from time to time, to steal these apples, she met with something that greatly troubled her, for there happened to have been placed in the store-room an old oil painting. It was a large face, the eyes of which, go to what part of the room the little girl might, seemed to follow her; and they appeared to be saying to her, as she stooped down to pick up the apples, "Ah, I see you! It is very naughty. I'll tell of you. You are sure to be found out." Well, this so annoyed the little girl, from time to time, that she was determined to put a stop to this speechifying of these two great, staring eyes; so she got a small knife, or a pair of scissors, and cut them out. Ah! but there were still the two large holes in place of the eyes, and she never could look at them without thinking of the eyes, and what they used to say to her. She had put out the eyes, but she had not got rid of her conscience; nor could she. Moreover, the very means she had adopted for sinning without rebuke only served to discover her guilt; for when what had befallen the painting came to be found out, it led to such inquiries as at last to reveal the whole truth.

"Do Your Gods Love You?"

"Do your gods love you?" asked a missionary of some Indians. "The gods never think of loving," was the cheerless answer. The missionary repeated the sixteenth verse of the third chapter of John's gospel: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Read that again," asked the arrested pagan. "That is large light—read it again." A third time the blessed words were repeated, and with this emphatic response: "That is true; I feel it."—Heart Satisfaction.

Misspent Evenings.

The boy who spends an hour each evening lounging idly on the street corners, wastes in the course of a year three hundred and sixty-five precious hours, which, if applied to study, would familiarize him with the rudiments of almost any of the familiar sciences. If in addition to wasting an hour each evening he spends ten cents for a cigar, which is usually the case, the amount thus worse than wasted would pay for ten of the leading periodicals of the country. Boys, think of these things. Think of how much time and money you are wasting, and for what? The gratification afforded by the lounge on the corner or the cigar is not only temporary but positively hurtful. You can not indulge in them without seriously injuring yourselves. You acquire idle and wasteful habits, which will cling to you with each succeeding year. You may in after life shake them off, but the probabilities are that the habits thus formed in early life will remain with you to your dying day. Be warned then, in time, and resolve that as the hour spent in idleness is gone forever, you will improve each passing one and thereby fit yourself for usefulness and happiness.

Etiquette in Different Nations.

The Japanese salutes by taking the slipper off his foot. In Hindostan, one salutes a man by taking him by the beard. The king of Ternate stands during his audiences, and his subjects sit down to salute him. The inhabitants of the Phillipine Islands take your hand to do you honor, and then rub their faces with it. The Laplanders push their noses vigorously against those of the persons whom they accost. In New Guinea, when they wish you good-evening, they place green leaves on your head. The Ethiopian takes the robe of him whom he approaches and covers himself over with it as far as he can. The black kings of the African coast press the middle finger three times as a sign of salutation. The Chinese have a whole series of salutes, from merely bending the knee to complete prostration. They used formerly to repeat the salutations for forty days to the embassadors, that they might be acquainted with them before they were admitted to court. The sons of Araucania, in order to salute a venerated person, open their veins and offer him their blood to drink. At Cairo, the people say to you, "Do you perspire?" because a dry skin is considered a symptom of mortal malady. The Dutchman says, "Do you eat with an appetite?" The German says, "How do you find yourself?" The English ask each other, "How do you do?" The proud Spaniards ask each other if they hold themselves upright. The Greeks of ancient days used to accost each other by saying, "Work and prosper." The Romans simply say, "How do you go?" The Germans say, "May you live well." The Poles, "I fall at your feet." The Italians, "I kiss your hands." The Chinese, "Have you eaten your rice?" The Turks, "Salutation and health." The French, "How do you bear (or carry) yourself?" The Hebrew, "Shalom," has been copied in the Christian ritual, "May peace be with you." Some people show their admiration by hissing, while a greater number express by this only contempt. Many we have seen sit or crouch in in the presence of their superior, though in civilized life to stand is considered more polite. A European takes off his hat when before his guests; a Chinaman thinks that he honors them by clapping his hat on in their presence.

Home and Farm.

The Torture of Bearing-reins.

The severe bearing-rein, as used by coachmen generally, is nothing more nor less than horrible and needless torture to the poor suffering horse—torture while in harness and the cause of infernal maladies when he is put back into his stall for food and supposed rest. If there is one thing more opposed to natural health than another it is the increased production and then the waste of the saliva which is so necessary to the functions of the body. Who ever saw a horse in a field foaming at the mouth? Who ever saw a properly bitted hunter do so when ridden to hounds in an easy bit and obedient to a light hand? I never saw it, nor do I think any one else has seen it; therefore, to begin with, the position of the carriage horse's head, gagged with a bearing-rein out of place, and that profusion of saliva ever falling from the mouth, must show something essentially wrong. The perpetually tossing head arises from the fevered state of the poor animal, and his consequent attempts to get rid of an irritating infliction, and not from the vulgar idea of a fiery wish to be put in action. Of this I am certain, that the less artificial constraint you put into a horse's mouth the better. The less you cumber his graceful limbs with lumber in the shape of harness the better. The freer you keep his limbs and his respiratory organs the longer he will serve you and the greater will be the labor he will perform for you.—Hon. Grantley F. Berkley.

USEFUL INFORMATION.—Watch the children's feet. The following advice from the New York Evening Post is very important. Let every mother remember it: "Life-long discomfort and sudden death often come to children through the inattention or carelessness of parents. A child should never be allowed to go to sleep with cold feet; the last thing to be attended to is that the feet are dry and warm. Neglect of this has often led to a severe attack of croup, diphtheria or fatal sore throat. Always, in coming from school or entering the house from a visit or errand in rainy, muddy, or thawy weather, the child should remove its shoes, and the mother should herself ascertain whether the stockings are the least damp. If they are, they should be taken off, the feet held before the fire and rubbed with the hands till perfectly dry, and another pair of stockings and another pair of shoes put on. The reserve shoes and stockings should be put where they are good and dry, so as to be ready for use on a minute's notice."

TO CURE A COLD.—The Herald of Health says: "Upon the first indications that you have taken cold, stop eating until the cold is cured; drink freely of cold water; induce free perspiration over the entire body, either by exercise, the Turkish vapor, lamp, or hot-water bath, or wet sheet pack, followed by a tepid spray or sponging; go to bed, cover up warm, and breathe all the pure air you can. Nine cases out of ten will yield to this treatment in less than twelve hours, and the tenth one will hardly continue twenty-four hours."

SUGGESTIVE.—If men gave three times as much attention as they do to ventilation, ablution, and exercise in the open air, and only one-third as much to eating, luxury and late hours, the number of doctors, dentists and apothecaries, and the amount of neuralgia, dyspepsia, gout, fevers and consumption would be changed in a corresponding ratio.

THE HEALTHFULNESS OF LEMONS.—When people feel the need of an acid, if they would let vinegar alone and use lemon or sour apples they would feel just as well satisfied, and receive no injury. And a suggestion may not come amiss as a good plan when lemons are cheap in the market. A person should in those times purchase several dozen at once, and prepare them for use in the warm days of spring and summer, when acids, especially citric or malic, or the acids of lemons and ripe fruit are so grateful and useful. Press your hand on the lemon, and roll it back and forth briskly on the table to make it squeeze more easily; then press the juice into a bowl or tumbler—never into tin; strain out all the seeds as they give a bad taste. Remove all the pulp from the peels and boil in water — a pint to a dozen pulps to extract the acids. A few minutes' boiling is enough; then strain the water with the juice of the lemons; put a pound of white sugar to a pint of the juice; boil ten minutes; bottle it, and your lemonade is ready. Put a teaspoonful or two of this lemon sirup in a glass of water, and you have a cooling, healthful drink.

TREES IN WINTER.—A remarkable paper has recently been contributed to a German magazine by Professor Mahr, showing not only that the sap does not freeze in trees and plants which live through hard winters, but also the reason why it does not freeze. He says that though it is true water, as we generally see and understand it, freezes at thirty-two degrees, it does not do so when its particles are finely divided. Tropical plants have large cells, and these are the ones in which the sap freezes, but in plants with very small cells in which the liquid particles are finely divided, there is no freezing of the liquids until after the structure has received injury of some sort. This is true, he says, of insects and insect pupæ. They never freeze; but cut one apart, soon after the humors solidify, and, on thawing, life dies.

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

THE "PRECIOUS BLOOD."

The subject to-night will be "The Precious Blood." I want to call your attention first to the second chapter and sixteenth verse of Genesis: "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree in the garden thou mayest freely eat: But the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." There cannot be a law without a penalty. There is not a law in our land without a penalty attached to it. If our legislative representatives or members in Congress were to make a law and have no penalty appended to it, it would be worthless. We might make a law forbidding men to steal, but if we had no penalty to that law I don't think we could go home without having our watches stolen from us. We could not live without law, and God put Adam into the Garden under law, attached to which was a penalty. Well, we know how he disobeyed, and how he fell, and so the penalty of death came upon him. Many people stumble over this. I used to wonder how it was that the penalty of death fell upon him, when he lived, I think, some 900 years after he broke the law; but when I understood my Bible better I learned that it was death to the soul not physical death, but spiritual death. When God came to seek him in the garden we are told that he hid himself; he was ashamed of his iniquity—just like hundreds of his sons in Chicago; and then we find him dealing with Adam by showing him grace. This was the very first thing he did. A great many people think God was very severe in his treatment of Adam, but he, whenever the offense was committed, whenever the law was broken, showed mercy, showed grace; and by this grace a way of escape was presented to them. Ah, that little hymn expresses it: "Grace, friend, contrived a way" by which Adam could regain the life he had forfeited. And so we read that the Lord made "coats of skin" to clothe them before he drove them out of Paradise. They received grace before, as we see in the twenty-fourth verse: "He drove out the man, and he placed at the east end of the Garden of Eden cherubims and a flaming sword, which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." There's grace and government; and from that day till the present God has been dealing with us in that way. He rides, we may say, in a chariot with two wheels—one grace, and the other government. We can see in this world how it would be if we had no government. There would be no living in it. Adam broke the divine law, and so he had to suffer the penalty; but he gave him grace to be redeemed by. He showed Adam and Eve grace by killing the animals and then covering their nakedness with coats made from the skins. I can imagine Adam's turning to Eve and saying, "Well, in spite of what we've done, God loves us after all. He has clothed us; he has given us grace for our sin." And here we find the first glimpse of the doctrine of substitution—the substitution of the just for the unjust; the great doctrine of atonement and substitution foreshadowed in Genesis.

Then, as we go on we find the story of Cain and Abel, and we are told that "in process of time it came to pass that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord. And Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof; and the Lord had respect unto Abel, and to his offering; but unto Cain and his offering he had not respect. And Cain was very wroth and his countenance fell." Now we find that Cain brought a bloodless sacrifice—"he brought the fruit of the ground"—and Abel brought a bleeding lamb. Right on the morning of grace we see here that God had marked a way for men to come to him, and that way was the way that Abel took, and Cain came to God with a sacrifice of his own—in his own way. So we find men and women in the churches of to-day coming to God with a sacrifice, not in God's way, but in their own way—coming with their own good deeds, or their works, or their righteousness, and ignoring the lamb altogether, ignoring the blood completely. They don't want to come that way; they want to come in their own fashion. Cain, perhaps, reasoned that he didn't see why the products of the earth, why the fruit, shouldn't be as acceptable to God as a bleeding lamb. He didn't like a bleeding lamb, and so he brought his fruit. Now, we don't know how there was any difference between these two boys. Both must have been brought up in the same way; both came from the same parents; yet, we find in the offering there was a difference between them. One came with the blood, and the other without the blood, and the one with the blood had the acceptable sacrifice to God.

We pass over to the second dispensation—to the eighth chapter of Genesis, where we find Noah coming out of the ark and putting blood between him and his sins. "And Noah builded an altar unto the Lord, and took of every clean beast and every clean foul and offered burnt offerings on the altar." God had Noah bring those animals clear through the flood so that he could offer them as a sacrifice when he came from the ark. He took a couple of each kind into the ark, and when he came out we find him making a blood offering the very first thing. He was a man of God; he walked in the fear of the Lord, and so he made the offering of blood. The first thing in the first dispensation we see is blood, and the first thing in the second dispensation is blood.

In the twenty-second chapter of Genesis we find the story of Abraham and his only son, Isaac. Abraham was a follower of God; a man who loved and feared God; and he commanded him to make a blood sacrifice. We read in this chapter that he commanded Abraham to make the sacrifice of his only son. And we read that the next morning the old man saddled his ass and started. He didn't tell his wife anything about it. If he had she would likely have persuaded him to remain where he was. But he has heard the voice of God and he obeys the command; he has heard God's wish and he is going to do it. So early in the morning—he didn't wait till 10 o'clock or 12 o'clock, but went early in the morning—he takes two of his young men with him, and his son Isaac, and you can see him starting out on the three days' journey. They have the wood and the fire, for he is going to worship his God. As he goes on he looks at his boy and says: "It is a strange commandment that God has given. I love this boy dearly. I don't understand it; but I know it's all right, for the Judge of all the earth makes no mistakes." An order from the Judge of Heaven is enough for him. The first night comes and their little camp is made, and Isaac is asleep. But the old man doesn't sleep. He looks into his face sadly, and says: "I will have no boy soon; I shall never see him on earth again; but I must obey God." I can see him marching on the next day, and you might have seen him drying his tears as he glanced upon that only son, and thought upon what he had been called upon to do. The second night comes; to-morrow is the day for the sacrifice. What a night that must have been to Abraham! "To-morrow," he says, sadly, "I must take the life of that boy—my only son, dearer to me than my life—dearer to me than anything on earth." And the third day comes, and as they go along they see the mountain in the distance, when he says to the young men: "You stay here with the beasts." He takes the wood and the fire, and along with his boy prepares to ascend Mount Moriah, from which could be seen the spot where, a few hundred years later, the Son of Man was offered up. As they ascend the mountain, Isaac says: "There's the wood and the fire, father, but where's the sacrifice?" thus showing that the boy knew nothing of what was in store. How the question must have sunk down into the old man's heart. And he answers: "The Lord will provide a sacrifice." It was not time to tell him, and they go on until they come to the place appointed by God and build the altar, and lay the wood upon it. Everything is ready, and I can just imagine the old man take the boy by the hand, and, leading him to a rock, sitting down there and telling him how God had called upon him to come out of his native land; how God had been in communion with him for fifty years; what God had done for him. "And now," he says, "my boy, when I was in my bed three nights ago, God came to me with a strange message, in which he told me to offer my son as a sacrifice. I love you, my son, but God has told me to do this, and I must obey him. So let us both get down on our knees and pray to him." After they have sent up a petition to God, Abraham lays him on the altar and kisses him for the last time. He lifts the knife to drive it into his son's heart, when all at once he hears a voice: "Abraham, Abraham, spare thine only son." Ah! there was no voice heard on Calvary to save the Son of Man. God showed mercy to the son of Abraham. You fathers and mothers just picture to yourselves how you would suffer if you had to sacrifice your only son, and think what it must have caused God to give up his only Son. We are told Abraham was glad. The manifestation of Abraham's faith so pleased God that he showed him the grace of Heaven, and lifted the curtain of time to let him look down into the future and see the Son of God offered, bearing the sins of the world. From the peak of this very mountain might have been seen the very spot where died the Saviour of the world.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE.

The Friday noon-meeting in the Carpenter Building last week was attended by about one hundred and fifty people, and was led by Mr. Bragear who read a passage from Corinthians and commented upon it.

The first testimony was from Bro. Hodge who said that three months ago he was a hopeless and degraded drinker. On the 18th of November he gave his heart to the Saviour and was delivered from his sins. He had now no inclination to drink. For twenty years he had been addicted to the cup and for ten years his case seemed hopeless. He had tried all the various antidotes he could think of; had been six months in an inebriate asylum. All his friends gave him up but his wife. He now thanked God that he could stand here a monument of his grace.

A Mr. Henry said I can praise my Saviour for what he has done for me. For thirty-five or forty years I have been a drinking man. Often he had tried to reform, had signed the pledge and made his wife happy by a new effort against the sin. He was rejoiced to hear of the salvation of old comrades in Pittsburgh. It was ten weeks ago in the Tabernacle he was saved and had no inclination to drink since. He urged any given to this terrible habit to come to Jesus for help.

Another said he formed the habit of drinking at thirteen years of age, at nineteen he was a drunkard. He went to the Tabernacle at the invitation of a friend, though he was drunk at the time. Mr. Sankey sung "Watching and Waiting" which impressed him deeply. He remembered the dear ones who were praying for him. The next Monday at lower Farwell Hall he was talked with by Christian ladies. It was a constant warfare to overcome the tempter, but he thanked God for grace to be kept from sin.

A Brother Hand said that for the last fourteen years he had been going down hill. He tried to help himself; friends tried; he made good resolutions. All was of no good. He kept sober awhile and then would fall. He had been sober two years and eight months when he fell again last fall. Then he was directed to Christ and found help; there was no hope but in his blood. He had a brother who was a drinker but he had prayed and labored for him and now he was saved too.

Brother Bragear, the leader, told a remarkable experience of struggles against the curse of drink. He had been thirty years a drinker. He had tried all the societies and pledges and oaths, but could not overcome. He had spent a time in the Washingtonian Home, but the appetite was with him there though he could get no means to gratify it. He boasted to himself that he was strong and was safe in his own strength. But it was a lie and in his consciousness he knew it to be so. He knew the tiger still lurked in his appetite. All who try these ways say so and deceive themselves. One day several inmates of the Home were talking together in this way glorifying their own wills, their purpose to overcome as enough, and scoffing at any need of a higher Power. He knew it was false when he said it, and that very night he got drunk. God let him try his own strength. For two years then he was drunk all the time. He was hopeless, helpless and in despair. But God sent his Spirit to strive with him. He drank to drown the voice. He had been drunk sixty hours and was lifting a glass to drink again when this verse came to his mind as if sent from God: "For God shall bring every work into judgment with every secret thing whether it be good or whether it be evil." This was the means of bringing him to Christ and a new life. In closing he urged with great earnestness that every one in the audience yet in their sins should come now to the Cross and be saved.

THE WEST SIDE NOON MEETING, at 221 West Madison street, was led last week by the following gentlemen: Philip Myers, Rev. Edward Hildreth, Rev. W. W. Patton, Rev. H. M. Paynter, A. Bragear, and Rev. Galusha Anderson. Mr. Ezra A. Cook led a gospel meeting on Sabbath afternoon. During the present week the following gentlemen have consented to lead: Rev. E. Stone, John Morrison, H. G. Spafford, C. F. Gates, ex-Alderman Montgomery, and Dr. E. P. Goodwin. Friends residing in the city, or those from abroad who may be here on business, should make it a point to visit this meeting.

—The Farwell Hall noon meetings are still conducted by Major Whittle, assisted by Mr. Stebbins, the singer. The main floor is generally filled with 800 to 1,000 persons, and the city pastors are always ready to help on the work with prayer or exhortation. Fifty or sixty have on some days arisen for prayers, and the revival work seems yet vigorous.

News of the Week.

—The Supreme Court of Illinois have decided that the Commissioners of Cook county, in which Chicago is located, cannot borrow any more money without a popular vote. As the vote cannot be taken until next December, the "county ring," which has begun operations about the new court house, after the manner of Tweed, will be balked for a while in their grab for public money.

—The Presidential Board of Arbitrators decided last week in favor of receiving the returns from Florida without examining into the legality of the election. The qualifications of one of the Republican electors was questioned, but proving satisfactory the vote was for Hayes on a strict party line, 8 to 7. The Democrats yet hope to gain their case with Oregon or Louisiana. They are deferring action in Congress, it is feared, so as to put off a decision until after the 4th of March.

—Earl Russell has given notice to the House of Lords that he will move that England shall cease all diplomatic intercourse with Turkey, on the ground that that nation is still barbarous and unworthy of rank among the enlightened people of Europe.

—A distressing condition of things prevails in the coal-mine districts of Westphalia and Rhineland. A great number of workmen have been dismissed, and there are over 4,000 unemployed persons, among whom the distress is fearful. No signs of improvement in trade or commerce are perceptible.

—A dispatch from Calcutta reports that a gunpowder explosion occurred at Adhemabad by which fifty persons were killed and one hundred wounded.

—Another dispatch from Calcutta says that in the week ending Feb. 2nd the number of persons engaged on the relief works decreased 34,000 in Bombay and 39,300 in Madras, as compared with the numbers employed in previous weeks. This decrease is attributed to a reduction of wages and the exclusion of persons not really destitute. But there has been no rain and no improvement in the condition of the crops. The health of the population in both Presidencies is bad. Many cases of cholera exist in the distressed districts of Madras.

—A dispatch from Vienna dated Feb. 6th says the Politische Correspondenz states that the Porte has proposed the following conditions to Servia, waiving its former claim for substantial guarantees:

First—The right of being diplomatically represented at Belgrade.

Second—That Catholics and Jews shall enjoy the same rights as native Servians.

Third—Servia shall not allow the formation of armed bands or the violation of Turkish territory.

Fourth—The existence of secret societies shall not be permitted.

Fifth—That the Servian fortresses shall be kept in good repair, and, finally, that the Turkish flag shall be hoisted upon those fortresses jointly with the Servian flag.

The correspondent says Servia will doubtless accept these conditions, and send a special Commissioner to Constantinople.

—Children, read the Publishers' Department this week. There is a letter in it for your especial benefit.

TRACT NO. 24.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE ADMITTED TO CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP?

The principles and teachings of Freemasonry taken from the highest masonic authorities are compared with those of the Bible, several Masonic Oaths are given in whole or in part with the comments of Rev's. Moses Stewart, Nathaniel Colver, and Charles G. Finney, on this character. Those who love a pure Christianity should aid in the circulation of this tract. A 4 page tract, 50cts. per 100, $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undoubtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar contributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLÆ, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "To THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

The Work.

Willing or unwilling, consciously or unconsciously, we are through these pleasant days laying the foundation of our nation's second century.

Christ is the only foundation that will stand. Paul says, "For me to live is Christ." Workers have not all the same task; but there is but one spirit. This column shows one kind of work for Christ—the work of extending the circulation of the Christian Cynosure.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard sends a club of ten for a year, and one for three months, from Indiana. He writes: "Friends are in good heart."

J. R. Gailey, Patterson, Iowa, sends ten for a year.

J. Baldwin, Hillsdale, Mich., sends ten for a year.

H. G. McMasters, Luana, Iowa, who sent the second club of ten, received last year, sends $15 with seven names, and writes: "Will send the other names soon."

H. L. Phelps, Le Raysville, Pa., sends a club of ten for a year.

Samuel Guengerich, Amish, Iowa, sends $16 with nine names for a year, and writes: "This paper is a new thing in this part of the country. There is more Masonry in the country than I had an idea of. The distribution of this paper worries the Masons considerably. I will send a few more names shortly." Asa Warren, Warren's Corners, N. Y., adds six for a year to the six sent last month. He wrote then: "We shall continue to do the best we can for the success of the paper," and in this way makes good his word. John B. Hart, McLean, N. Y., completes a club of five for a year, commenced in January. J. W. Suidter, Sharon, Wis., forwards a club of five obtained by other parties, and writes: "They say that they will try to raise the balance" (of a club of ten.") Rev. H. H. Hinman sends a club of three for a year, and two for six months. I. C. Quick, Weston, Mich., sends a club of five (four of them receive their mail at Fairfield, Mich.), and writes: "On the return of better times again I hope to see Fairfield the banner town once more in the matter of subscription to the Cynosure. The cause is not dead yet, nor will it ever be as long as God lives." We trust Fairfield will do her best to gain the banner, and that other towns in Michigan will, for the sake of our reform, press forward for the prize also. There is room for competition in the maintenance of good works. G. McAdams and G. B. Owen, of New Goshen, Ind., send a club of five subscribers for a year, and write: "We intend to push the interests of the Cynosure before the people here, and hope when times get easier that we can get at least twenty regular subscribers in this township."

John T. Russell, Rome, Pa., sends four for a year, and writes: "I will try to get the other one or more."

David West, Sycamore, Ill., sends three for a year, and writes: "I have spent four days in trying to raise a club of five, but have failed of obtaining but three." Another friend writes: "I am working in my Master's vineyard; and I have engaged for life. So success or not is not the question, but AM I RIGHT?"

One friend wishes to know the present number of subscribers, if convenient. It is to be published accurately in our issue of March 1st. It is now about 4,000.

This is delightful weather for canvassing for the Cynosure, and the above report shows how well it has been improved. We are looking for a good report of work accomplished from many more who have not yet been heard from. Shall we hear from you? Persons who start out determined to secure ten or twenty subscriptions generally get more than those who try to secure only two or three. So if we all aim to do our part toward securing ten thousand subscribers this year, the mail list will certainly be larger at its close than if we only try to keep up the present list.

The undaunted, cheerful determination to increase the number of weekly readers of the Cynosure is contagious. Even the children are beginning to show it. Elmer McClintock, Justus, Ohio, sends twenty-five cents for tracts, and writes:

"I want them to give away, so that maybe I can get some subscribers for your excellent paper. I am thirteen years old and live with my grandpa, Andrew Putnam. He has taken the Cynosure for five years, and he is the only one that voted the Walker and Kirkpatrick ticket in Sugar Creek township. We still read the Cynosure, and then mail it to some one else."

Let us take hold, old and young together, for Christ's sake, seeking his presence and blessing in the work, and if possible secure for the Cynosure a list of TEN THOUSAND SUBSCRIBERS.

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK.

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On

TIN ROOFS

our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

BRICK WALLS.

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

Notices.

TOPEKA, Kansas.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Please say to all your readers in the West, especially in Kansas, that by sending their names and post office addresses to me they will have sent them, gratis, documents bearing relation to the anti-secrecy cause and the means of promoting it in the West, of great interest to all lovers of truth.

Yours, C. A. SEXTON.

The State Convention of the Iowa Christian Association will be held at Oskaloosa, April 24th next, beginning at 7 P. M. and continuing two days. Friends, be getting ready. A formal call will appear soon.

MICHIGAN STATE LECTURER.

MR. EDITOR:—Please let me say through the columns of the Cynosure that I have engaged to serve the Michigan Christian Association Opposed to Secret Societies, the ensuing year, and expect to begin my labors about the 20th of this month.

Those desiring lectures can correspond with me through their State Agent, C. B. Remington, Fentonville, Michigan.

Topics of the Time.

The memory of David Livingstone will be more revered for the effect of his toils and discoveries in years to come than for any immediate results in which he himself participated. Lieut. Young, who was sent out to form a mission in Central Africa by the Free church of Scotland gives to the world some results of this "Livingstone Mission." That work has already had such an effect on the slave trade that during the last year only thirty-eight slaves were sent to the coast where previously the annual traffic amounted to thousands.

Cowper's well-known lines come up unbidden when we hear the alarmed remonstrances of some Christians of weak faith when an unpopular but Scriptural reform is mentioned during a revival:

"Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take,
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and will break
In blessings on your head."

In the midst of his great work in Chicago Mr. Moody testified against several forms of popular evil, but instead of injuring his work, the testimony was blessed to the souls of thousands, and truly pious people prayed with more fervor and assurance for the evangelist and his work. A few weeks since a convention for the religious reform of the Constitution was held in Steubenville, Ohio. When the delegates and speakers arrived they were met by a remonstrance from a number of ministers against the meeting, on the ground of a spiritual awakening in the churches. The faith of one pastor was, however, stronger than the fears of the others, and the First Presbyterian church was opened and the first evening meeting was held after the close of a religious service of the church. The next evening the eminent speakers attending the convention took part in the prayer-meeting, which was one of deep and powerful interest. At its close the last sitting of the convention was held, with a full house from the prayer meetings of the several churches, and all felt at its close that the reform meeting was an aid to the true spiritual work of the churches.

The vigor and strategy with which the Porte has met the advances of the European powers, while itself several times changing its leading state officer, presents an unexpected view of the Turkish character. The last Grand Vizier, Midhat Pasha, whose policy checkmated the European Council, was the other day given the choice of banishment or execution, and yet the Russian finds his enemy in no sense weakened. The demands on which Servia can make peace were published last week, and in one respect at least they show the wisdom of the Turkish government. Months ago Disraeli publicly declared that the intervention of the secret societies of Europe had brought on the war. Whoever may have laughed at the remark, the Turks have not, and demand of Servia their abolition. Here again this government has shown itself wiser than the more enlightened powers of Europe, which not only suffer, but embrace these fomenters of civil discord.

It is believed that President Grant intends to turn over the settlement of the State difficulties in Louisiana and South Carolina, so far as the general government is concerned, to his successor. The Louisiana politicians in Washington have used every effort to gain his recognition of Packard, but the only favor he shows them is to order Gen. Augur to keep the peace in New Orleans by all means. The White League are thus left at liberty in the city, and if correspondents are to be credited the Packard government is a very limited affair. The question will soon be adjusted, however, when we know who is to be President.

The attempted assassination of the Republican governor elect of Louisiana, last Thursday, has hardly been noticed in the more engrossing news from Washington. Of the antecedents and character of the young man Weldon, or his motives for the deed, little has been made known; neither are the number or character of his allies published, if known. This, however, is told us, and much may safely be inferred from it: One dispatch says he gave a State Senator some of the passwords of a Philadelphia Masonic lodge after his arrest; and another, to the "Associated Press," says he wore a large Masonic badge and carried a Masonic diploma in his pocket. The evidence of his lodge standing is thus pretty well established, and another is added to the long list of proofs that Freemasonry most thoroughly makes men

"Fit for treasons, stratagems and wars."

Why, then, should it be trusted?

The decision of the Electoral Commission in the Louisiana case causes another outburst from the defeated party, as unfair as it is disgraceful. The Democrats were more generally in favor of the arbitration than the Republicans, perhaps for the very reason that they felt their case insecure under the plain terms of the Constitution, and preferred a chance to a legal settlement. The abrupt adjournment of the House while the Secretary of the Senate was waiting with a message shows that their case is desperate, and the remedies they propose are unusual. When the Court of Arbitration was formed its decision was to be final. Let us hope that wisdom will not forsake the majority in the House, but that they will accept the decision and use the power delegated to them by the people to make the new administration an improvement on the old.

Many who have wept upon the mountains of Zion have sung aloud in the valley of the shadow of death.

MASONRY THE PANTHEON OF FALSE RELIGIONS.

PROF. O. F. LUMRY, WHEATON COLLEGE.

The pantheons at Athens and Rome were, as the name indicates, magnificent temples dedicated to the worship of all the gods.

Livy tells us that the Roman religious rites were instituted by Numa to aid the government in holding the people in subjection.

Cicero, in De Natura Deorum, says that but for religion it is doubtful if human society could exist.

Idolatrous countries each had their protecting deities with their open and secret rites. An idolater of one country passing into another, to enjoy the protection of the gods of that country, must worship them. Idol worshipers, then, needing at times the protection of other gods became tolerant of their worship. Cyrus, of whom God said by his prophet 700 years before he was born: "I have girded thee, yet hast thou not known me," Xenophon tells us, when on his expeditions he passed the border of his own country, sacrificed to the gods of his own country to secure their favor for his journey and when he entered the neighboring country prayed and sacrificed to its gods that they might receive him kindly and aid his undertaking.

The religion of a country is the basis of whatever security it gives both to citizens and strangers as is shown even by the heathen authorities quoted. "Thou shalt not kill," is one of the commandments of Jehovah, so that all men are secure as to their life, among true Christians. Masonry claims, by its standard authors, to accept as religion only what is recognized as such by all men. Its worship, then, is Gentile worship, that is, in the langnage of the New Testament, devil-worship. The Apostle says, "We know that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice they sacrifice to devils and not to God."

As we have seen, one kind of devil-worship is tolerant of another, and sometimes even of the true worship. The Sidonian widow could swear by the God of Israel, but if the prophet Elijah had sworn by the gods of the Sidonians he would have become an idolater and the God of Israel would have been insulted by his worship. We can not serve the true God acceptably and practice any kind of false worship.

If then the boast of Masonry that it renders its votaries secure in every part of the world, even among pirates and idolaters, is true, it must be because they have a common worship. The Mason, if safe at all, is safe among all kinds of idolaters because, in effect, if not in form, in the lodge, he worships all the gods of the heathen, and our conclusion is clearly substantiated that Masonry is the Pantheon of all the false worships of the earth.

The Coming Powers.

BY E. HONEYWELL.

Young Friends:—We, as your seniors and fellow-citizens, are now spreading a million of tracts and pamphlets before you; showing the workings of secretism—a pestilence that is now the greatest curse of our nation. As consistent patriots and Christians we owe you this light. Will you then, in the spirit of a bold, honest manhood, give us an unbiased and Christian hearing? For the cheering hope of our country is in the candor and enlightenment of our young men. Do you then realize that our great nation, with all its resources of wealth and happiness, will soon, very soon, be in your keeping and control? Then choose ye this day whom you will serve; for the weal or woe of our future rests on the choice you now make.

Know then, that two great beligerent powers, perfect antipodes, are are now in deadly conflict with each other for the mastery; one of which must die. And you can decide which it shall be.

One of these powers boldly makes and administers its laws in open day and before the world. The other works in the dead shades of night—fit hour "for treason, stratagem and spoil"—that hour chosen by hungry wolves and stealthy burglars to prowl for prey and for plunder. In this suspicious hour, and while secreted in its own "chambers of imagery," it loads its traitorous guns and holds them in readiness for some auspicious moment to again batter down the Fort Sumters of our nation. It there binds its members to violate the sacred laws of our Great Creator; for it orders the candidate (see 31st degree) to imprecate the lightnings of Heaven to take vengeance on him, if he ever reports its secret crimes to our civil authorities. One or the other of these powers will soon govern our nation. Which shall it be?

Our republican government, when well administered, is the best one this side of heaven; because founded on laws sent down from that place. But this monarchy is a secret, stealthy, irresponsible despotism; growing up in the dark, and is now, like the subtle snake in Eden, clutching at the helm of state and at the throat of our Republic. It has its thousands of recruiting offices, (called lodges,) all over the nation; luring its deceived victims into its ranks, and holding them in subjugation, under death-penalties for life. Thus freedom and bondage are before you. Which do you choose? On which side will you cast your influence? Neutrality here is positive crime.

Bold republicanism will accept you as independent and loyal brothers; and will not extort hundreds of dollars from you as admittance fees; nor will it put a padlock on your lips—sealed with a death-penalty to be inflicted on you if you ever take it off.

But our enemy, as I will now convince you, does do this very thing: for if he succeeds in wheedling you into the gangway of his recruiting office, he there blinds and strips you; then, by a halter, leads you to his shambles, like a beast to the slaughter, and there makes you kneel to him; and while thus a prisoner in this shameful plight, with a dagger at your naked breast, and the door secured by a sentinel, sword in hand, to stop your escape, he compels you to tell (what an unsophisticated man might call) a lie. For he makes you repeat, (by a few words at a time,) after a "master," the following oath: * * * * * "Furthermore do I promise and swear that I will not write, print, stamp, hew, cut, carve, indent, etc., etc., [see 'Light on Masonry'] whereby the secrets of Masonry may be obtained through my unworthiness. To all of which I do most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, without the least equivocation, mental reservation, or self-evasion of mind in me whatever; [when the whole gang know that he is under fearful duress;] binding myself under no less penalty than to have my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots. * * * So help me God, and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same." The second oath binds the candidate to have his heart and vitals taken out and thrown over his left shoulder if he wrongs his lodge out of two cents!! Other oaths imprecate death by scalping, by burning bowels, by broiling brains, etc., etc., and even by the gibbet. While in the degree called the "Knights Adepts of the Eagle and Sun," the instructor says, "Behold, my dear brother, what you must fight against and destroy, before you can come to the true good and sovereign happiness! Behold this monster which you must conquer—a serpent which WE detest as an idol that is adored by the idiot and vulgar, under the name of RELIGION!!!" (When they have conquered this we are lost.)

The truth of the above, and ten times more is shown by Bernard's "Light on Masonry," and the truth of that book is attested by hundreds of ex-Masons, as well as by adhering ones when on oath in courts of law.

I think I have now convinced you that the lips of the candidate are locked in terrorism for life. And the safety of his life has to be bought by paying tribute and servile subjugation to that midnight clan whose bond of union is slavish fear or the assassin's knife.

A word to the wise is enough. Can you believe that an honest man, after knowing these facts, ever has or ever will seek admittance into such dens?

"But is not Masonry a defense?" Yes, it has defended such men as Aaron Burr, Jeff. Davis and Andrew Johnson; yet you, as honest men, need no such protection; and to seek it in advance would stain your honor, showing that you think such protection in villainy may yet be wanted.

I believe that every ill that human flesh is heir to, has its root in the first secret stratagic lodge got up by the serpent in the garden of Eden.

Twenty-five years ago slavery was in as high repute as Masonry is today. Now it is a putrid stench in the nostrils of the nation. Fifteen years more—God's laws being our guide—and Masonry will emit the same flavor.

Eighteen hundred years ago the popular cry was "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Thirty years ago it was "Great is American Slavery." In 1877 it is "Great is Masonry." Diana's temple has long since crumbled on the plains of Durah. Slavery is dead and buried below the reach of the grave-robber. Masonry too will die when you stop feeding your own bodies and freedom to it for its food and subsistence.

Rev. C. G. Finney, long President of Oberlin College says of Masonry: "Have we an institution, the ramifications of which are entwining themselves with every fiber of our government and our religious liberties, of which institution the whole country is so much afraid that it dare not speak the truth concerning it? * * * * Are we to hold our peace? To hold out our hands and have the shackles put on them? Is the Press to be muzzled, and the whole country to be awed and kept under the feet of this institution, so that no man shall dare to speak his mind? God forbid."

Now gentlemen, in the candor of your souls, and in the presence of your God—by whom you will be judged, choose ye this day whom you will serve. If Baal, serve him, and abide the result. If God, serve him—by spreading his light and his laws to bless the earth.

And now, in that same candor and while choosing whom you will serve, please answer these four questions:

1st. When the rulers of darkness brandish their swords in defense of bandit laws, will you let press and pulpit (when held by you) be any longer awed to silence by such a flourish?

2nd. Is gospel law too weak to attack sin in high places?

3d. If a Christian "can smile at Satan's rage and face a frowning world," then why need he flinch and stand in mute dismay before the threats of secret conspirators?

4th. Can any man be a consistent Christian while in the act of swearing another man to never tell—even his own wife—how he has been denuded and insulted in the lodge-room, on penalty of having throat cut, tongue torn out, heart thrown to the vultures, bowels burnt to ashes and skull smote off? That all those penalties are threatened in the lodge, is already proven by hosts of ex-Masons; but adhering ones are bound by oath to deny them.

Enemies.

Have you enemies? Go straight on, and mind them not. If they block up your path, walk around them, and do your duty regardless of their spite. A man who has no enemies is seldom good for anything; he is made of that kind of material which is so easily worked that every one has a hand in it. A sterling character—one who thinks for himself, and speaks what he thinks—is always sure to have enemies. They are as necessary to him as fresh air; they keep him alive and active. A celebrated character, who was surrounded with enemies, used to remark: "They are sparks which, if you do not blow, will go out of themselves." Let this be your feeling while endeavoring to live down the scandal of those who are bitter against you. If you stop to dispute you do but as they desire, and open the way for more abuse. Let the poor fellows talk; there will be a reaction if you perform but your duty, and hundreds who were once alienated from you will flock to you and acknowledge their error.—Alexander's Messenger.

Since the creation of the world, fourteen thousand millions of human beings have fallen in the battles which man has waged against his fellow-creature—man. If this amazing number of men were to hold each other by the hand, at arm's length, they would extend over fourteen millions, five hundred and eighty-three thousand, three hundred and thirty-three miles of ground, and would encircle the globe on which we dwell six hundred and eight times. If we allow the weight of man to be, on an average, one cwt. (and that is below the mark), we shall come to the conclusion that six millions, two hundred and fifty thousand tons of human flesh have been mangled, disfigured, gashed and trampled under foot. The calculation will appear more striking when we state, that if only the forefingers of every one of those fourteen thousand millions of human beings were laid in a straight line, they would reach more than six hundred thousand miles beyond the moon; and that if a person were to undertake to count the number, allowing nineteen hours a day, and seven days to the week, at the rate of six thousand per hour, it would occupy that person three hundred and thirty-six years. And awful is the consideration! Three hundred and fifty thousand pipes of human blood have been spilt in battle.—Dr. Dick.

Our Foreign Letter.

Great Institutions in out-of-the-way Places—The Ancient City of Cambridge—Its Celebrated University—The Arrangement and Magnificence of the Colleges—The Peculiarities of the Students—The Great Names on the Roll of Graduates—To be Admired, not Imitated—The Old Cathedral of Ely.

London, Dec., 1877.

Among the places of pleasing interest within easy access of London, I found Cambridge and Ely well worthy of a visit. But when one has seen the University and grounds of Cambridge and the Cathedral of Ely he has seen all of each place that need be noticed. It was a matter of repeated wonder to me, that a University so extensive should be located in a situation so undesirable; and that a Cathedral so imposing as the one at Ely should look down upon the most miserable and wretched of English villages.

Cambridge is some fifty or more miles to the north of London. The country between the two places, and around the former, is not nearly so attractive as that between London and Southampton. The farms are larger and appear more like many of the fields under cultivation in the United States. The land is largely low and marshy, and wanting in some degree the rich verdure of the more southerly country districts. The city itself, though numbering some 25,000 or 30,000 inhabitants, is situated on a plain so low and level that at only a few miles distant it is hardly visible. Once within the town, however, and among its colleges, and by the banks of the Cam, its little river, and it is found to be replete with numberless attractions, and deficient neither in the green of grove and lawn, or in buildings of architectural beauty. Aside from the endless extent of the University buildings, ranging along a half mile and more of acres, and the delightful woods and walks bordering a ribbon of a river, where officers and students may enjoy either the delights of solitude or the pleasures of recreation, what most impresses a stranger is the air of antiquity which it wears constantly and completely, and which he cannot for a moment lose sight of if he would. In London it is difficult for one to realize that he is in a city of so ancient an origin. True, there is the Tower and Abbey of Westminster, and some other structures prized on account of their great age; but they are in the midst of modern London, lined by busy streets, surrounded by business blocks and offices, isolated objects of a distant past amid the activities and life of the new city; illustrative specimens mainly, as is an ancient obelisk or statue, or well-preserved mummy in a museum. On the other hand, everything about Cambridge is antiquated and venerable. London has many things very old, Cambridge almost nothing which is new.

The limits of a general letter will not admit of detailed description, so I will only touch upon a few points of interest in passing. Seventeen distinct Colleges compose the University of Cambridge, and the most of these are situated along one bank of the Cam. St. John's College is partly on the right and partly on the left side ot the river. Madalene College is the only one that is entirely on the opposite bank, and it is off to one side, and opposite to none of the others. The several remaining Colleges are located in different parts of the city, and at some distance from the stream. The Colleges along the Cam follow one another in near proximity, and as I have before intimated extend for more than half a mile. The buildings are in quadrangles, enclosing a square of land of greater or less extent, called a court. Some of the Colleges have but one court, others of them have several. Thus Queen's College has two; King's one large one; Clare College a small one; Trinity, three of immense size; St. John's, two courts and portions of three others, it being somewhat curiously constructed and irregular in shape. Each College has its chapel, hall, library, kitchen, butlery, etc., besides rooms for the accommodation of the students. The chapels and some of the halls are exceedingly elaborate and costly in structure. Through the munificence of royalty displayed in former times, King's College, the smallest of all, is enabled to boast the largest and most magnificent chapel. It was years in construction. Begun by Henry VI., who is supposed to have laid the foundation stone in 1446, it was furthered on towards completion by Richard III. and Henry VII., and externally finished July 29, 1515, in the seventh year of Henry VIII. It is a marvel of architectural beauty—one of the most sumptuous of Gothic edifices, as it was also one of the last. It is an oddity, as well as a beauty. Although 316 feet in length, it is but 84 feet in width, and its vaulted roof within is unsustained by a single pillar. The height of its octagonal towers is 147 feet. Without are turrets, light battlements, buttresses, and crotcheted pinnacles; within, richly painted windows; a perspective grandly solemn, almost awful, and a vaulted stone ceiling, completely covered with fan tracery, so exquisitely light and gracefully beautiful that in gazing at it imagination hesitates, in doubt whether to yield to the sombre influences of the place and religious awe, or soaring aloft to revel in realms etherial and more heavenly. Trinity is the most celebrated of the Colleges, besides being by far the most extensive. It is as large as several of the others combined. St. John's is next in size, many of whose buildings are very imposing; while Queen's College is in appearance quite as antiquated as any, and very picturesquely situated.

Everybody about the University is uniformed. By their various caps and gowns any one acquainted with the University costumes can tell whether the man he meets is a doctor of laws, physic, or divinity; a bachelor, or a master of arts; or if an under-graduate, whether he be a "nobleman" or "fellow-commoner,"—in plainer phrase, some rich man's son, who has the honor of dining with the "Fellows" and College officers; or a pensioner, who is placed in the dining hall with the majority of students who, destitute of title and wealth, eat at tables by themselves. If any engage in extensive pedestrian excursions they assume a peculiar walking costume. If they exercise at rowing they wear the uniform of their club.

In walking through and among the interminable courts and buildings I felt myself in a past world. I wandered wonderingly by towers, and through gloomy corridors and cloisters, and gazed again and again at the buildings of varied styles of architecture, all eloquent of the past. The very under-graduates and officers whom I met, going to and from lecture-rooms, seemed not to be the people of to-day, but to belong with the buildings to a former age. Each was in harmony with the other; I only was wofully out of place. I enjoyed it. It seemed to gratify a wish I had often had, that I might be transported for a moment backward a few centuries, so as to be able to contrast life then with life now. I caught myself wondering what these strangely, but not unbecomingly attired people, would say could they see a steamship or locomotive,—and would not the telegraph astonish them!

One feature of Cambridge I must not omit to mention: the many gems of bridges over the Cam. Some have one arch, others two or more; all tasteful, and of stone. They add much to the attractiveness of river and Colleges. Many of the Colleges are right upon the brink of the banks. In such cases the bridge extends from the archway of the College to the pleasure-grounds just across the stream (barely two rods wide), where are the loveliest of forests. Apparently few people, if any, live on that side. Very distinctly is the line drawn here between town and country. On the one hand is a forest of buildings, on the other hand a forest of trees, while the diminutive Cam, like a bright belt of silver, thus severs neatly and completely the green of woods from the gray of walls. One of the avenues of venerable trees tradition points out as the favorite walk of Erasmus. So many illustrious in history have received their education at Cambridge that the place has for this, if for no other reason, a charm peculiarly its own. It may not be inappropriate to recall a very few of them: Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley and Rogers, each of whom share a martyr's fame; Spencer, Cowley, Herrick, Dryden, Coleridge, Prior, Milton, poets; Erasmus, Lightfoot, Cudworth, Barrows, Newton and Lord Bacon, writers, philosophers and scholars; and of statesmen, Pitt and Wilberforce.

The short time I spent there will not enable me to write intelligently respecting the internal workings of the institution, but aside from its thoroughness in scholarship I think there is little that it would be desirable for similar institutions in the United States to copy. Its buildings are in a style suited to a former age, which while they last it is well to utilize; but they are not patterns for the present age. The ever conspicuous University costumes, also, appear not manly, but childish. What do men want of "square caps" and long gowns of silk or bombazine? They are an encumbrance alike to officer and undergraduate, worn only because wise ancestors were clad thus before them. The extreme regard paid to rank, titles and scholarship, only pardonable in the latter case, is not ennobling in its tendency. The learned degrees are largely sought for on account of the high-sounding initials it appends to a name, and the position it places one in in society and before the world, rather than from a love of learning or as a preparation for usefulness. The conservatism of the University is famous. In certain respects Cambridge is admirably adapted to manufacture men into fossils. Great minds of course seldom succumb to such influences; many lesser but good minds do.

Space will only allow a few words respecting the cathedral at Ely. Ely is about sixteen miles northeast of Cambridge. Its cathedral, situated on ground slightly elevated and rising among trees is an imposing structure, both externally and internally. It was commenced in 1174, but the building as we now see it, is the work of various centuries. Several styles of architecture appear in its construction. The Gothic and Norman arch are alike prominent, yet mar but little the harmony of its interior. Many stone images and statuettes once adorned the building within. The custodian pointed out the niches and brackets they once occupied, informing me also that they were destroyed by zealous iconoclasts under Cromwell. Many abbots, bishops and church dignitaries are interred within the church. Some of the slabs have inscriptions and rude, full-length likenesses of the dead, cut in bronze plates and sunk into the floor. Noticing many unsightly depressions in the stone where there had once been similar plates, I inquired the cause of their absence. The attendant carelessly replied, "Cromwell's soldiers tore them up and turned them into cannon." How oftimes a casual remark recalls a world of eventful history.

WASHINGTON.

The Brave. The Wise. The Good.
WASHINGTON,
Supreme in War, in Council and in Peace.
WASHINGTON,

Valiant without Ambition,	Discreet without Fear,	Confident without Presumption.

WASHINGTON,
In Disaster, calm; in Success, moderate; in all Himself.
WASHINGTON,
The Hero, the Patriot, the Christian.
The Father of Nations, the Friend of Mankind;
who
When he had won all, renounced all;
AND SOUGHT,
In the bosom of his family and of Nature,
RETIREMENT,
And in the hope of Religion
IMMORTALITY.

The foregoing tribute to the memory of George Washington was written at his grave, in the year 1833, by Dr. Andrew Reed, an English philanthropist, and left by him with the ladies of the General's family.

It has been printed in an attractive manner, framed and now speaks to all who visit Mt. Vernon from the walls of his dear old home.

"The character of Washington may want some of those poetical elements which dazzle and delight the multitude but it possessed fewer inequalities, and a rarer union of virtues than perhaps ever fell to the lot of one man. Prudence, firmness, sagacity, moderation, an overruling judgment, an immovable justice, courage that never faltered, patience that never wearied, truth that disdained all artifice, magnanimity without alloy. It seems as if Providence had endowed him in a pre-eminent degree with the qualities requisite to fit him for the high destiny he was called upon to fulfill —to conduct a momentous revolution which was to form an era in the history of the world, and to inaugurate a new and untried government, which, to use his own words, was to lay the foundation 'for the enjoyment of much purer civil liberty, and greater public happiness, than have hitherto been the portion of mankind.'

"The fame of Washington stands apart from every other in history; shining with a truer lustre and a more benignant glory. With us his memory remains a national property, where all sympathies throughout our widely-extended and diversified empire meet in unison. Under all dissensions and amid all the storms of party, his precepts and example speak to us from the grave with a paternal appeal; and his name—by all revered - forms a universal tie of brotherhood—a watchword of our Union."—Irving's Life of Washington.

"It will be the duty of the historian and the sage of all nations, to let no occasion pass of commemorating this illustrious man, and until time shall be no more, will a test of the progress which our race has made in wisdom and virtue, be derived from the veneration paid to the immortal name of Washington."—Lord Brougham.

WASHINGTON, HIS RELATIONS TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

Washington was an executive not the forger of fundamental truths. The great work of his public career was to launch the frail bark of our infant America. He was peculiarly qualified for this work.

He is claimed, we suppose correctly, as having joined the Masonic order. He received a Masonic apron embroidered by the wife of Gen. La Fayette. He as President assisted the Masons in laying the cornerstone of the United States Capitol. At his burial the funeral procession was arranged in the following order:

Cavalry, Infantry, Guard. } With arms reversed.
Music
Clergy.
The General's horse with his saddle, holsters and pistols.

Cols. Sims, Ramsay, Payne. Pall bearers. } CORPSE. { Pall bearers. Cols. Gilpin, Marsteller, Little.

Mourners,
Masonic Brethren,
Citizens.

"The Rev. Mr. Davis read the funeral service at the vault and pronounced a short address; after which the Masons performed their ceremonies, and the body was deposited in the vault.

"Such were the obsequies of Washington; simple and modest, according to his own wishes; all confined to the grounds of Mt. Vernon, which, after forming the poetical dream of his life, had now become his final resting place."—Irving's Life of Washington.

Washington was also at one time a member of the order of Cincinnati. He wrote to Thos. Jefferson about this order and received at least two letters from this illustrious man pointing out the dangers arising from such an association.

John Quincy Adams writes:

"The use of the name of Washington to give an odor of sanctity to the institution (Freemasonry) as it now stands exposed to the world is, in my opinion, as unwarrantable as that of my father's name. On the mortal side of human existence there is no name for which I entertain a veneration more profound than for that of Washington. But he was never called to consider the Masonic order in the light in which it must now be viewed. If he had been, we have a pledge of what his conduct would have been far more authoritative than the mere fact of his having been a Mason can be in favor of the brotherhood. Treating of the order of the Cincinnati—a secret society composed of soldiers of the Revolution—Mr. Jefferson says: 'The uneasiness excited by this institution had very early caught the notice of General Washington. Still recollecting all the purity of the motives which gave it birth, he became sensible that it might produce political evils, which the warmth of those motives had masked Add to this, that it was disapproved by the mass of citizens of the Union. This alone was reason strong enough in a country where the will of the majority is the law, and ought to be the law. He saw that the objects of the institution were too light to be opposed to considerations as serious as these; and that it was become necessary to annihilate it absolutely. On this, therefore, he was decided. The first annual meeting at Philadelphia, was now at hand. He went to that, determined to exert all his influence for its suppression. He proposed it to his fellow-officers, and urged it with all his powers. It met an opposition which was observed to cloud his face with an anxiety that the most distressful scenes of the war scarcely ever produced. It was canvassed for seven days, and, at length, it was no more a doubt what would be its ultimate fate. The order was on the point of receiving its annihilation by the vote of a great majority of its members.' (Jefferson's Works, Vol. I. page 418.) Owing to the influence of French envoys—who were greatly tinctured with infidelity, and filled with the spirit of Red Republicanism—the society, contrary to the ardent wish of Washington, did not disband, but it was modified."—J. Q. Adams' Letters.

Such was Washington's action concerning the order "Cincinnati."

In regard to the Masonic order our limited space forbids a full statement of his action. A statement was officially made to the House of Representatives of the State of Pennsylvania by Governor Ritner, March 8, 1837, giving the facts in consideration of which he had affirmed in his annual message to the State Senate and House of Representatives that Freemasonry was a spirit of lawless combination against which the Father of his country sent forth his last and most solemn warning.

After presenting facts justifying his statements too numerous to be inserted here, Gov. Ritner writes:

"The conclusion to which these proofs lead are:

1. That in 1768 General Washington had ceased regular attendance at the lodge. This is proved by his letter to Mr. Snyder.

2. That so far back as the year 1780, he had become convinced, at least of the inutility of Freemasonry, and called it "child's play." This is established by his reply to Governor Trumbull.

3. That on the 25th of September, 1798, (one year and four months before his death,) his opinions on the subject of Freemasonry remained unchanged from what they were thirty years before when he was only thirty-six years old. This is established by his letter to Mr. Snyder.

4. That up to February, 1781, as appears by the records of King David's Lodge, and up to the 25th of September, 1798, as appears by his letter to Mr. Snyder, he had not been "Grand Master of North America, nor even Master of any particular lodge."

5. That in 1781, as appears by the same record of King David's Lodge, it was not agreeable to him to be addressed even as a private Mason.

6. That all the letters said to be written by Washington to lodges are spurious. This is rendered nearly certain: First, by the non-production of the originals. Second, by the absence of copies among the records of his letters. Third, by their want of dates. Fourth, by the fact that his intimate friend and biographer, Chief Justice Marshall, (himself a Mason in his youth) says in one of his letters, that he never heard Washington utter a syllable on the subject—a matter nearly impossible, if Washington had for years been engaged in writing laudatory letters to the Grand Lodges of South Carolina, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts.

We conclude this brief review of Washington's relation to secret societies with his own words. Candid reader, did not Washington leave his record against Freemasonry and kindred orders?

"All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of a party, often a small but enterprising minority of the community; and according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organs of consistent and wholesome plans, digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

"However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government."—Washington's Farewell Address.

Reform News.

To all the Friends in Michigan.

Once more the friends of reform in Michigan are provided with a leader. The Rev. D. P. Rathbun has consented to be our spokesman and to educate the people in regard to the evils of secretism. We anticipate much good work will be done by him, as he is a thorough man and can speak to us not from hearsay, but from actual experience, having been a Mason and seen their Christless mummeries performed. He knows by bitter experience what one must encounter who joins their heathenish institution and urges the reform by presenting to the world their iniquities. For his violation of the obligations of Masonry he, in this so-called free land of ours, has been mobbed, poisoned and shot.

And now let me say to the friends of Michigan, having such a leader as D. P. Rathbun let us give him the true grip, that of friendship, and do all that we can both by time and money to help this great work of reform along. There is one great trouble with the workers of reform in this movement against lodge power, they have not yet learned to give for its support. But I hope, sincerely hope, that that hindrance to the reform in Michigan will no longer be a hindrance, but that all true reformers will put their shoulder to the wheel and work with and for us; first looking to God for his blessing and then the work will move along vigorously.

There are some of the friends in Michigan who subscribed for the work last year. They would oblige and help the present workers very much if they would now send the amount of their subscriptions to the agent, C. B. Remington, Box 485, Fentonville, as he wants to make out his report for publication in the Cynosure and does not want to publish names of delinquents; but must do so if the amount is not soon sent in.

Friends of reform in Michigan, let us hear from you immediately in regard to our work. Let nothing delay you from entering now energetically into the work which is before us. You all ought to have D. P. Rathbun at once in your vicinity to help you. Do not let the work drag, but let us hear from you immediately. C. B. REMINGTON.

GOSPEL MEETING ON SECRETISM.

At the West Side prayer-meeting held on Thursday evening in the Carpenter building the topic for prayer and discussion was "The Bible vs. Oath-bound Secrecy."

The meeting was led by Brother Ronayne, who in his remarks dwelt in an especial manner on the mediatorial office of Jesus Christ, and introduced the subject by briefly referring to the two covenants made by God with his people—the first covenant being of works and the second of grace. He pointed out the fact that during the Old Testament dispensation God always revealed himself to his people by a name which indicated his character in an especial manner. He showed that in connection with the New Covenant the name which God gave to himself is Jesus Christ—that is man's anointed Saviour, who made the world and all things therein, the only Name under heaven whereby we can be saved, the only foundation and the one only Mediator between God and man, and he proved that the Masonic system in ignoring Jesus Christ and rejecting his mediatorial office while at the same time it pretends to free men from sin and transfer them to heaven thereby dishonors God and introduces precisely the same Baal idolatry committed in Israel in the days of Ahab. The following are some of the passages to which he referred during his remarks: Deut. 7: 11, 12; Gen. 1: 1; Gen. 17: 1; Gen. 15: 1; Heb. 1: 1, 2; John 1: 1–3; John 5: 23; 1 Tim. 2: 5; 1 John 2: 1, 2; Acts 4: 11, 12; 1 Cor. 3: 11. His remarks were specially directed against Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship for their rejection of Jesus Christ and he briefly alluded to his own experience in connection with both systems in this city. The meeting was very interesting though of course Mr. Ronayne's remarks stirred up a couple of Odd-fellows who were present and one of whom left the room before the meeting closed. Everything in this city seems to be working well for bringing these secret oath-bound organizations into contempt and reducing them to that unpopularity which they so richly deserve. May God hasten that time and carry on the work.

Correspondence.

WHERE THE MONEY GOES.

Editor Cynosure:—Allow me to say through your columns that my old companions in Keystone Lodge are passing through the waters of affliction just now in a manner not at all agreeable or pleasant. Their late treasurer, the noble and immaculate Rollin G. Harmon, has absconded, taking with him $358 50, the whole amount in their treasury. At their last meeting held on Wednesday, the 7th inst., there were only fourteen members present, including seven who were summoned to appear and show cause why they should not be suspended for non-payment of dues. The lodge has been woefully demoralized for a long time past, and this unexpected blow from one of their tried and trusty friends is liable to crush this nest of iniquity beyond the power of any future revival. This little freak on the part of Bro. Rollin simply goes to prove what all intelligent Masons know only too well, that Masonry is nothing more or less than an institution for manufacturing perjurers. No man ever did or ever can keep his obligation inviolate and hence what an imposition and a fraud to compel men to bear burdens which they themselves dare not and cannot touch with one of their fingers.

Hail Masonry divine!
Glory of ages shine,

and hail poor Keystone Lodge No. 639. Surely the fools are not all dead. E. RONAYNE.

SAVED.

I came here to this rural district from Peru to preach for a brother who has been annoyed by that old doctrine of the devil, Universalism. Despite all the opposition and hindrances this successful laborer for Christ has gathered in more than three score souls during the winter, who give good evidence of having been born again. I was much interested in a scrap of this good brother's history, which he related to me as wa rode along, and which may be of use to others.

When Brother —— was converted he united with the M. E. church, and in due time began to "preach the Word." He was about starting for conference, expecting to receive a circuit and give himself wholly to the work of the ministry in connection with the church of his choice. In a confidential conversation with a minister, who was much his senior, he was advised to join the Freemasons, and was told that there were more preachers in the conference than could be employed, and that unless he joined the Masons, he would get but a very indifferant appointment if any at all. The effect was what it would be with any truly converted man: to repel him from a professedly Christian church that was run by a lodge of motley worldlings, not to say scoffing Jews and infidels, and he was saved to do a great and good work among those who have a clear testimony against these secret abominations.

Taking this as a specimen, and it is by no means an isolated case, we have a church professedly of Christ occupying the position of a recruiting office for the Masonic lodge, and a ministry descending to the menial office of seducing and bribing young men to go into these sepulchers of death, and commit spiritual adultery with a Christless harlot who seeks to supplant the Bride, the Lamb's wife.

J. P. STODDARD.

TO REFORMERS.

Many of you, no doubt, who are able and anxious to aid the reform, are doing so but limitedly, from the mere fact that no practicable method suggests itself to your minds outside of donations to the tract fund of the National Christian Association, and the obtaining of some subscribers for the Cynosure and other reform papers; and these interests having, perhaps, been subserved to the extent of your ability or sense of propriety, you are resting on your oars. Now, in addition to the above laudable objects, there is a plan that may be tried by all reformers living at county seats, and who have some spare means for donation purposes. It is this: Send to the Cynosure office for 25, 50, 75 or 100 copies of my pamphlet, entitled "How to Defeat Masonic Scoundrelism within the Court House," and then go to the trial dockets of your court houses and notice what suits have been brought for action. Ascertain the status of the parties at issue, and where any are non-Masons donate to each of said parties a tract, and require as a condition of its donation that it be read before trial is had. Then watch results, and if good flows from the plan in any given case or cases, report facts to Cynosure office for publication. In nine cases out of ten, where a non-Mason is skinned by Masonic legerdemain working within the courts, it will make the party injured an active, zealous Anti-mason; and to increase our numbers, spread our cause, and break up Masonic iniquity is most certainly the grand object of our struggle. To accomplish this purpose, no laudable and legitimate means should be spared. War with Masonry within the courts is one of the objects we should keep constantly in view. There Masonry asserts the free character which she bestows upon her initiates, by subverting justice and robbing law of its force, and insuring to these initiates perfect immunity from all accountability to law. Shall this state of affairs continue, or shall it be stopped by the fiat of an enlightened people, determined to assert and maintain their rights, and make criminals, though they do wear the cable-tow, feel the weight, might and majesty of the law? A step in this direction will not prove delusive. How many readers of the Cynosure can narrate cases where non-Masons have been coolly murdered by members of the craft, and the criminals allowed in various ways to escape the punishment due to their crimes, through the potency of Masonic trickery? No doubt the details of many cases can be given. I know of several myself. One case occurred near Louisville, Ky., about six years ago. A Dr. Collins, living a few miles from there, followed a farmer who was driving a wagon and team towards Louisville, in open day, and deliberately shot him in the back, killing him almost instantly, and for no better cause than that such farmer owed him a small bill for medical services, which the murdered man alleged he was just at that time unable to pay. This Dr. Collins was arrested and tried at Louisville, and the murder squarely proven, but to no purpose. The Masons packed the jury, subverted justice, and cleared the criminal. I have been informed that this same Dr. Collins committed several other murders, punishment for which he readily escaped through the power of Masonry within our courts. It is a shame and a scandal upon a free and enlightened people that this state of affairs should exist. A hot agitation should be inaugurated and kept up until Masonry herself is subverted and paralyzed beyond the power or hope of resurrection. Let every man upon whom the responsibility of the law rests, and who can be made to feel its weight, lend his determined influence to bring all conspirators against accountability to law to the same level with himself. If an outsider commits murder he must pay the penalty of the law—then why should not the Mason be made to do the same thing? Make punishment to Masons a sure thing and there will be a far less number of crimes of all kinds committed within the limits of the United States.

Twenty-five cents each would be but a fair price for such a pamphlet. My object in putting the retail price so extremely low as ten cents each was to give opportunity and encouragement for the immense circulation which I think the work deserves. Seventy-five cents pays for a dozen by mail, and $6.00 for 100 by express; 25 at the same rate. See advertisement.

An Aged Seceder's Testimony.

Highgate, Vt., Feb. 7, 1877.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Dear Sir:—I find in the Cynosure of Jan. 25th a communication entitled "A Humbug Boxed up." It makes a horror creep over me to see how lightly some men of understanding will treat this subject. I suppose we are to understand by humbug that secretism is a deceptive but harmless object; when in fact it is a silken wile of the devil to ensnare men and bring them down to eternal perdition. Instead of an empty box men find themselves like the fly in a spider's web, ensnared with a thousand cords from which it is impossible to extricate themselves without Divine help. The means used to ensnare men is generally the love of power and profit.

In 1823 I felt the condemnation of sin, the need of something more than earth could give to remove the load from my conscience; and being in a religious community I knew that it was only by Christ as a Saviour that rest was to be found. But I could not find a starting point, and Freemasonry being very prevalent and popular, and called the handmaid of religion, I was induced to go into it hoping it would give me a starting point to acknowledge Christ before the world; but to my great disappointment I found it as much opposed to religion as light is to darkness. I was perplexed and knew not what to do, and laying it all to my ignorance, hearing nothing but its praise and the best of society there. I was but twenty-three years old and had had but little experience with the world. I saw the Congregational minister of the place, whose administration I had attended through a good revival, stripped, hood-winked and cable-towed, and led around the hall. He was a little round-shouldered. How my heart shrunk within me as I said to myself, Poor man! I have seen five clergymen in the lodge at one time, and saw a Methodist preacher knocked down and buried and the lodge taking the place of God and the Master personifying Christ and saying, "We will now take him by the strong grip of the lion's paw of the tribe of Judah," thus representing the resurrection. Do you wonder that my conscience was troubled when I saw all this, and heard their prayers read by wicked and vain men, and knew that the prayer of the wicked was an abomination to the Lord.

Thus I passed on till 1829, and found that other men felt as I did and were breaking the bonds of the accursed thing. Its terrible weight yet rested on me, and hearing the voice of my Saviour calling me saying, "Now is the accepted time. Now is the day of salvation;" and, "He that being often reproved and hardeneth his neck shall suddenly be destroyed and that without remedy," I followed my longing desire and renounced my allegiance to Freemasonry and felt an instantaneous breathing of a new atmosphere and a new world of freedom for which I thank my Creator and ever have. And now I am old and must shortly meet my Judge and have no fears of violated Masonic oaths.

Jonas Brown.

Thorough Work.

All honest minds require it. The Word of God requires it. Triumph in spiritual and material conflicts requires it. It may be some honest souls get so bewildered or are so superficial in their awakening to the merits of a great reform work, that thoroughness repels them, and the results of thoroughness in others frighten them; and they abandon a thorough examination, probing, testing and exposition of the institution either to be annihilated or reformed, and prefer that a softer, more pliant treatment would be recommended, if any at all; one that will awaken no inquiries, answer no honest questions, solve no doubts, satisfy no enlightened consciences. Such a lack of thoroughness will always prove a failure. It matters not what is to be done, such unthoroughness will always fail. Though the work is rugged it must be done. Though the work of darkness is revolting, it must be seen, thoroughly understood. Upon thoroughness here all subsequent progress depends.

Slavery in all its terrible character, had to be looked at, steadfastly gazed upon by the people before they would act. To cure the people of idolatry God holds it up before them in all its hideousness. In Isaiah 44: 9–20, he holds an idol before them to look at, tells them minutely how it is made and how it is worshiped and how the whole scene of the idol and worshipers look. It was a ludicrous, shameful scene. Doubtless idolatrous Israel would be filled with chagrin to contemplate such a miserable, stupid affair. But to be thorough, to accomplish anything, this must be done. Divine Wisdom saw it, and Divine Wisdom did it. Men must act upon God's plans if they accomplish any thing. Though the initiatory rites of Masonry are revolting in the extreme, they must be exhibited to an honest, thinking people. They must look at them until they realize their character, and see how they look. Mr. Ronayne is right. His work is called for. It is the first step in the Divine—aye, in every successful plan for the extinction of any evil; and he should be resolutely sustained by every lover of good and hater of evil. Brother E. W. Wheeler of New York, is manifestly below the position he should occupy, though doubtless a sincere and true man. When the intelligent lady asked him if Elders B. and C. went through such performances, it was in his power to know what those performances were, and being a Mason to answer her inquiry correctly. It was due to himself, to her and to the cause of reform he loves, to Ronayne, his brother fellow-worker, and to God, the author of all truth and maker of all men. He sadly failed when he failed to answer truly a question which he could have answered.

The inquiry was legitimate, it was natural and to be expected. If Brother Wheeler knows such degrading methods to be used by Masons, he should bring them to light as the hidden things of darkness when called upon by inquiring, honest souls who would know the truth. He puts expositions by Ronayne on the same basis with Masonic practices—ashamed of them wherever exhibited. Shame only attaches to a wrong relation to these practices. If they are denied and concealed there is every reason for the deepest shame. If exposed and opposed, however shameful in themselves, in no respect does the shame attach to us. Let Brother Ronayne continue thorough, let Brother Wheeler strengthen his hands and confirm his work. Let all be thorough in every respect, and this reform, which is manifestly a work of God, will become mighty in its achievements, until no shameful rites will be practiced in darkness.

A Humble Worker.

Our Mail.

Burges Smith, Clifford, Pa., writes:

"There were but four American party votes cast here, and they caused considerable excitement. S. E. Miller and myself handed out our tickets all day at our election. The Masons would look at them and would ask what we thought that we would do with those foolish things. But if there were but four who could vote that ticket we do not feel discouraged. If I did not think there was a greater power than man at the head of this work I should be discouraged and leave the ranks. But as I feel at present as though our Father handled the helm, I feel like girding on my armor and fighting for our liberty. How I would like to see that great speaker, Ronayne, like a mighty engine pass through this valley, and hear his voice like a trumpet echo from hill to hill, till every Freemason with honest sorrow would renounce his allegiance to the gigantic enemy which has bound him, and with Mr. Ronayne warn the unwary to shun the snares of Freemasonry. Our ministers confess that secretism is an evil that ought not to be in the churches, but we must not touch it. Let it alone. We will kill the pig easy. We will commence at the tail first, and will kill it a little at a time. When will our churches get rid of this evil if we are to let it alone. I say, let the banner float. Let our motto be 'Go ahead.'"

Israel Gable, Stewartstown, Pa., writes:

"'Who shall inhabit my holy hill? He that has clean hands and a pure heart. He that sweareth to his own hurt and changes not.' York county is very much polluted with secretism and many other evils. I have sometimes thought York county was nearest the bad place of any county in the State, but perhaps the whole State is not very far from it. May the Lord speedily save us, is my prayer."

Let these things rouse us to greater activity in the service of Christ. "Rescue the perishing"

Ira Remington, Flint, Mich., writes:

"Elder Barlow is preaching to the Baptist church in Mundy."

M. Z. Andrews, Oberlin, O, writes:

"By the blessing of God the Cynosure is becoming a power in the land."

P. Bacon, Weatogue, Ct., writes:

"The Lord has a true prophet in his servant, the Rev. E. E. Lamb, pastor of the Congregational church in Collinsville, who is not afraid to declare God's truth in opposition to all the devices of the adversary, and the Lord is honoring him by the conversion of a goodly number of the young people of his charge. A large number of the members of his church are Freemasons, and none to stand by and encourage him. Brethren and sisters, pray that he may be endowed with a mighty power from on high, that he may fight manfully the battle in which he is engaged, and that he may obtain a great victory over all the enemies of Jesus, the great and mighty conqueror who has promised to put all enemies under his feet."

Samuel D. Green, Chelsea, Mass., acknowledges the donations of some friends, and writes:

"These expressions of kindness make me grateful to God who has ever been kind to me, giving me my eyesight perfect, and a good set of sound teeth and almost perfect health from 1812 to 1876, for more than sixty years. Although for the first sixteen years of my life I was constantly under the doctor's care, and oftentimes life was despaired of, yet God has spared me and prospered me to battle against slavery and Masonry, two powers obnoxious to a free government established by our ancestors and the church of Christ. I have withstood hard usage in property, in business and in character; yet I have had a great deal of comfort in believing in my dear Saviour's mission, also in the love of dear friends in and out of the church, and to this day I cannot feel enmity to a single creature of the human family. Even in the sick room in which I have been compelled to stay for the last three months, I have had that peace of mind which the world cannot give or take away. A withholding of means justly due me has caused my wife and I to suffer many privations and a great derangement of my business, but kind friends like yourselves and others mentioned above, relieve in a measure if not in all I need. It comforts me that I live in their remembrance and affection. I have yet a great work to do in a case of discipline and hope to have yet health and means to accomplish it. I cannot just now feel able to write and thank those who have kindly remembered me by their contributions, but I trust a blessing will rest upon all, and the Saviour's saying, 'In that ye have done it unto the least of these ye have done it unto me.'"

A. C. Reed, Salem O., writes:

"We are trying to do all we can for the cause of freedom and the overthrow of oath-bound secrecy here. My prayer is God hasten the day when it will be reckoned among the evils of the past overcome by God's mighty power."

Seth C. Rice, Aztalan, Wis., writes:

"I am bound to do more for the circulation of the Cynosure."

Jas. Kennedy, Los Gatos, Cal., writes:

"According to the statement given by the Secretary of State there have been nineteen votes cast in California for Walker and Kirkpatrick, the presidential candidates of the American party."

John T. Comstock, Rollin, Mich., writes:

"The pard quits its den in the night-time, and is not to be trusted; and there is not a bird that sallies forth between two days, and is troublesome, but what has an ugly, hooked beak, and sharp claws; and what can we say of a secret oath-bound society which meets in the still hours of night with doors barred and bolted. * * I hope every one who takes the Cynosure will find a little time to get a few new subscribers for it. The cause demands it and by each one making an effort more can be done readily than by anything else we would be likely to do for the cause, and the paper would soon wield three times the influence it now does."

J. D. Maxwell, Woodgrove, O., writes:

"I have recently heard of your aper and that it opposes secret societies If it is that kind of a paper it is just what I want, as I live in one of the darkest nests of Odd-fellows and Freemasons that ever disgraced God's footstool. There are a few of us here who are battling against the sneaking clan, but as we have no books, papers or documents to aid us we are comparatively powerless."

A friend from Perkinsville, Ind., writes:

"I am a poor, sickly man and have a large family to support and cannot get money just when I need it, but a short time ago I sold a few hogs and when I got the money a Mason called on me and asked me to loan him some money and he would promptly pay it back in a certain time. I loaned it to him, thinking of course I would get it according to promise; but I have failed to get it yet, and if I ever I will have to sue him for it."

Would it not be well for you and others to unite in prayer for the salvation of this man's soul. The blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin.

J. D. Allen, Allentown, O., writes:

"Many people in these parts claim to be in sympathy with this reform movement, but there are but few of them who are willing to make any sacrifice whatever to advance this glorious cause, at least it has not got down to their pocket-books as yet. There is no use thinking about a reform, even in one family, without a sacrifice of time and means to accomplish that end, much less throughout these United States and the whole world."

E. K. Morris, Coloma, Ind , writes:

"I intend to make an effort to procure subscribers to your paper, for I believe you are engaged in a work worthy of the support of Christian people everywhere."

N. H. Dorsey, Oakland City, Ind., writes:

"It seems to me that the tone of the Cynosure is too severe against those Christians belonging to Masonic lodges (for surely there are many Christians belonging to the lodge) for how prone is humanity to err. It would seem from many of the correspondents that a member of the order cannot be a Christian. We should have charity for our erring brethren. If I go to a sacramental meeting I do not think that I have a right to say because the minister is a Mason he is a hypocrite therefore I will not partake of the sacrament at his hands. I am not to be his judge. If I partake of the sacrament in the right spirit I have discharged my duty whether the minister be a hypocrite or not. We must remember what our Saviour said about offending one of the least of his followers. Now I do not by any means approve of any of these secret fraternities, and it seems to me very strange how any Christian can join them; but then we must not judge others harshly."

See Jude 22d verse, Titus i. 13; iii. 10; Matt. xviii. 15-17; Rom. xvi. 17; 2 Thess. iii. 6-14; 2 Tim, iii. 5.

Chester Williams, Waterport, N. Y., writes:

"I want to scatter all the light on secret societies I can while I live, and I think the Cynosure should be in every family."

F. T. Little, Pre-emption, Ill., writes:

"The Masons have started a lodge at Pre-emption. Those tracts you sent to C. Blakely and myself are doing good. One man who intended to join now refuses."

A. W. Morris, South Argyle, N. Y., writes:

"I think many more subscribers might be secured in this county if any one had the time to canvass, but I have not the time to spare."

Ann Bunting, Holton, Kan., writes:

"Six secret societies in Holton and many, many true anti-secretists. Your paper could and should have a large circulation in this prosperous community. Could we only have Bro. Ronayne to come through important places in this State and scatter anti-secret literature, a rich harvest would be reaped. We have the material to oppose the works of darkness, but the trouble seems to be to get it utilized or into working order."

Asa O. Franklin, Maple Grove, Mich., writes:

"By the grace of God through his Son Jesus Christ and by the help of Anti-masonic literature I will never be a member of a secret society."

D. S. McConihay, reported six votes with a possibility of more, from West Virginia. The Secretary of State reports one vote as the official returns.

Wm. W. Templeton, Huntsville, O., writes:

"There are in this vicinity quite a number who are by profession opposed to secret orders, but they are not as zealous in the cause as they ought to be. We need more lectures."

Discussions on the subject of secret organizations are being reported to us from Malta, Illinois, and also from Cascade, Olmstead county, Minnesota, on the 17th of January, and in Marysville, Nodaway Co., Mo., on January 30th and to be held in West Lebanon, O., about the first of May next. We hope these discussions will be multiplied. Would like to have two or three hundred reported by the 22d of February. When rightly conducted they must be profitable.

C. Conklin, Wakeman, O., writes:

"I find I am strengthened by prayer. God must help to overthrow Freemasonry."

A friend from Mt. Vernon, Ia., writes:

"We think the Cynosure contains truth that ought to be widely known. We give it away to all who will read and we wish to distribute some tracts, for although we live in northwest Iowa, where it is not very thickly settled, yet Masonry is here."

Jacob Phillips, Smithdale, Ill., writes:

"I voted the American ticket clear through and have felt good ever since that I did. There were only two voted in the town. There are a great many Anti-masons here to hear them talk, but when it comes to voting they back down. They are some like the Jackson puppies. When they get their eyes open they will vote the American ticket."

John Leeper, Senecaville, O., writes:

"There were seven of us who dared to vote our principles at Senecaville, Ohio. Some of our leading State lecturers voted with the fraternity. Is this consistency? There was a leading Democrat told one of these gentlemen that he never wanted to hear him lecture on that subject again. I must say that I feel the same way. I think it is providential that Mr. Moody has taken the stand that he has. It is quite encouraging to the few reformers of the present day that the great evangelist of the world stands with us in the great reform. I trust that God will continue to raise up men all over this land who will bear testimony against these secret fraternities."

W. N. Lovell, Allemans, Pa., writes:

"I promised one dollar to the Carpenter fund. Here it is, and I will do more as soon as I can to help move on this mighty engine of truth."

S. W. Coats, Norton Co., Kan., writes:

"Hard times are upon us in Kansas. I know not what to do. It seems impossible to get money or even the necessaries of life. All seems to be a failure in Kansas except God's law. The Spirit of God is working on the hearts of the children of men in this place. Children are being born into the kingdom of God. I am often made to rejoice. My neighbors read my paper and they like it and its sentiments, but have no money. I never saw as hard times for money in Kansas."

W. T. F. Petty, Pittsfield, Ill., writes:

"Things are getting lively."

H. H. Hinman writes from Ames, Ia.:

"I came here from Nevada after speaking twice there. We have some good friends here, but the Masons are like exasperated hornets Can't get any of the churches."

Samuel N. Grout, Macon, Neb., writes:

"If there are tracts for free distribution I could make good use of them, for I wish to check the spread of secret lodges over this beautiful country, and we are in considerable danger of their spreading Last Saturday quite a number went from this county to Red Cloud, Webster county to organize an Odd-fellows' lodge, and a part of them at least, church members or not, came back on Sunday, having some thought of getting back to church to ease their consciences, but were too late. How unscrupulously are Christ and his requirements set aside by lodge men."

LESSON IX.—MARCH 4, 1877.—THE STORY OF NABOTH.

SCRIPTURE.—1 K. xxi. 4-14. Commit to memory 7-10; Primary Verses, 7, 8, 9, 10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou hast sold thyself to work evil in the sight of the Lord. 1 Kings xxi. 20.

4 And Ahab came into his house heavy and displeased because of the word which Naboth the Jezreelite had spoken to him; for he had said, I will not give thee the inheritance of my fathers. And he laid him down upon his bed, and turned away his face, and would eat no bread.

5 But Jezebel his wife came to him, and said unto him, Why is thy spirit so sad, that thou eatest no bread?

6 And he said unto her, Because I spake unto Naboth the Jezreelite, and said unto him, Give me thy vineyard for money; or else, if it please thee, I will give thee another vineyard for it; and he answered, I will not give thee my vineyard.

7 And Jezebel his wife said unto him, Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel? arise and eat bread and let thine heart be merry: I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite.

8 So she wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal, and sent the letters unto the elders and to the nobles that were in his city, dwelling with Naboth.

9 And she wrote in the letters, saying, Proclaim a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people.

10 And set two men, sons of Belial, before him, to bear witness against him, saying, Thou didst blaspheme God and the king. And then carry him out, and stone him, that he may die.

11 And the men of his city, even the elders and the nobles who were the inhabitants in his city, did as Jezebel had sent unto them, and as it was written in the letters which she had sent unto them.

12 They proclaimed a fast and set Naboth on high among the people.

13 And there came in two men, children of Belial, and sat before him: and the men of Belial witnessed against him, even against Naboth, in the presence of the people, saying, Naboth did blaspheme God and the king. Then they carried him forth out of the city, and stoned him with stones that he died.

14 Then they sent to Jezebel, saying, Naboth is stoned, and is dead.

TOPIC.—The curse of covetousness.

LESSON NOTES.—4. Heavy and displeased: Sulky and sour, like a disappointed child. Turned away his face: From his attendants and courtiers. 7. Dost thou now govern? Or is Naboth king? The language of irony. I will give thee: Since you have not spirit enough to secure it. 8. Elders and nobles: The chief men and rulers of the city. 9 Proclaim a fast: As if in view of some public calamity. Set Naboth on high: Bring him to public trial. 10. Two men: At least two witnesses were required by law. Deut. 17: 6 Sons of Belial: Wicked men, who would not scruple at anything. Blaspheme God and the king: So Stephen, the proto-martyr, was accused of blasphemy, by suborned witnesses. Acts 6: 11. Stone him: The legal punishment for blasphemy. Lev. 24: 16. 11. Did as Jezebel had sent: Through cowardly fear of royal authority. 13. Carried him forth out of the city: See Lev. 24: 16; Num. 15: 35. 14. Naboth .... is dead: The wicked woman had triumphed; but at what a cost! Three commandments, forbidding covetousness, false witness, and murder, had been broken. Truly this vineyard was "Aceldama!" Acts 1: 19.

BIBLE COMMENTARY.

4. And he will take your fields and your vineyards, and your olive yards, even the best of them, and give them to his servants, 1 Sam. 8: 14. Moreover the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression, to thrust them out of their possession, Ez. 46: 18. And they covet fields and take them by violence, Micah 2: 2. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, Ex. 20: 17. And covetousness, which is idolatry, Col. 3: 5.

7. Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness and his chambers by wrong, Jer. 22: 13. For they .... drink the wine of violence, Prov. 4: 17. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of saints, Rev. 17: 6.

9. Behold ye fast for strife and debate and to smite with the fist of wickedness, Is. 58: 4. When ye fast be not as the hypocrites, Matt. 6: 16.

Now the sons of Eli were sons of Belial. They knew not the Lord, 1 Sam. 2: 12; 2 Sam. 20: 1. At the mouth of two witnesses or at the mouth of three witnesses shall the matter be established, Deut. 19: 15. He that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death, and all the congregation shall certainly stone him, Lev. 24: 16. Then they suborned men which said, We have heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses and against God, Acts 6: 11. Now the chief priests and elders and all the council sought false witness against Jesus to put him to death, Matt. 26: 59. Bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp, Lev. 24: 14.

For the leaders of this people cause them to err, Is. 9: 16. And cast him out of the city and stoned him, Acts 7: 58. And having stoned Paul drew him out of the city, Acts 14: 19. Thou shalt not revile the gods nor curse the rulers of thy people, Ex. 22: 28. Surely I have seen yesterday the blood of Naboth and the blood of his sons, saith the Lord; and I will requite thee in this plat, saith the Lord, 2 Kings 9: 26. They gather themselves together against the righteous and condemn the innocent blood, Ps. 94: 21.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEB. 22, 1877.

—WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY is to-day commemorated by grateful and patriotic Americans. As a tribute to the memory of the "Father of his country" an article has been prepared for this number, delineating his character and vindicating him from the base claims of Freemasonry. In connection with this dav a proposition for its celebration was presented a short time since to the noble women who sustain our reform for its celebration. We hope to hear from various quarters of meetings held to-day for the strengthening of patriotic spirit and practical work in aid of the reform and its organ. The Publishers' Department is always full of interest to all who love the principles of the paper.

THE DUTY OF CONGREGATIONAL MINISTERS.

I was, the other day, in a beautiful inland city, with the pastor of its large Congregational church, whose status relative to reform is this: The great mass of the members are opposed, by their reason and instinct, to secret societies; but know little, and have been taught from the pulpit nothing concerning them, beyond a few hints and allusions.

Of course, curiosity and false self-interest have already drawn some members into the lodge, and they again blinded by the god of this world, whom they have worshipped (as Christ did not), are striving to draw in others, as rabid dogs feel an irresistible propensity to bite the venom which is killing them into others. No sooner in the lodge than they "compass sea and land to make one proselyte."

One of these deluded ones lately said, briskly, to his pastor, that they had been "making some Masons," when the good man replied: "See that you don't make them any worse than they are; for you have some hard characters in the lodge." Of course the man resented that his pastor should so twit upon facts; when if he had solemnly and in the fear of God told him that for Masons to get together and swear each other to conceal their crimes involves blasphemy in the oath, and treason in the obligation, the man would have respected his pastor, and probably wished himself out of the lodge. As it was. the pastor felt worried and disappointed, and blamed the editor of the Cynosure for "making the Masons so sensitive," by harsh language, and troubling his brethren by unduly pressing the subject of the reform.

I intend these words shall be read by this pastor, who is a truly good and talented man and minister, and decidedly above the average of Congregational pastors, as his church is much above in intelligence and piety the mass of Congregational churches. And I humbly and fervently beg him and his brethren to consider:—

1. That a little lodge leaven is leavening his whole lump, and will inevitably do so, unless this leaven of unrighteousness is "purged out," which can only be done by the word and blood of Christ."

2. Each pastor must be the judge of his own methods with his own people; but he must "purge out the old leaven," or be derelict before God.

3. While doing nothing effectual for his own people, to blame those of us who are toiling, giving, and praying for him and them, is to "make the heart of the righteous sad, whom the Lord hath not made sad." Ezek. xiii. 22.

The Congregational churches of this country, which are not already corrupted in doctrine and life, may easily and speedily be saved from the organized deism, Unitarianism and paganism of the lodge, by a very little self-denial and fidelity on the part of each pastor; and if each is willing to lose his influence for Christ's sake he will assuredly find it and save it. In centralized church governments the local pastor is vastly helped or hindered as the superior central power is right or wrong. But if the pastor of a Congregational church will first lay his all on the altar of Christ, and then, having thoroughly posted himself, go to his Masonic members in love, and teach them the accursed nature of the lodge, he will gain every one of his members who has one spark of the grace o God in his soul.

Almost every Congregational church, East or West, has a few spiritually enlightened souls in it who would cheerfully do this work for his or her pastor, if the pastor would love them for doing so, and would give them discreet and sound advice, and not go back on them if they happen to make mistakes.

Christ is mightier than Satan; stronger than "the strong man armed;" and angels "excel in strength" the angels who "kept not their first estate;" and these are the god and saints of the lodge. Will not the pastors consider these things, "now in this their day," before they are hid from their eyes, and set about enlightening and saving Christ's sheep committed to their care?

BENEVOLENCE NOT LEARNED IN THE LODGE.

It is not often that any testimony on the difference between the benevolence preached and that practiced by the secret orders can be had except in the observations of actual life. Once in a while a candid man is found who has been deceived into lodge affiliation, who can see the status of his organization on this subject, and is willing to "call a spade a spade." The distinction between sworn partiality and hearty, heaven-born charity is one of those facts that the god of this world, whose business it is to blind the eyes of men, would so befog and obscure that people will not recognize it. The New York Square has just given us such a testimony. In an editorial in its last issue the editor comments on efforts made in England to assist families of lodge men, and turning to New York says this of the lodges of that State:

The first Grand Lodge of the now State of New York was opened about the year 1751. Masonry has since then flourished and grown, until, in the month of June, 1876, the date when the accounts we have just recorded were made up, there were upwards of 81,000 Master Masons in good standing within her borders. We are unable to chronicle the number of children who ought to have been educated, clothed and maintained during the period alluded to, but believe that it, as may be the amount collected last June by voluntary contributions towards the noble and truly Masonic work of caring for the sons and daughters of our poor or deceased brethren, can be represented by the same figure—0.

MASONIC POSTMASTERS.

While we believe a majority of Masonic postmasters will not descend to the villainy of stealing the Cynosure and Anti-masonic books and tracts from the mail, it is a fact that a large number of books, tracts, pamphlets and Cynosures that are plainly and correctly mailed do not reach their destination.

It is also true that persons who failed to receive more than half their papers at an office under Masonic rule have written us that after ordering their mail sent to another office, not under lodge rule, they then received it with perfect regularity.

It is also a fact that we have repeatedly received complaints that the Cynosure did not come and the Masonic postmaster said it had not reached the office, when we had a notice from said postmaster received within a week stating that the Cynosure addressed to such person was not called for, but "lay dead in the office." Twice we have received such a complaint and a notice from the postmaster by the same mail. A large number of packages of American party tickets that should and would have reached their destination in from one to three days were from two to five weeks on the way, while many never were received. We have a multitude of letters stating that tickets were received the next day after the election and in nine cases out of ten the tickets had undoubtedly lain in the office there for two or three weeks. The American Party tickets for Connecticut, which were printed and mailed IN THAT STATE, were many of them three or four weeks in reaching their destination and of course were a day or two too late to be used.

IS THERE ANY REMEDY?

Our postal laws not only permit postmasters to examine the contents of all packages not sealed up and prepaid at six cents per ounce, but postmasters are under strict orders to make such examination, ostensibly to see that no written matter is enclosed in such packages. The law makes it an offense subject to a fine to enclose written matter in such a package, and if the package is sent to its destination the receiver must pay double letter rates, or twelve cents an ounce. The law also forbids to wrap a package so closely that it cannot be taken out of the wrapper without breaking it and subjects such a package to letter postage if it is sent; but the instructions of the Postmaster General are not to send such packages at all, but hold them for postage.

Our only remedy then is to have honest postmasters, since the law directs them to examine all packages of books, tracts, etc.

QUERIES ANSWERED.

THOMPSON, Conn., Feb. 11, 1877.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I wish to ask a few questions, and I hope they may be answered in the Cynosure. First, Are Master Masons sworn not to speak the word Mah-hah-bone aloud? I have heard two speak it aloud, one of them saying no man should put a padlock on his mouth. Second, Are A. G. Mackey's Lexicon, Manual, Ritualist, and Jurisprudence, standard authority on Masonry? I find a good many Masons, among whom is a Worshipful Master, who deny that they are used in Masonic lodges. Third, Are the obligations, as given in J. H. H. Woodward's pamphlet, correct? In the fourth obligation in the Master's degree there are thirty-eight words, and a Master Mason declares upon his word of honor that nineteen words are misplaced, and eight of them are not in the correct obligation. (Bro. Woodward sent me fifty copies of his pamphlet, which I sold, but the above statement has hindered me from selling but a few of the second fifty.) I am the only one here who dares to say anything against the "old handmaid," but I will keep them stirred up. I have tried hard to get subscribers for the Cynosure, but have not got anything but good words for it so far, and well I know it cannot live on words. But I intend to keep trying, and praying, and I trust to see the reform and paper grow stronger and stronger, until the whole land shall be filled with the truth it teaches.

J. S. PERRY.

ANSWER.—1st. Master Masons are so sworn.

2d. Dr. Mackey's works are standard in the lodge. No Masonic writer is of better authority. He is editor of the Voice of Masonry, of this city, and his works are sold in every Masonic bookstore in the country.

3d. Woodward's pamphlet is correct. It varies in a half dozen words or so from Ronayne, but there is as much difference in the words in the administration of the oath under the Grand Lodges of the different States. If the objectors to Mr. Woodward's veracity speak the truth, their statements are based on the reading of the oath under the Connecticut Grand Lodge. More likely they are quibbling over a word or two which in no wise affects the sense or wickedness of the obligation.

—A correspondent asks if the editor of the New York Witness is connected with any secret order. From personal acquaintance with Mr. Dougal we are happy to say that he is not. The Witness always bears an honest testimony against the lodge.

—Rev. W. W. Ames, of Menomonee, Wis., has published in neat one-page tract form Mr. Moody's last testimony against the lodge. He will send to any wishing them for distribution at the rate of fifty cents per hundred.

—Past Master Ronayne, since his return from Canada, has been doing some good work in Chicago, by private admonition, public testimony and appeals through the press to his former companions in Freemasonry, of which he has assurances that they are not being made in vain. Arrangements have been made for his assistance in the Crestline, O., debate, and he started for that city early Monday morning, to be in time for the evening discussion. If it will stand up to fair blows, Freemasonry will not soon forget the day he visited Crestline.

—An apprehension may have arisen in the minds of the readers of our last report of the temperance prayer-meeting in the Carpenter building. The 'Brother Hodge" called on first by the leader for his testimony was an entire stranger to us—not by any means the brother with whom many of our friends became acquainted at the Centennial. He, Thos. Hodge, was never drawn by the power of Satan through an evil appetite into the use of strong drink, though redeemed by the same grace that saved his neighbor of the same name from "an horrible pit."

—Now that the churches are gathering in from revival labors, pastors, teachers, parents, and young converts themselves, will find much profit in President Finney's practical advice to this class on the tenth page of this number.

—Our foreign correspondent gives us another glimpse of England before turning to sunnier scenes in the south of Europe where he is now visiting many places of note. He saw Cambridge with open eyes and draws off the picture for us with facile pen.

—The lodge cannot overlook what has been done at Wasioja, Minn., through the preaching and lectures of Kinney, Snyder and Ronayne, and with the same malignancy with which it has once and again attacked Wheaton College they are bearing down on Bro. Paine's Academy, fully expecting to suppress or starve out the influences for truth and reform centering there. There is an Arm whom this giant evil has defied. Rev. J. E. Gould asks the friends of the institution to beseech the aid of that Power. He writes to the Wesleyan:

"We hope our brethren will not forget Wasioja. Since we opened the war with Masonry the whole country around is in an uproar. The battle is a hot one. The Masons will kill our school if they can. We are in our infancy. Masonry is strong in this country; but in the name of God we have set up our banners, and we expect to fight it out on this line. Will everybody help us and pray God to help us, that we may not be overcome. Don't fail to remember Wasioja in prayer."

—We are pleased to see a communication from J. M. Scott in the Newark, O., Banner, which deals with Masonic excuses in a thorough manner. The affidavit of Mr. Ronayne being printed, friend Scott challenges its contradiction, and offers any ordained minister of the county of Licking $25 who will make affidavit before a competent officer that Mr. Ronayne's statement is untrue. They will all leave their churches before they will take up the offer.

—C. A. Sexton, of Topeka, Kans., treasurer of the Kansas State Association, issues a small free monthly, The Bazaar News, in which several useful qualities are happily united. Besides being a business advertisement, it gives notices of religious and reform meetings and publications, and the last number contains a well drawn petition to the State Legislature, requesting an inquiry into the tendency of secret orders, including convents.

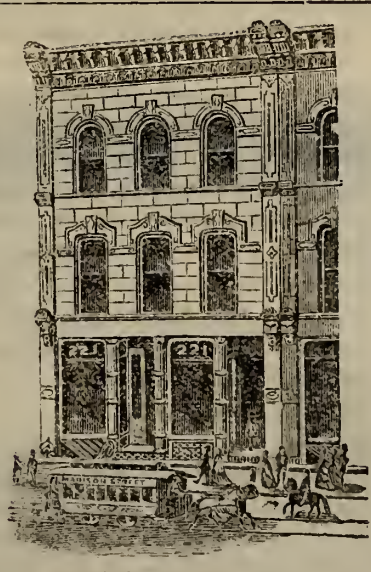
—Under the preaching of Paul at Ephesus, we read in the 19th of Acts that "many that believed came, and confessed, and showed their deeds. Many of them also which used curious arts brought their books together, and burned them before all men." Very similar to this wonderful exhibition of the power of the Gospel is an account from Sarahsville, O., in the American Wesleyan, of a powerful revival work, during which a young teacher, an Odd-fellow, was converted. The next morning he took down his manuals and books of the order and burned them, so thoroughly determined was he to have no more to do with the spiritual sorceries of the lodge. Another young man was saved to Christ and lost to the lodge in the same meetings.

—Like to this is the cleansing from "filthiness of the flesh," reported in the Christian Worker, which took place in connection with the late yearly meeting of the Friends in Ohio. During its progress many testified to the grace given them to put away tobacco; many remarkable cases of the appetite for it being entirely taken away and complete deliverance experienced in answer to prayer.

—The Odd-fellow Grand Lodge report of Rhode Island shows that there are six members in the order more than last year. Out of the $58,400 receipts $18,800 only were paid for relief and burial of the dead. The momentum of the order is nearly spent in "Little Rhody."

—The late Speaker Kerr was a Freemason. A correspondent of the Evangelical Repository states that he was a member of the order, was buried by them, and given a place in the "Grand Lodge above." A Christian gentleman visited Mr. Kerr just before his death, and in course of the conversation, asked if he was resting in the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ. His reply was in the negative. Of course Freemasonry makes no distinctions on this account. Christian, Jew or pagan are equal in sharing the benefits of a future world, according to its doctrine.

PRAYER.—Do not say you cannot pray,, because you cannot speak much or well, or long. Prayer is wrestling with God; the heart is the wrestler; holy faith is the strength of it. If, by means of this strength thy heart be a good wrestler, though thou art ever so tongue-tied, thou wilt be a prevailer. Rhetoric goes for little in the heavenly court, but sincere groans have a kind of omnipotence.



Front view of the CARPENTER DONATION, a fine, stone front building No. 221 West Madison St., Chicago, now occupied by the National Christian Association. The fee simple will be given by Mr. Carpenter if other friends raise $30,000 by Apr 1st 1878, in cash or "good, negotiable, interest-bearing notes" to establish a Publishing House and headquarters of the reform. Send donations to the Treasurer at 18 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The Home Circle.

Winter.

Down swept the chill wind from the mountain peak,
From the snow five thousand summers old;
On open wold and hill-top bleak
It had gathered all the cold,
And whirled it like sleet on the wanderer's cheek;
It carried a shiver everywhere
From the unleafed boughs and pastures bare;
The little brook heard it, and built a roof
'Neath which he could house him winter proof;
All night by the white stars' frosty gleams
He groined his arches and matched his beams;
Slender and clear were his crystal spars
As the lashes of light that trim the stars;
He sculptured every summer delight
In his halls and chambers out of sight;
Sometimes his tinkling waters slipped
Down through a frost-leaved forest crypt,
Long, sparkling aisles of steel-stemmed trees,
Bending counterfeit a breeze.
Sometimes the roof no fretwork knew
But silvery mosses, that downward grew;
Sometimes it was carved in sharp relief
With quaint arabesques of ice fern leaf;
Sometimes it was simply smooth and clear
For the gladness of heaven to shine through, and here
He had caught the nodding bulrush tops,
And hung them thickly with diamond drops,
Which crystalled the beams of moon and sun,
And made a star of every one.
No mortal builder's most rare device
Could match this winter-palace of ice;
'Twas as if every image that mirrored lay
In his depths serene through the summer day,
Each flitting shadow of earth and sky,
Lest the happy model should be lost,
Had been mimicked in fairy masonry
By the elfin builders of the frost.

Pres. Finney on the Care of Young Converts.

1. Their future character and influence must depend under God upon the instructions they receive in the early stages of their Christian course. The notions that they first form—the shape and direction given to their religious character at first, will, in a great measure, establish their future influence and destiny. They therefore need peculiar instruction suited to their mental capacities, the infancy of their religion, and the circumstances with which they are surrounded. I repeat it, their instructions need to be altogether peculiar. Infants should not be fed with strong meat, nor a child treated as a man. They ought to be made to see that they are children, that they are in a state of spiritual infancy, and have everything to learn. Too much pains cannot be taken, therefore, to show them the perfection of their ignorance on spiritual subjects. They need, therefore, to begin with the A, B, C, of religious truth and duty, and be, at the outset, well grounded in the first principles of the doctrine in Christ.

2. Their instructions should be very thorough. It is no doubt a great error to suppose that young converts should not be instructed to make those discriminations that distinguish between true and false affections, between selfishness and religion. Unless these discriminations are made, and the convert rendered familiar with them, he will almost with certainty, for a time, imagine that he has much more religion than he really has, and afterwards come to be very doubtful whether he has any religion at all. If selfish affections and emotions are allowed to be intermingled with holy ones, without discrimination, all will at first be taken as religion. But this process long indulged will soon root out and annihilate all holy affection, and leave the mind perpetually under the influence of selfishness. This selfish religion will soon develop itself so as to lead its possessor so utterly away from the Bible as as to force upon him the conviction that he is all wrong, and that he has probably never had any religion. But if he cannot be led to make the necessary discriminations, selfish affections, instead of being puffed up by them, will greatly humble him, put him on his guard to resist them, and the occasions of them. He should therefore be hunted from every form and degree of selfishness. He should have a clear idea of what selfishness is, and, from week to week, the multitudinous forms in which it appears should be pointed out, and its deceitfulness exposed. When I have preached upon selfishness, the question has often been asked me by professors, "Why do not ministers preach more about selfishness? Why is not the fact that all selfishness is sin made more prominent in the instruction of religious teachers? And why is it not known that selfishness and benevolence are eternal opposites, and that their existence in the same mind at the same time is utterly impossible?"

I confess that it has been to myself a matter great wonder, that the distinction between selfishness and religion is not made more prominent in the instructions of the pulpit, and that selfishness in so many forms, and in such disgusting degrees, is suffered to remain unrebuked in the church of God. If converts are suffered to indulge selfishness; if they are allowed to overlook its malignant character; if they are allowed to indulge it in any form, or in any degree, it will inevitably eat out all their piety. Nay, their piety is gone already; for the indulgence of any form of selfishness is a state of absolute rebellion against God. Hence—

3. They should be searched to the very quick. Their business principles, and habits, and transactions, should be thoroughly scrutinized and weighed in the balances of the law of supreme love to God, and equal love to man. They should be made to see and feel that to pursue any employment or course of life for any selfish end, or in any selfish manner, is downright apostacy from God. It should be insisted upon that they adopt, in heart and practice, the law of universal love as their rule of life.

4. Young converts must be made acquainted with the nature and degree of their spiritual wants and dependence. They should be guarded with the utmost caution against a spirit of self-dependence on the the one hand, and esteeming their dependence upon the grace of God, as a calamity rather than a crime, on the other. They should be made to see and feel that their cannot is their will not; in other words, that their want of stability and disposition to do the will of God is the only difficulty in the way. But that this instability of disposition is so great that they are as really dependent upon the influence of divine grace as if obedience to them were naturally impossible. I am aware, my brethren, that in churches where they have revivals these truths are taught, or there would not be revivals; yet I have often thought that pains enough were not taken to make converts clearly apprehend the depth and the nature of their dependence.

5. I have found in my own experience that the greatest painstaking is required to give young converts a just and sufficiently affecting view view of their necessities, and in the same connection to lead them to a just apprehension of the fulness and nature of the remedy. The law must forever serve as a school-master to bring them to Christ. This, as long as the world stands, will be the use of the law in a world of sinners; but, when they are brought to Christ, they should be brought to him not only as a justifying, but as a sanctifying Saviour. No pains should be spared to make them understand, not only that Christ has power on earth to forgive sin, but that his blood cleanseth from the the commission of all sin. The law, when properly exhibited, not only drives the sinner to Christ for pardon, but for sanctification. And the convert should be made to see that the main business of Jesus is to save him from the commission of sin rather than to pardon him for it.

6. I am fully convinced that pains enough are not taken to lead the convert to seek earnestly the "baptism of the Holy Ghost, after that he hath believed." My own instruction to converts, in this respect, has formerly been very defective. The fact that the baptism of the Holy Ghost is a thing universally promised or proffered to Christians under this dispensation, and that this blessing is to be sought and received after conversion, was not so distinctly before my mind formerly as it has been of late. I am satisfied that this truth is abundantly taught in the Bible, and that the baptism of the Holy Ghost is the secret of the stability of Christian character. It is that water of life which Christ has promised, that, if they drink it, "they shall never thirst, but that it shall be in them a well of water springing up into everlasting life." Converts should therefore have their attention definitely directed to what this blessing is—its nature—how it is to be obtained—to what extent—and with what degree of permanency it may be expected. In short, they need to be baptized into the very death of Christ, and by this baptism to be slain, and buried, and planted, and crucified, and raised to a life of holiness in Christ. Anything short of this will leave the convert to inevitable backsliding, and to this attainment I am persuaded he may be led, by suitable painstaking on the part of his religious teachers.

7. In order to this it is indispensable that he should be cut off from every kind and degree of unholy self-indulgence. His appetites and passions must be restrained and subdued; his body kept thoroughly under, and his whole being must be honestly, fully, and sacredly set apart to the service of God.

The town of Gheel, in the province of Antwerp, has been for six centuries the abode of madmen. There are 11,000 inhabitants in the place, and they have charge of 1,300 lunatics from abroad, who are among the families, and are treated with great consideration. The children from youth are familiarized with the business, and all the people know how to manage those committed to their charge. One of the greatest social punishments that can be inflicted on a family is to declare that it is unfit to receive such boarders. The lunatics are disposed of among the inhabitants according to their wealth or station, the better families receiving the wealthier patients. The cures average, it is said, from 60 to 75 to the hundred. Gheel is divided into four districts, each district with its overseer and physician. Large sums of money are spent in the place by the patients, and families generally are desirous of having one or more lunatics on their hands.

Listening to Evil Reports.—The longer I live the more I feel the importance of adhering to the rule which I have laid down for myself in relation to such matters: 1. To hear as little as possible whatever is to the prejudice of others. 2. To believe nothing of the kind till I am absolutely forced to it. 3. Never to drink into the spirit of one who circulates an evil report. 4. Always to moderate, as far as I can, the unkindness which is expressed towards others. 5. Always to believe that, if the other side were heard, a very different account would be given of the matter.—Carus' Life of Simeon.

The Duke of Wellington used often to remark that the secret of success lay in embracing every opportunity of being useful; and that he never forgot the golden rule which he learned in the church catachism, "of doing your duty in that station of life to which it shall please God to call you." This was the secret of David's success.

Taking the lowest estimates, it is computed that 70,000 Africans are still annually exported into slavery, besides all that perish on the way to the coast, or on the passage, which, by Dr. Livingstone's estimates, raise the number to 500,000 annually sacrificed to the slave trade.

Children's Corner

Little Feet and Little Hands.

Little feet and little hands,
Busy all the day,
Never staying in your playing
Long upon your way,
Little knowing whither going,
Come to me I pray!

Bring the sweetness, in its fleetness,
Of the early flowers,
All the blessings and caressings
Of our sunny hours!

Little feet and little hands,
What awaits for you?
Sad to-morrows with their sorrows,
Clouds, or skies of blue?
Will the pleasures come with treasures
Ever glad and new?

Never tarry feet that carry
Little ones along,
May they bear the darlings where
The air is full of song!

Little feet and little hands,
Ye are wondrous fair!
Ye are staying in your playing
From a balmy air
Gently blowing, never knowing
Any thought of care.

To its breezes, if it pleases
Him who guides our way,
May you wander, over yonder,
Where they ever play,
And no smiling, or beguiling
Woo again to stray.

Puzzle Drawer.

Leetonia, O., Feb. 7, 1877.

Mr. Editor:—I send you an answer to the enigma in the Cynosure of February 1st: "Write to our friends." I also send you another which, if acceptable, I should be pleased to see inserted in your paper.

Yours, Allie Alexander.

I am composed of 35 letters.

6, 14 and 30 is an animal.

2, 16, 25, 28, 3 and 11 is a place where no Masonry is found.

17, 23 and 6 is a kind of butter.

7, 16, 3 and 34 is a fluid.

9, 33, 18, 27, 29 and 8 is a State in the Union.

28, 5, 13, 26, 19 and 2 is a finisher.

31, 32, 10, 20, 14 and 17 is a musical instrument.

12, 4, 25, 15, 24, 3, 34 and 21 is a production of the blarney stone.

My whole is an appropriate name for the Masonic fraternity.

Nellie Gurnea, of Tonica, LaSalle Co., Ill., also sends the correct answer along with a new enigma, which follows:

I am composed of 13 letters.

1, 10 and 7 is a member of the body.

2, 11 and 13 to color.

3, 8, 12, 13 and 11 something we all value.

6, 4, 8 and 7 part of a house.

6, 10 and 9 a girl's nickname.

My whole is a man of whom all the readers of the Cynosure are glad to hear.

A Boy's Way to Success.

Every boy wishes to be successful; and he thinks if he only could find a sure road to success in any undertaking he would not hesitate to enter it. It is the fear of failure at the last that keeps many from pushing on.

There are three qualities that will insure success in any walk in life, namely: ability, integrity, and industry; and though at first sight, it might seem as if the first of these must be a gift and cannot be cultivated, you will find it is a fact that every boy has ability, if he only finds out in which line of study or action it lies. Ability is the power of doing a thing well. A boy should learn early that he cannot have ability in everything; that is, few boys have a great deal of general ability. The first rule should be that "whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well." A boy who does his best in whatever he undertakes will soon find in what direction his efforts meet with most marked success; and having discovered that, let him bend all his energies to be first in that particular branch of study or work. Better be a first-class carpenter than a fourth-rate lawyer; a good machinist than a poor doctor.

But many boys cannot judge of their own abilities; and the father, who should study his son's peculiar temperament and characteristics, gives them little thought. Don't give it up; be on the watch to make a good friend; choose your associates among those who aim high, not as to money or social standing, but as to learning and earnest Christian living. A boy should have, at least, one friend several years his senior, who can guide him as to a choice of what branch of work or study to set his best efforts to. He will by earnest endeavor gain ability; but let him guard well his integrity. This is more than truthfulness; it is whole-heartedness. A boy of integrity is like a stout, staunch ship, sailing through the ocean; the waves may sway her from side to side, but she remains whole and firm. Boys, make up your minds to be true. If you have deceived, say so to yourself, and say: "By God's help I'll stop short, from this day. I must earn an honorable name, and I will," and at whatever cost to yourself, be true; let no temptation spring a leak in your heart.

Now, about industry. A boy with good ability and integrity, even if he is rather lazy and shiftless, will perhaps get along, but what opportunities lost for usefulness! Boys, remember that the most successful men have been the most industrious. It is easy to point out some rich man and say, "He began as a poor boy." Yes, but he worked hard, year in and year out. One word about this industry. Don't let it be simply being industrious to be rich. Aim higher than riches. Store your mind with gleanings from the best writers; cultivate a taste for reading, and let the success at which you aim be the approval of a good conscience. Riches are not to be despised; but it is only when they are united to learning and religion that they are to be envied.

I wish boys would realize more that every little event of their boyhood is shaping their future character. The boy who is more anxious to understand perfectly what he learns than to appear to make great progress; who cares more for acquiring knowledge than to shine as a student, will be a man of more ability and integrity than one who cares for the mere surface show.—Sunday School Times.

The Leaning Tower of Pisa.

This tower was begun in 1174. It is 190 feet high, 50 feet in diameter, and consists of two circular walls, each two feet thick, with a stairway running up between them. The well inside the inner wall is two feet in diameter. The summit is reached by 330 steps. The tower is divided into eight stories, each having an outside gallery of seven feet projection, and the topmost story overhanging the base about 15 feet; though, as the center of gravity is still 10 feet within the base, the building is perfectly safe. It has been supposed that this inclination was intentional, but the opinion that the foundation has sunk is no doubt correct. It is most likely that the defective foundation became perceptible before the tower had reached one-half its height, as at that elevation the unequal length of the columns show an attempt to restore the perpendicular, and at about the same place the walls are strengthened with iron bars. On the top are seven bells, the largest of which weighs 12,000 pounds.

A Sensible Dog.

Here is an anecdote with a sharp moral, that comes to us all the way from Australia:

"Sixty years ago, when I was a teacher in Kilmalcum parish," says John Fraser, "I was using whisky bitters for my stomach's sake. One day I dipped a piece of cake in it, and gave it to the dog. He grudgingly ate it, curling up his lip to avoid the taste. Ere long he became tipsy, he howled most piteously, and unnaturally looked up in my face as if for help. He began to stagger and fall like a drunken man. The appearance of his face and eyes was extraordinary! He lay on the floor and howled until the effects of the drink wore off. This was supreme folly; it was wicked. The dog never forgot the trick. Whenever afterward I went to the press for the bottle he hastened to the outside of the house. One day, the door being shut, he sprang at one bolt through the pane of glass to get outside. So much for the wisdom of the dog—infinitely surpassing foolish drinking men.

Home and Farm.

Diphtheria.—The fearful prevalence of this disease in many parts of the country will secure attention to the well reported remedies, and from among those going the round of the papers we give the two following: here is the first. The treatment consists in thoroughly swabbing the back of the mouth and throat with a wash made thus: Table salt, two drachms; black pepper, golden seal, nitrate of potash, alum, one drachm each. Mix and pulverize put into a tea-cup half full of boiling water; stir well, and then fill up with good vinegar. Use every half hour, one, two and four, as recovery progresses. The patient may swallow a little each time. Apply one ounce each of spirits of turpentine, sweet oil and aqua amonia mixed, every hour, to the whole of the throat, and to the breast bone every four, keeping flannel to the part.

The other is this:

Put the children (or those suffering from it) in a warm bed, and take some hot coals from the stove on a fire shovel; sprinkle a tablespoonful or less of flour of sulphur on the hot cinders and place under the bed. The nurse or attendant must remove the shovel out of the room when the children begin coughing. Let this be done for two or three nights and it will be found that the fumes from sulphur will kill the fungus called diphtheria. I know that hundreds have been saved in Australia from this remedy, and I would strongly recommend parents to fumigate their dwellings with sulphur once a week; it does good.—Ex.

Cure for Lock-jaw.—A correspondent of the Scientific American recommends turpentine as a cure for lock-jaw. He says: "Let any one who has an attack of lock-jaw take a small quantity of turpentine, warm it, and pour it on the wound, no matter where it is or of what nature it is, and relief will follow in less than one minute. Nothing better can be applied to a severe cut or bruise than cold turpentine; it will give certain relief almost instantly. Turpentine is also a sovereign remedy for croup. Saturate a piece of flannel with it and spread the flannel on the throat and chest, and in very severe cases, three to five drops on a lump of sugar may be taken inwardly."

Worth Knowing.—Every little while we read of one who has stuck a rusty nail in his foot or some portion of his person, and lock-jaw has resulted therefrom. All such wounds can be healed without any fatal consequences following them. The remedy is simple—it is only to smoke the wound or bruise that is inflamed, with burned wool or woolen cloth. Twenty minutes in the smoke of wool will take pain out of the worst case of inflammation arising from a wound.

House-Building Hints.

The communications of Mr. Thos. Filer, of Fullersburg, Ill., giving the results of years of study and experiment in constructing a comfortable house, have no doubt been read with interest by many. Some may have put his ideas into practice, and can suggest something farther on the subject. The season is now at hand when building will begin, and many suggestions may be made of use to thousands of families. From our own experience we wish to draw for the benefit of our readers.

In constructing a common balloon frame house it will, we believe, be found profitable to put the sheathing boards on the inside of the studding, instead of under the siding. This will leave a space between the studding that can be filled with sawdust at any time before plastering. Still better will be to put on besides under the siding the "inodorous sheathing paper," manufactured by the Rock River Paper Co., of this city. Thus the sides of your house will be rendered impervious to wind. By "furring out" in lathing the plaster will fill up, forming a very solid wall, that will hold a nail anywhere. If the sheathing-boards are put on diagonally the house will be more firmly braced, though more lumber will be needed. Always lath and plaster tight to floors and window and door frames. Double windows should also be provided for the winter season. The comfort of living in such a house will repay the expense in a single year, beside a great saving of fuel. With a simple system of ventilation, of which we shall speak hereafter, you may have summer indoors the year round.

Sawdust for filling may not be easily procured. Other non-conducting materials have been suggested by Mr. Filer, as fine or chopped straw, tan-bark, ashes, fine charcoal, etc., and dry sand might be added, though not so good a non-conductor. Any material easily inflammable may be rendered less so if ashes, sand, or air-slacked lime is put in at the bottom and top and in intermediate places, especially at the second floor. The operations of rats and mice may be effectually prevented in the same way.

The sheathing paper mentioned above is so manufactured that two thicknesses, with air spaces between, can be put on by the carpenters. Where filling cannot be done the two linings of paper will pay well, though not so effectual as the other. In our opinion, one lining of paper will pay in connection with the filling.

Warm floors, cisterns, and ventilation will have our attention hereafter.

THE GOSPEL MEETING.

MR MOODY'S SERMON ON THE "BLOOD."

We find Abel the first man who went to heaven, and he went by way of the blood, and we find it in all the worships of God from the earliest times. Mr. Sankey sings solos upon the redeeming blood. I can imagine when Abel got there how he sung the song of redemption. How the angels gathered around him and listened to that song, it was the first time they had ever heard that song; but six thousand years have gone and now there's a great chorus of saints redeemed by the precious blood. The first man who went to heaven went by way of blood, and the last man who passes through those pearly gates must go the same way. We find not only Abel and Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, but all of them, went there through an atonement. Now we find in the twelfth chapter and second verse of Exodus — the most important chapter in the Word of God: "This month shall be unto you the beginning of months; it shall be the first month of the year to you," and then in the fourth verse: "And if the household be too little for the lamb, let him and his neighbor next unto his house take it according to the number of the souls; every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb." Now, it don't say, "if the lamb be too small for the household," but "if the household be too little for the lamb." You may have some pretty large households; your houses may be too small for them, but Christ has plenty of room. We don't start from the cradle to heaven, but from the cross. That's where eternal life begins—when we come to Calvary; when we come to Christ and get grace. We don't come to heaven when we are born into the natural world, but into the spiritual world. That's where we date our spiritual lives from. Before that our lives are a blank so far as grace is concerned. Adam dated from the time of the flood, and Noah, when he came from the ark dated from the blood offering, and so the children of Israel when they came out of Egypt. And even to-day, when they take up their pens and date 1876 years—when do they date from? Why, from the blood of Christ. Everything dates from blood. In this chapter we see the command to sacrifice. They slew the lamb. God didn't say, "Put a lamb to your front door and I will spare you," but on the houses.

Some classes of people say, preach anything but the death, preach the life of Christ. You may preach that and you'll never save a soul. It is not Christ's sympathy—his life we preach, it is his sacrifice. That's what brings men out of darkness. I can imagine some proud Egyptians that day who, when they heard the bleating of the lambs—there must have been over two hundred thousand lambs saying, "What an absurd performance. Every man has got a lamb, and they have got the best lambs out of the flock, too, and they are going to cover their houses with the blood." They looked upon this as an absurd proceeding—a flaw in their character. You may find a good many flaws in your character, but you cannot find a flaw in the Lamb of God. When the hour came you could see them all slaying their lambs, and not only that but putting the blood on the doorposts. To those Egyptians or to the men of the world how absurd it looked. They probably said, "Why are you disfiguring your houses in that way? It was not upon the threshold. God didn't want that, but they were to put it upon the lintels and doorposts—where God could see it that night so that (thirteenth verse) he might see it as a token. This blood was to be a substitution for death, and all who hadn't that token in the land of Egypt had their firstborn smitten at midnight. There was a wail from Egypt from one end to the other. But death didn't come near the homes where was the token. It was death that kept death out of the dwelling.

Many people say, "I wish I was as good as that woman who has been ministering to the sick for the last fifty years. I would feel sure of heaven." My friends, if you have the blood behind you, you are as safe as anybody on this earth. It is not because that woman has been living a life of sacrifices in her ministrations to the poor that she will enter the kingdom of God. It is not our life of good deeds or our righteousness that will take us to heaven, but the atonement. And the question ought to come to every one to-night "Are we sheltered behind the blood?" If not, death will come by and by and you will be separated from God for eternity. If you have not a substitute you will die. Death is passed upon all of us. Why? Because of our sin. If we have not a substitute we have no hope.

Not only were they to have a token, but they were to do something else. We read in the 11th verse: "And thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand; and ye shall eat it in haste; it is the Lord's passover." Now a great many people wonder why they haven't got more spiritual power, and have not the joy of the Lord with them all the time. It is because they haven't got the blood of the lamb with them. These pilgrims had a long journey before them and the Lord told them to eat the lamb. If we feed upon the lamb we will get strength in proportion. My friends be sure before you commence on your pilgrimage that you are sheltered behind the blood, for when He sees the blood death will pass over you. And let me ask this assemblage to-night if every one of you have the token? I was speaking to a man some time ago, who, when I asked him if he had the token, said: "I have prayer," and when he got to heaven he would pray, and he thought that would admit him. I said to him: "You won't get in that way. You must be cleansed by the blood of Christ. That is the only power that will open the gates of heaven—the only countersign."

When I went East the other night the conductor came around and called for tickets. I pulled out my ticket and he punched it. He didn't know whether it was a white or a black man that presented it, I believe. He didn't care who it was; all he wanted was the token. So all that God wants is the token of our salvation. He doesn't depend upon our deeds, our righteousness, or upon our lives; it depends upon whether or not we are sheltered behind the blood. That is the question. It didn't matter in that land of Goshen whether the child was six months or six years old if it was behind the blood. It was not their moral character, not their connections, but the blood that saved them. It is the atonement that saves, and that is the teaching all through your Bible.

There is another verse in the twenty-ninth chapter of Exodus I want to call your attention to: "Thou shalt slay the ram, and thou shalt take his blood and sprinkle it round about the altar." Now we see that Aaron, the high priest, could not come to God with his prayers alone. He had to sprinkle the blood upon the altar. There was a time when I didn't believe in the substitution and in the blood, and my prayers went no higher than my head; but when I came to God by Jesus Christ—by the way of blood—it was different. I never knew a man who came to God really but who came this way. That great high priest had to come this way, too.

Then again in the thirtieth chapter, tenth verse, we see: "And Aaron shall make an atonement upon the horns of it once in a year, with the blood of the sin-offering of atonements; once in the year shall he make atonement upon it throughout your generations; it is most holy unto the Lord." Now, an atonement is the only thing that makes a sinner and God one — is the only thing that will bring God and the sinner together. I would like, if I had time, to give you all the passages touching upon atonement in the Old Testament, but it would take too long. Turn again to the eighth chapter of Leviticus. This book of Leviticus is one of the most valuable, because it relates all about the worship of God. I remember when I used to read this book I used to wonder what it was all about—a verse like this, for instance: "And he slew it; and Moses took of the blood of it, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot." I would say, "What does this mean? 'Put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear.'" What for? I think I have got a little light upon the subject since those days. "Blood upon the ear?" So that a man might hear the voice of God, of course. And so a man who has accepted the atonement can hear the word rightly. Blood upon the hand of a man, so that he who works for God can work rightly. Hundreds of men think they are working out their salvation, and they are only deceiving themselves. Bear in mind then that a man cannot do anything until he is sheltered behind the blood. When a man is in this position then he can go and be acceptable to God. Then blood upon the feet, so that a man can walk with God. You know when God came to Adam he hid himself. He hadn't the blood, and he couldn't walk with God. He put those people in question behind the blood, and he walked among them. When they came to the Red Sea the mighty waters opened, and God walked with them. In the wilderness they wanted water, and a rod struck the rock, and a crystal stream gushed forth. Why? Because they had had the substitution.

Many people say this is a very mysterious thing. We don't understand why God wants blood as an atonement. A man said to me: "I detest your religion; I hate your God." "Why," I asked. "I detest a God who demands blood," he replied. Now God is not an unjust God. He don't demand it without giving us a reason. He tells us in his Word that "the life of the flesh is the blood." Take the blood out of me and I am a dead man. Life has been forfeited, the law has been broken, and the penalty must come upon us, and this blood he gives us is life; it is the life of our flesh. Three times we see "blood" mentioned in the twenty-third and twenty-fourth verses, and the reason is that it is life. You and I have lost life by the fall, and what we want is to get back that life we lost. and we have it offered to us by the atonement of Christ. I have often thought I would far rather be out of Eden and have the blood, than be in Eden without it. Adam might have been there ten years, and Satan might have come and got him. But some can't see why God permitted Adam to fall. They can't discern the philosophy of it. They can't see why God ever permitted original sin to come into the world. The best answer to that was given by the Rev. Andrew Bonner, who said, "It was a great deal more wonderful that God should send his Son down to bear the brunt of it." Let us thank God we have a refuge, a substitute for the sin we are groaning under.

Turn to the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. You hear a good many people saying: "I don't believe in the Old Testament, I believe in the New." My friends, they are inseparable. A scarlet thread runs through the two and binds them together. We, like sheep have gone astray, but "He was wounded for our transgressions. He was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes are we healed." My friends, in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah we see it prophesied seven hundred years before it took place that he would die and be a substitute for you and me, that we might live. And now, my friends, let us accept him. It seems base ingratitude not to praise God every hour of our lives that he has given us such a Saviour. Let us take time. Many a young man thinks it noble to scoff at this; I think it the basest ingratitude. This atonement is the only hope of my eternal life. Take the doctrine of substitution out of my Bible, and I would not take it home with me to-night. Let us praise God that he loved us so as to give his only Son so that we might be saved.

I remember some years ago reading about a New York family. A young man during the gold fever went out to the Pacific, and left his wife and little boy. Just as soon as he was successful he was going to send money. A long time elapsed, but at last a letter came enclosing a draft, and telling his wife to come on. The woman took passage in one of the fine steamers of the Pacific line, full of hope and joy at the prospect of soon being united to her husband. They had not been out many days when a voice went ringing through the ship, "Fire! fire!" The pumps were set to work and the buckets were brought into operation, but the fire gained upon them. There was a powder magazine on board, and the captain ordered all the boats to be instantly lowered. He knew whenever the fire reached the powder they would all be lost. The people scrambled into the boats and the mother and boy were left on deck. As the last boat was being pushed off the woman begged to be taken in. The majority insisted the boat was too full, and wanted to push off, but one man put in a word for her, and they said they could allow one more on board, but no more. What did the mother do? Did she go on board and leave her son? No. She put her boy into that life-boat and told him if ever he lived to see his father to tell him, "I died to save you." And the boat pulled away from that ship and left the mother standing there. The vessel went on burning. Presently an explosion was heard, and all was buried in the ocean. Suppose that young man was here to-night. Suppose you spoke to him about the act of his mother, and he turned round and scoffed at it. "Why," you would say, "that ungrateful wretch don't deserve to live." And this is what you are doing. He laid down his life for you. Now will you speak contemptuously about him? Will you speak lightly of the blood laid down on Calvary for you? Let us rather all thank God we have such a Saviour.

Moody in Boston.

Bro. Moody is doing a glorious work in Boston. Average attendance about 6,000. Infidels believe and rejoice in the Lord. Thieves repent, restore their plunder to the rightful owners, and thereby glorify God. Drunkards are washed in the "blood of the Lamb," and their hitherto uncontrolable appetite for rum is gone, and they are in the Tabernacle praising God. The learned Doctors of Boston humbly act as helps in a work that is manifestly divine. It is just amazing to see with what holy boldness Bro. Moody hews the ideal Agags in pieces. He comes in the spirit and power of Elias, and mighty works do show forth themselves in him. The whole church of God should pray that Bro. Moody may be spared to visit all the cities of our land. God bless Bro. Moody and raise up thousands like him. S. C. Kimball.

Religious Intelligence.

—Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins held their last preaching service in the Chicago Tabernacle on Sabbath day, with the usual large attendance. The regular noonday prayer meeting has been kept up, with little flagging in interest, from 25 to 50 arising for prayer daily.

—A Gospel meeting is now held nearly every evening at 221 West Madison street, and the fruits of the efforts for the salvation of men there are already seen. Bro. Ronayne led the meeting on Thursday evening of last week, when the Bible vs. the lodge was the topic, a theme on which few are better able to give instruction.

—Nathan and Esther Frame, the Quaker evangelists, closed a successful series of religious meetings at Middletown, Ohio, on the 3d inst. They were to commence religious work in Circleville, Ohio, on the 14th inst.

—A revival work in Monmouth, Ill., has brought 43 members into the Second United Presbyterian church, Rev. W. T. Campbell, during the past six weeks. Twenty-four were by profession.

—A correspondent of the Advance writes from Terre Haute, Ind.: Rev. E. P. Hammond came here in response to an invitation from six of the leading orthodox churches of this city, and is now holding meetings day and night, preaching the gospel to thousands that seldom if ever go inside a church. The largest audience room in the city, the opera house, is densely packed every night, and hundreds go away unable to get in. A glorious work is begun, particularly among the children and youth, over three hundred having already found the Saviour and signed the covenant furnished by Mr. Hammond. The work is also spreading among the adults, and many are rejoicing in the love of Jesus.

—From a notice in the American Freeman we learn that a new United Brethren church, near Eagleville, Mo., of which Rev. T. B. France is pastor, was to be dedicated last Sabbath by Pres. E. B. Kephart, of Western College.

—The English revisers of the Old Testament have held forty-one sessions. They have carried their revision as far as Ezekiel xliv. 14. The English revisers of the New Testament have held sixty-five sessions. At their last meeting they reached the sixth chapter of Hebrews.

—During the Centennial Exhibition there were sold at the Bible pavilion, upon the exhibition ground, 3,334 Bibles, 8,489 New Testaments, and 13,332 portions of the Bible. In addition to these sales 25,000 copies were distributed of a little book containing a scripture verse in 164 languages.

—The official "Statistical Abstract," issued for British India, gives the following census of the religions of its population. The total population is about 190,000,000. Of the whole number, 139,000,000 are Hindoos, 41,000,000 Mohammedans, 3,000,000 Buddhists, 1,000,000 Sikhs, and 900,000 Christians.

—Rev. D. S. Kinney, Wesleyan publishing agent, is announced to dedicate a new Wesleyan church at Pittsfield, Pa., on the 22d. He has been visiting the churches in Michigan, assisting Bro. E. W. Bruce at Hickory Corners.

News of the Week.

—The Presidential Electoral Commission last Friday evening finished the consideration of the Louisiana case, and by a vote of eight to seven decided that the eight electoral votes of that State shall be cast for Hayes and Wheeler. This decision practically settles the whole question of the presidency in favor of Gov. Hayes, as it leaves almost no room for doubt that the Oregon case of disputed eligibility will be decided in favor of the Republican Elector.

—On Saturday morning the House instead of proceeding with the electoral count adjourned till Monday to give the Democrats time for caucus and fillibuster.

—Since the sudden overthrow of the Turkish Grand Vizier it is said that the Czar holds that war is needless, because the fall of Midhat Pasha marks a commencement of a state of anarchy which will eventually compel Europe to interfere. Gen. Ignatieff supports this view. The idea among the peace party is that the Powers answering the Russian circular might enable Russia to withdraw and await the result of the Turkish efforts at reform by publicly recognizing the sacrifices which she has made on behalf of Eastern Christians.

—On the other hand it is known, Russian preparations are yet going on with vigor. Six new army corps are being got ready for service and the gauge of Roumanian railways is being altered to the Russian standard to facilitate the movement of troops.

—A bold attempt was made to assassinate the Republican governor elect of Louisiana, Packard, last week by a person claiming to be a newspaper reporter. The agility and strength of Gov. Packard prevented a steady aim, and the bullet only wounded him in the knee. The would-be murderer would have been shot through but for the interference of his intended victim, so that he escaped with a rather severe wound from the pistol of a gentleman in the office.

Nothing can be more absurd than the idea that "looking guilty" proves guilt. An honest man charged with crime is much more likely to blush at the accusation than the real offender, who is generally prepared for such an event, and has his face "ready made." The very thought of being suspected of anything criminal will bring the blood into an innocent man's cheek nine times out of ten.

C. W. Loney, Fennimore, Wis., writes: "I read Morgan's book exposing the three first degrees in Masonry in the fall of 1827, from which time to the present I have been more or less all the time investigating Masonry and other secret orders, and from such investigations and its practical workings under my own observation I am well convinced that it belongs to the works of Satan."

There never was such a really good, substantial, satisfactory, and rapid selling Sewing Machine offered so low as the "New Family Shuttle," at $30. TRACT NO. 25.

The American Party,

ITS OBJECT, ORGANIZATION, PLATFORM AND CANDIDATES.

Some of the ablest men in the nation have pronounced our platform the best that has been presented to the American people for the past fifty years Our Candidates are men of acknowledged ability and honesty, and if every voter in the United States could read this our "POLITICAL TRACT," our Candidates could undonbtedly be elected. One friend pledges a dollar for every other dollar coutributed and this 8 page tract costs but $1.00 per 100, or $8.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 26.

FREEMASONRY A RELIGION.

This Tract is made up of quotations from Standard Masonic Authors and nothing could more clearly demonstrate the fact that Freemasonry claims to be a Christless and therefore Anti-christian religion.

An 8 page Tract, $1 00 per 100. $8 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 27.

Duty and Ability to Know the Character of Freemasonry.

Thousands seem to consider it a virtue to know nothing about the character of Secret Societies. This is shown to be a great error if not a crime and our duty to use the knowledge within our reach, especially when of such vital importance, is clearly enforced.

A 4 Page Tract, 50 cents per 100. $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

GERMAN CYNOSUCE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason.

By Rev. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, Worchester, Mass

This is our first German Tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. A 4 page tract, Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

FREE TRACTS.

A Tract Fund for the Free Distribution of Tracts

HAS BEEN SECURED AND SHOULD NEVER BE EXHAUSTED. A friend has pledged this fund a dollar for every other dollar received, so EVERY NEW SUBSCRIPTION TO THE TRACT FUND COUNTS DOUBLE, and thus $10.00 pays for 20,000 pages of tracts.

The distribution of these tracts has already saved hundreds of young men from the lodge, but there is a great lack of funds to supply the constantly increasing demand for Free Tracts.

During the year ending July 1st, 1875 a little less than 150.000 pages of Cynosure Tracts were gratuitously sent out, mostly in very small lots. The present demand is fully 100.000 pages per month. but funds are lacking to meet it.

Many of our most earnest workers in this cause of God are poor men, who would be glad to circulate thousands of pages of Antimasonic literature if they could have them free.

SHALL WE NOT HAVE AN INEXHAUSTIBLE TRACT FUND

"THE ANTI-MASONS SCRAP BOOK."

Contains 24 Cynosure Tracts, bound together and is just the thing to select from. Price 20cents. See advertisement page 15.

Enoch Honeywell Esq., pays for an unlimited number of his tract addressed "TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA." It is an excelent tract, bearing the printed endorsement of Executive Committee of the National Christian Association. He has furnished the public over 150.000 pages of these tracts during the past year.

Mount Vernon.

We enjoyed the privilege of visiting Mt. Vernon on the first day of last November. The sky was cloudless, the air mild and exhilarating, the scenery enchanting. The estate is now well cared for.

Its genial Superintendent, Col. J. McH. Hollingsworth, at our request sends us the following extract, cut from the Washington Chronicle, and writes, under date of Jan. 9, 1877: "We are at present frozen up, and have been since the river closed, in December, but we are still busy getting ice for our summer visitors."

"To study the character of Washington one must see the house he lived in, the grounds he embellished, the trees he planted, the things he touched and used when he was a man, fashioned like ourselves —ate, drank, and slept, and was "at home" to his friends. Elsewhere we see Washington the hero and statesman, but at Mt. Vernon alone the more quiet, but equally great qualities of domestic life shine forth, making glad those about him, and teaching others how to live and how to die. No one can spend an hour there without a higher appreciation of his character. The taste with which the grounds are laid out, and the general appointments of the place, all betoken a superior mind.

These reflections were suggested by a visit that I made a day or two ago to this place. Many interesting statements and facts can be learned there that I have not seen published. It is said that Mrs. Washington, after the death of her husband, closed up their room and occupied the one immediately above, that she might more plainly see the tomb where her beloved was sleeping, and where she joined him two years later.

On the eastern side of the lawn, back of the kitchen, is the magnolia planted by Washington a year or so before his death. It begins to show the marks of age.

"It was among the ruins of Rome that Gibbon conceived the idea of the mighty work that immortalized him.

"Let us study the character of Washington under the shadow of his tomb, and we will grow up wiser and better men and women."

THE TITLE.

Mt. Vernon was originally a 5,000 acre grant assigned to John Washington, the great-grandfather of George, who, together with Nicholas Spencer, patented it from Lord Culpeper in 1670. It descended from him to his son Lawrence, who in turn left it to his son Augustine, the father of George. It was left by him to Lawrence, and was called in his will "The Hunting Creek Estate." Lawrence in 1743 built the main building and gave it its present name, in honor of Admiral Vernon, with whom he had served in the battle of Carthagena in 1741. At his death he left it to his infant daughter, providing that in the event of her death it should go to his brother George. By Washington's will it went to his wife during her life, and afterwards to his nephew, Judge Bushrod Washington, a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. He was appointed by President Adams. This gentleman died in 1829, aged 70, and left the place to his nephew, John Augustine, who dying in 1832 left the estate to his widow, Mrs. Jane, by whom it was left to her son, John Augustine Washington, Esq., by whom in 1837 it was sold to the Mt. Vernon Ladies' Association of the Union, for $200,000, Congress having previously refused to purchase the place.

Publishers Department.

Six clubs of ten or more and three of five or more were received last week.

Three hundred and twenty-one subscriptions expire during the month of March. We want one hundred persons from this number to take time by the forelock during these pleasant February days and work for clubs of new subscribers; thus the ball will be kept rolling; the list will continue to approach TEN THOUSAND SUBSCRIBERS and good will be done. Who will volunteer? How many clubs of ten may we report next week? Next month?

Philip Bacon, Weatogue, Conn., sends nineteen subscriptions, eight for a year, two for six months, and nine for three months, and writes: "The Lord is with me, helping me get subscribers. Praise his holy name."

Gardner Gale, Volo, Lake county, Ill., sends nine subscriptions for a year, and three for six months.

Rev. R. J. Thompson, Halsey, Oregon, sends eleven subscriptions for a year. Wm. Hallowell, Lanark, Carroll county, Ill., sends a club of ten for a year.

Moses Pettengill, Peoria, Illinois, writes: "I hand you enclosed a sixteen dollar check on New York which is the proceeds of an old note of more than twenty-five years' standing. I thought I would reinvest it in sending the Christian Cynosure to the following and other names to be forwarded hereafter, so that it might bring forth more and earlier fruit than it has heretofore done."

Chas. F. A. Gantzckow, Hartsvile, Bartholomew county, Ind., sends a club of ten subscriptions for a year.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard, sends a club of nine subscriptions for a year. Abner Bronson, West Branch, Ia., sends a club of five. J. W. Field, Delavan, Walworth county, Wis., sends a club of three for a year and four for six months. S. Alexander, Leetonia, O., writes: "I am endeavoring to get more subscribers. It is slow work, but I hope things will change for the better." We understand a club of ten is nearly full at Crown Point, Ind. Phil. Beck, Woodland, Yolo county, Cal., is working for a club of ten. R. Ames, Decatur, Mich., is trying to get subscribers. Richard Platt, Lockport, Ill., writes: "If I live and am well enough to go around I want to try to get you some subscribers for your paper."

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS.

Which may be done with one-fourth the usual expense, by using our

PATENT SLATE PAINT

(Fifteen Years Established.)

MIXED READY FOR USE.

Fire-proof, Water-proof, Durable, Economical and Ornamental.

A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by application of this slate be made to last from 20 to 25 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated, looking much better and lasting longer than new shingles without the slate, for

One-third the Cost of Re-shingling.

The expense of slating new shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them. The paint is FIRE-PROOF against sparks or flying embers, as may be easily tested by any one.

IT STOPS EVERY LEAK.

and for tin or iron has no equal, as it expands by heat, contracts by cold, and NEVER CRACKS nor scales. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water-tight at a small expense, and preserved for many years.

This Slate Paint is

EXTREMELY CHEAP.

Two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of shingle roof, while on tin, iron, felt, matched boards, or any smooth surface, from two quarts to one gallon are required to 100 square feet of surface and although the paint has a heavy body it is easily applied with a brush.

No Tar is used in this Composition,

therefore, it neither cracks in Winter, nor runs in Summer.

On decayed shingles, it fills up the holes and pores, and gives a new substantial roof that will last for years. CURLED OR WARPED shingles it brings to their places, and keeps them there. It fills up all holes in felt roofs, stops the leaks—and although a slow dryer, rain does not affect it a few hours after applying. As nearly all paints that are black contain TAR, be sure you obtain our genuine article, which (for shingle roofs) is

CHOCOLATE COLOR,

when first applied, changing in about a month to a uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes SLATE. On

TIN ROOFS

our red color is usually preferred, as one coat is equal to five of any ordinary paint. For

BRICK WALLS.

Our BRIGHT RED is the only reliable Slate Paint ever introduced that will effectually prevent dampness from penetrating and discoloring the plaster.

These paints are also largely used on out-houses and fences, or as a priming coat on fine buildings.

Our only colors are CHOCOLATE, RED, BRIGHT RED, and ORANGE.

Notices.

All friends in Eastern States desiring a series of public Masonic expositions will please address me at once at Cynosure office as I am now ready to make my Eastern trip and would like to start without unnecessary delay. Let arrangements be made for three expositions in each town if possible and when writing give the town, county and state in a legible manner. To avoid delay let me say that $20 in each place will be a sufficient remuneration for all expenses. Michigan and Ohio can be visited either before or after my return. I want to hear right away from Conn., N. J., N. Y., Mass. and N. H.

E. RONAYNE.

TOPEKA, Kansas.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Please say to all your readers in the West, especially in Kansas, that by sending their names and post office addresses to me they will have sent them, gratis, documents bearing relation to the anti-secrecy cause and the means of promoting it in the West, of great interest to all lovers of truth.

Yours, C. A. EXTON.

The State Convention of the Iowa Christian Association will be held at Oskaloosa, April 24th next, beginning at 7 P. M. and continuing two days. Friends, be getting ready. A formal call will appear soon.

The above tabulated statement shows how the Publishing House fund stood, and the contributions from each State, Jan. 1, 1877. The Western States, particularly Illinois, Ohio, Indiana and Iowa, have done liberally, and others have done handsomely. The New England States have not as yet shown their accustomed liberality in contributions to this work, but we hope to hear from the many friends of our cause in that section soon. Comparatively little work has been done in the East, which is the probable cause of this seeming want of interest, and the deficiency in contributions. Let no one, East or West, say, "There are yet four months, and then cometh the harvest," but let each contribute according to his means, and pray without ceasing for the consummation of the work in righteousness.

Topics of the Time.

The series of fifty-two lectures on the Bible begun in the great Moody Tabernacle here on Sabbath last by Rev. Dr. Gibson, that gentleman himself announced, before beginning his discourse, would be superceded by the return of Major Whittle from Dubuque, who would continue the Gospel meetings every evening in Farwell Hall and every Sabbath in the Tabernacle. The meetings in Dubuque were reported last week as of unusual promise and will no doubt be continued after the close of Major Whittle's two weeks' work. The Presbyterian and other pastors of Chicago have shown by vote their desire for a continuance of the central effort here; hence the recall of Mr. Whittle, which is an expression of the high confidence in his ability and success as an evangelist.
